EXTENSION OF POWER TO DEVALUE THE DOLLAR

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, 55 members of the Economists National Committee on Monetary Policy have recommended the termination of the President's power to devalue the dollar. I ask that their brief statement and the appended signatures be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement and signatures were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ECONOMISTS' NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON MONETARY POLICY

FIFTY-FIVE MEMBERS RECOMMEND TERMINATION OF PRESIDENT'S POWER TO DEVALUE THE DOLLAR

The Gold Reserve Act of January 30, 1934, gave the President the power to reduce the gold content of the dollar by not less than 40 percent, and not more than 50 percent, and, thereafter, at his discretion, to change the weight of the dollar within the specified limits. This provision was to be in effect for 2 years, with the possibility of its extension for an additional year by proclamation by the President should he think such extension desirable.

The President extended this provision for the additional year as authorized in the Gold Reserve Act. Shortly before that year elapsed Congress, at the request of the administration, further extended the provision to June 30, 1939. On January 19, 1939, the President again requested the extension until January 15, 1941, of his present power to devalue the dollar.

There are no adequate reasons for further extension of the President's power to change the gold content of the dollar. Since the devaluation of the dollar in January 1934 was close to the minimum specified in the Gold Reserve Act, any further alteration in the weight of the dollar would necessarily be in a downward direction. Further devaluation would be opposed to the best interests of the country and should not be permitted. Continuance of the President's authority to devalue the dollar still further implies that there are sound reasons for a better or stronger currency pursuing a weaker one in its downward course whereas no such sound reasons exist.

In reply to the frequently heard argument that depreciating foreign currencies might suggest the desirability of continuing the power of the President to lower the gold content of the dollar, we wish to call attention to the fact that during the period from 1919 to 1923, when the pound was unstable, when the French and Belgian francs and the Italian lira were falling rapidly in value, and when the German mark was plunging toward a trillionth of its former value, the dollar remained firmly anchored to gold at an unchanged weight. This firmness of the dollar was both a source of great strength to this country and a stabilizing factor in the world economy. If any adequate reason for devaluing the dollar should arise in the near future, a situation which is difficult to envision considering our huge supply of gold, it should be done by act of Congress, as provided by the Constitution, and not by an administrative order of the President.

The Economists' National Committee on Monetary Policy has repeatedly taken a stand against any further devaluation of the dollar. The undersigned members of the committee, in reaffirming their conviction that further devaluation is opposed to the best interests of the country, hereby recommend to the Congress that it rescind immediately its delegation to the President of its constitutional power to change the gold content of the dollar.

PEACE NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, last week end the President of the United States wrote letters to President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, and President John L. Lewis, of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. In these letters the President urges the appointment immediately of committees to negotiate peace between the two organizations.

Almost at the same time that the President sent his letters I, as chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, set the dates for hearings on amendments to the Labor Relations Act. The Committee on Education and Labor has before it now amendments introduced by Senators LOGAN, BURKE, HOLMAN, and WALSH. All of the amendments were to be considered at the same time in these hearings. The Walsh amendments were in the main sponsored by the American Federation of Labor. Partisans to the labor-union controversy have taken sides on these amendments.

I am sure that I bespeak the sentiments of the entire Education and Labor Committee and, I trust, of the Senate, when I say that it is the earnest wish of all that the movement initiated by our President may prove successful. The negotiations would undoubtedly be carried on at the same time as our hearings. This I am sure would be deemed unfortunate by all. Therefore, I should like to give notice here where all concerned may know about it that I shall postpone the hearings until some future date.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letters of the President of the United States to President Green and President Lewis be inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 23, 1939.

Mr. WILLIAM GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GREEN: In the development of this great Nation the continued results of good will, cooperation, and mutual helpfulness among the people have been demonstrated continuously. The need of the exercise of these qualities is as urgent now as at any time in American history, particularly as they apply to the welfare of men and women who work. Labor faces a challenge in finding itself divided into opposing camps, but I am sure that labor can and will meet this challenge with understanding and good will.

The American people sincerely hope that a constructive negotiated peace with honor may come about between the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations within the early months of the new year. The Secretary of Labor tells me that after careful investigation and prolonged conversations with responsible leaders in both groups there appear to be no insurmountable obstacles to peace, and that, in fact, there is a real and honorable desire for unification of the labor movement among all parties concerned. The desire of the general membership of both organizations for peace and cooperation with each other is demonstrated by the mass of messages which have come to me, to the Secretary, and to Daniel Tobin as the result of simple public statements in favor of peace.

The opportunities for a united and vital labor movement to make a contribution to American life of help to the present and future generations were never better. The National Manufacturers' Association recently has made a statement expressive of a better understanding of the problems of labor relationships and of their willingness to work with labor in a realistic effort to improve their mutual relations and to better general working conditions. The complicated economic and social problems of today require the cooperation of responsible groups of citizens of all walks of life, and the effectiveness of labor in this type of council can only be realized by its fundamental unity of purpose and program.

I do not need to remind you of the great variety of opportunities to be of service which will come to a united labor movement. Many of your members have spoken to me of these opportunities, and many of them have also pointed out to me the hazards and dangers to which the labor movement is subject, both internally and from without, if it cannot find a pattern of unity.

Therefore, first, because it is right; second, because the responsible officers from both groups seem to me to be ready and capable of making a negotiated and just peace; third, because your membership ardently desire peace and unity for the better ordering of their responsible life in the trade-unions and in their communities; and fourth, because the Government of the United States and the people of America believe it to be a wise and almost necessary step for the further development of the cooperation between free men in a democratic society such as ours, I am writing to ask you to appoint a committee to represent your organization and to negotiate the terms of peace between the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations. Whatever assistance we in the Government can give you in this matter will be gladly given.

I wish to reiterate the sincerity of my belief in labor's capacity to end this breach and my faith in the intention of the wage earners of America to play their part along with all other groups in our community in overcoming our mutual problems and bringing about the good American democratic life.

I am sure that these results can be achieved if the parties come together with open minds and a clear intention to effect genuine peace and harmony in the labor movement.

It is with confidence that I write you, dear Bill, as a man of good will, of experience, and high principles. I trust I shall very shortly receive a reply, giving me the names of the members of the committee which you will appoint.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

FEBRUARY 23, 1939.

Mr. JOHN L. LEWIS,
President, Congress of Industrial Organizations,
1106 Connecticut Avenue, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LEWIS: In the development of this great Nation the continued results of good will, cooperation, and mutual helpfulness among the people have been demonstrated continuously. The need of the exercise of these qualities is as urgent now as at any time in American history, particularly as they apply to the welfare of men and women who work. In addressing this letter to you, my dear John, I have great satisfaction in knowing that I am dealing with a man whom I respect, a man of honor, intelligence, and good will. I trust I shall very shortly receive a reply giving me the names of the members of the committee which you will appoint.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

AGRICULTURAL PROBLEMS

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter from a farmer constituent of mine, together with my reply.

There being no objection, the letter and reply were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KNOBNOTER, Mo., February 15, 1939.

HON. HARRY TRUMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Please find enclosed newspaper clippings which are appearing daily in regards to the farm situation. These express the farmer's views exactly. The present plan will not work, and the money that is being spent does no real good, as the men that are getting this help generally have some other source of income. I know the situation in two counties, Pettis and Johnson, and there is not as many as one-fifth that have been able to qualify.

Now, Mr. TRUMAN, a great many of our best farmers have lost or are about to lose their farms, which represents their life's savings. These good farms which the loan companies have accumulated are reselling to the Government, and they in turn are spending large sums on them and then putting men on them that never farmed in their lives. Would it not be better to help save the farms for the men who have been on them for years?

Mr. Wallace's plan simply will not work, as the only ones it does help is the field men and farm agents. Now the eyes of the farmers are on Congress this year to see if they can bring out some plan that would really help. The Frazier-Lemke refinancing bill and cost of production would save these homes and put money in our pockets. I operate a large farm, and I am worse off the more I try to do. I have a $40,000 investment here and have had to resort to the Frazier-Lemke moratorium to try and save my home. What money the average farmer draws from the Government is a mere drop in the bucket according to his expenses and debts.

We know this situation well and speak for a large majority of farmers, as we campaigned this county of Pettis last summer and talked to many farmers.

The farmer of today is worse off than he ever has been, and if what they have tried to do for the past 6 years had not failed the farmers would not be in this condition.

Mr. TRUMAN, we hope you will help get the Frazier-Lemke refinancing and cost-of-production bill through.

Sincerely,

JOE E. THOMPSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 21, 1939.

Mr. JOE E. THOMPSON,
Knobnoter, Mo.

MY DEAR MR. THOMPSON: Appreciated very highly your letter of the 15th regarding the farm situation.

I have been giving the farm problem a lot of serious consideration. It is perfectly apparent that the present plan is not working satisfactorily and that some other means of meeting the farm problem is going to have to be found. I have been studying the cost-of-production bill, and the only difficulty that I see is how to arrive at the matter of the cost of production.

A real farmer on a good piece of land, with weather conditions right, can produce corn, oats, wheat, and hay on one basis, which is the cost of production to him, and the poor farmer on poor land, with weather conditions against him, will have an entirely different cost. Now, if you can show me how to arrive at cost of production so that it will be fair to every farmer in the United States—and there are seven or eight million farms being operated in the country—I will be most happy to go along with you on the proposition.

Farming is just like any other business. The man on one side of the road can do it successfully because he knows how, uses brains, and works at it. The man on the other side of the road, with exactly the same sort of land and the same sort of a set-up, will spend his time in a car or at the country store discussing public affairs and wonder why he is not successful.

I am a farmer myself, and I think I know something about these conditions. I want to find something that will work, and I am not entirely satisfied that the so-called cost-of-production plan is a workable one. If you are a practical farmer—and I judge that you are—maybe you can tell me how to arrive at the solution to that problem.

Hoover's Farm Board was a failure. The present cotton plan is a failure. We are not right sure yet whether the wheat plan is a failure or not, because it hasn't had a chance yet to operate, but I haven't a great deal of faith in it.

I am in constant correspondence with practical farmers all over the State, trying honestly and earnestly to find a plan that will work in Missouri on the farm and not one for ballyhoo purposes on the floor of the Congress.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is concluded. The consideration of bills on the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

The first business on the calendar was the bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States in claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MIKE CHETKOVICH

The bill (S. 1093) for the relief of Mike Chetkovich was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. Yes. Several objections have been made heretofore by other Senators, not by myself, and I assumed that the objections still persisted.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senators who objected have now withdrawn their objections, so far as I am aware.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I previously objected to the bill. I am now prepared to let it pass, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mike Chetkovich the sum of $10,000. Such sum was the face amount of a certificate of war-risk insurance (No. T-3229247) issued to the said Mike Chetkovich following his induction into the military service on July 2, 1918. Such insurance was in effect when he became totally and permanently disabled as the result of an operation performed on or about August 12, 1918, at the Army base hospital at Camp Lewis, Wash.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 58) providing that a calendar day's notice shall suffice in connection with suspension of a rule was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 74) providing for a Committee on Civil Aviation was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

RELIEF OF DISBURSING OFFICERS, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 884) for the relief of disbursing officers and other officers and employees of the United States for disallowances and charges on account of airplane travel, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers of the United States, to remove charges raised against officers and employees of the United States, and to refund to such officers and employees upon application amounts collected from them, representing the excess in cost of airplane transportation used by such officers and employees on official business prior to December 10, 1935, as compared with the cost by rail: Provided, That action as herein provided shall be taken only when the head of the department or establishment shall certify that the use of airplane transportation was necessary in the interest of the United States: Provided further, That in cases of refunds there shall be charged the appropriations to which the collections were credited, and the amounts found due certified for payment in the usual manner.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that I can add little to what has been said by the Department.

The Interior Department prepared the bill and sent it here, and I introduced it. It seems that during 1935, and probably during 1936 and 1937, some officials used airplanes for transportation; and under the law as construed by the Comptroller General they had no right to do so. Then, however, Congress passed a law authorizing them so to travel, and to compensate them. As I understand, this bill is simply to give the Department of the Interior authority to approve the claims of those who have used such transportation and could not have their accounts paid.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 828) to permit the President to acquire and convert, as well as to construct, certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. KING. So should I.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the bill was reported by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE].

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 829) to authorize alterations and repairs to certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire why this bill, or the provision for the payment of $5,000,000, is not included in the naval appropriation bill. Instead of having separate bills dealing with appropriations for the Navy, it seems to me that bills dealing with naval vessels and appropriations ought to be included in the naval bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the bill go over?

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 685) to create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. KING. I do not think we can take it up under the unanimous-consent order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why not?

Mr. KING. There will be some discussion and some amendments. I have no objection to its being taken up.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, at the proper time I intend to move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Commerce with instructions to hold hearings on it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry? I thought we were considering Calendar No. 77, Senate bill 1045. If that bill follows, I should like to have an explanation of it. I am not now referring to the stream-pollution bill. According to the calendar, Senate bill 1045 comes ahead of the stream-pollution bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There seems to be some confusion. One of the clerks at the desk seems to think the bill referred to by the Senator from Oregon went over, and the other thinks it was inadvertently passed over. The clerk will state the title of the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1045) to give effect to the International Agreement for the Regulation of Whaling, signed at London June 8, 1937, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not know that I have any objection to the bill, but I should like to have an explanation of it from the able Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair remembers now that the bill went over because an explanation was asked for and was not given at the time. If the Senator wishes to have the action reconsidered, very well.

Mr. McNARY. I am not asking for a reconsideration. I do not think the bill was called the first time the clerk referred to the calendar by that number.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair believes the bill was called, because the Chair asked who was the author of the bill and who reported it, and the clerk responded that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] reported the bill. Some Senator asked to have it go over, and it went over.

Mr. McNARY. If it has gone over, I do not wish to recall it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been passed over. Senate bill 685 has now been reached on the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the suggestion that Senators want to discuss that bill, I shall not press it now. At a very early date I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the bill; but I do not wish to detain the Senate now on the call of the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 439) to confer the Distinguished Service Medal on Col. Richard C. Patterson was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 45) to amend the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON TAXATION OF GOVERNMENTAL SECURITIES AND SALARIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 86) extending the time for filing of a report pursuant to Senate Resolution 303, Seventy-fifth Congress, a resolution establishing a Special Committee on Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 303, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, agreed to June 16, 1938, is hereby continued in full force and effect until June 1, 1939, and the time for making the report required by such resolution is hereby extended to such date.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the resolution from the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the resolution proposes to extend the life of a special committee appointed last June to examine into the question of taxation of Federal and State salaries and the taxation of Federal and State bonds. We reported to the Finance Committee on the salary question last Tuesday, but we were unable to complete our report on the matter of taxation of State bonds. The extension of the life of the special committee will not involve the appropriation of any additional money. We have expended but $315 out of our appropriation of $5,000. I know that the extension is satisfactory to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is the ranking Republican on the committee. I trust the resolution will be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is the national-defense bill, and I suggest that it be passed over until the consideration of other measures on the calendar shall have been concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CHARLES E. NAGHEL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 539) for the relief of Charles E. Naghel, special disbursing agent, Department of the Interior, and Kammeyer & Medack, contractors, from disallowance of charges for additional work under a construction contract, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the amount of $61.15 in the accounts of Charles E. Naghel, former special disbursing agent of the Department of the Interior, at Juneau, Alaska, and to remove charges raised against such officer and against the contractor, Kammeyer & Medack, in that amount, representing a part of the payment made May 8, 1933, on voucher No. 6800, for extra services performed and material furnished in connection with contract No. 1 Ind-5796, dated June 10, 1932, for the construction of an Indian Service hospital at Unalaska, Alaska.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have some objection to this bill, and I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will not let it go over?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this bill has to do with a building in Alaska. The Department let a contract for a building for the Indian Service in Alaska. After the contract had been let, some additional material was required, which was not covered by the contract, in the amount of $61.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 863) to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1476) to authorize an appropriation to pay non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, but who have been found entitled to awards under said act as supplemented by the act of May 31, 1933, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like to have an explanation of the bill. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

J. G. MAYFIELD

The bill (S. 754) for the relief of J. G. Mayfield was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of sections 15 to 20, both inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and the same is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and consider, if filed within 6 months after the enactment of this act, the claim of James George Mayfield, of Springfield, Ill., for disability alleged to have been caused by injuries sustained by him on August 3, 1937, while in the performance of his duties in the employment of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, Treasury Department.

FRED HARVEY TRANSPORTATION DEPARTMENT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 10) for the relief of the Fred Harvey Transportation Department, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Fred Harvey Transportation Department the sum of $125 in full satisfaction of the claim of the Fred Harvey Transportation Department against the United States, arising out of the destruction of a certain mule called Pima, leased to the National Park Service, under contract No. 1-5P-574, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSCOE C. PRESCOTT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 911) for the relief of Roscoe C. Prescott, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$404.13" and insert in lieu thereof "$300.59; to Howard Joslyn, the sum of $155.50; to Arthur E. Tuttle, the sum of $109.10; and to Robert J. Toulouse, the sum of $466.29", and on line 10, before the word "personal", to strike out the word "his" and insert the word "their", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Roscoe C. Prescott the sum of $300.59; to Howard Joslyn, the sum of $155.50; to Arthur E. Tuttle, the sum of $109.10; and to Robert J. Toulouse, the sum of $466.29, in full settlement of all claims against the United States Government for loss of their personal effects in a fire at the Civilian Conservation Corps camp at Warren, N. H., on December 31, 1933: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Roscoe C. Prescott, Howard Joslyn, Arthur E. Tuttle, and Robert J. Toulouse."

ALEX ST. LOUIS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1174) for the relief of Alex St. Louis, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$150" and to insert in lieu thereof "$25"; on line 7, after the word "for", to insert "time lost by reason of"; on line 8, before the word "horse", to strike out "a" and insert "his"; on line 10, after the word "Vermont", to insert the words "and to Dr. J. P. Lake, of Manchester Depot, Vt., the sum of $10, in full settlement of his claim against the United States for professional services rendered as a result of said injuries: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alex St. Louis, of Windham, Vt., the sum of $25, in full settlement of all claims against the Government for time lost by reason of injuries to his horse which was struck by a Forest Service truck on December 9, 1934, at Camp Peru, Vt., and to Dr. J. P. Lake, of Manchester Depot, Vt., the sum of $10, in full settlement of his claim against the United States for professional services rendered as a result of said injuries: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Alex St. Louis and Dr. J. P. Lake."

HUBERT H. CLARK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 11) for the relief of Hubert H. Clark, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$195.95" and to insert "$169.96, and to Dr. W. C. Copeland the sum of $353.62"; on line 7, before the word "claim", to strike out "his" and insert "their", and to insert a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Hubert H. Clark the sum of $169.96, and to Dr. W. C. Copeland the sum of $353.62, in full settlement of their claim against the United States arising out of the destruction of certain personal property as the result of a fire at the Petrified Forest National Monument on January 22, 1937: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. HARRY F. BAKER

The bill (S. 749) for the relief of Harry F. Baker was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like to have an explanation of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. KING. It seems to provide for a double payment. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN B. DOW

The bill (S. 1253) for the relief of John B. Dow was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John B. Dow, of Cookeville, Tenn., the sum of $354.65, in full satisfaction of his claims for fees for services rendered by him as United States commissioner during the period from November 1, 1937, to March 22, 1938, such fees having been disallowed by reason of the fact that his appointment as such commissioner expired on November 1, 1937, and he was not reappointed until March 23, 1938: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

COHEN, GOLDMAN & CO., INC.

The bill (S. 1374) for the relief of Cohen, Goldman & Co., Inc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I introduced the bill pro forma. A similar bill passed the Senate last year, and came into my hands as chairman of the Committee on Claims. The bill was favorably reported by the committee; but if the member of the committee making the report is not prepared to explain it, I shall ask that it go over until he can be prepared.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BANKING TRANSACTIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 794) relating to banking, banks, and trust companies in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where a check or other instrument payable on demand at any bank or trust company doing business in the District of Columbia is presented for payment more than 1 year from its date, such bank or trust company may, unless expressly instructed by the drawer or maker to pay the same, refuse payment thereof, and no liability shall thereby be incurred to the drawer or maker for dishonoring the instrument by nonpayment.

Sec. 2. Notice to any bank or trust company doing business in the District of Columbia of an adverse claim to a deposit standing on its books to the credit of any person shall not be effectual to cause said bank or trust company to recognize said adverse claimant unless said adverse claimant shall also either (1) procure a restraining order, injunction, or other appropriate process against said bank or trust company from a court of competent jurisdiction in a cause therein instituted by him wherein the person to whose credit the deposit stands is made a party and served with summons; or (2) execute to such bank or trust company, in form and with sureties acceptable to it, a bond indemnifying said bank or trust company from any and all liability, loss, damage, costs, and expenses, for and on account of the payment of such adverse claim or the dishonor of the check or other order of the person to whose credit the deposit stands on the books of said bank or trust company: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any instance where the person to whose credit the deposit stands is a fiduciary for such adverse claimant, and the facts constituting such relationship, together with the facts showing reasonable cause of belief on the part of the said claimant that the said fiduciary is about to misappropriate said deposit, are made to appear by the affidavit of such claimant.

Sec. 3. (a) No bank or trust company doing business in the District of Columbia, which has paid and charged to the account of a depositor any money on a forged, altered, or raised check issued in the name of said depositor shall be liable to said depositor for the amount paid thereon unless either (1) within 1 year after notice to said depositor that the vouchers representing payments charged to the account of said depositor for the period during which such payment was made are ready for delivery, or (2), in case no such notice has been given, within 6 months after the return to said depositor of the voucher representing such payment, said depositor shall notify the bank or trust company that the check so paid is forged, altered, or raised.

(b) The notice referred to in subsection (a) may be given by mail to said depositor at his last-known address with postage prepaid.

(c) This section shall not be construed to relieve a depositor from due diligence in the examination of returned vouchers or in otherwise discovering that a check has been forged, altered, or raised, or in notifying the bank or trust company of his actual discovery of a forgery or alteration.

(d) When used in this section the word "check" shall also include drafts, notes, acceptances, or other negotiable instruments payable at a bank or trust company, and the word "forged" shall also include an unauthorized signature by an agent or officer of a depositor.

(e) The provisions of this section shall not be held to apply to the forgery of an endorsement.

Sec. 4. Whenever a deposit, which is in form in trust for another, shall be made by any person in any bank or trust company doing business in the District of Columbia, and no other or further notice of the existence and terms of a legal and valid trust shall have been given in writing to the bank or trust company, such deposit, or any part thereof, together with the dividends, or interest thereon, may, in the event of the death of the trustee, be paid to the person for whom such deposit was made or to his legal representative.

Sec. 5. It shall be unlawful for any notary public who is a stockholder, director, officer, or employee of a bank, trust company, or other corporation to take the acknowledgment of any party to any written instrument executed to or by such corporation or to administer an oath to any other stockholder, director, officer, employee, or agent of such corporation, or to protest for nonacceptance or nonpayment drafts, checks, notes, acceptances, or other negotiable instruments which may be owned or held for collection by such corporation: Provided, That it shall be unlawful for any notary public to take the acknowledgment of an instrument executed by or to a bank or corporation of which he is a stockholder, director, officer, or employee, where such notary is a party to such instrument, either individually or as a representative of such corporation, or to protest any negotiable instrument owned or held for collection by such corporation, where such notary is individually a party to such instrument: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any notary public to take the oath of an officer or director of any bank or trust company of which he is an officer, or to take an oath of any person verifying a report of such bank or trust company to the Comptroller of the Currency.

Sec. 6. No bank or trust company doing business in the District of Columbia shall be liable to a depositor because of the nonpayment through mistake or error and without malice of a check, draft, note, acceptance, or other negotiable instrument, payable at any bank or trust company, which should have been paid unless the depositor shall allege and prove actual damage by reason of such nonpayment and in such event the liability shall not exceed the amount of damage so proved.

Sec. 7. Any bank or trust company doing business in the District of Columbia receiving for collection or deposit any check, draft, note, acceptance, or other negotiable instrument drawn upon or payable at any other bank, located outside the District of Columbia, may forward such instrument for collection directly to the bank on which it is drawn or at which it is made payable, and such method of forwarding direct to the payer shall be deemed due diligence, and the failure of such payor bank, because of its insolvency or other default, to account for the proceeds thereof shall not render the forwarding bank liable therefor: Provided, however, That such forwarding bank shall have used due diligence in other respects in connection with the collection of such instrument.

Sec. 8. (a) Section 456 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, as amended (D. C. Code, title 24, sec. 132), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The garnishee, in any case in which the property or credits attached or sought to be attached is held by him in the name of or for the account of another than the defendant, shall retain such property or credits during the period pending determination by the court of the propriety of the attachment or the rightful owner of such property or credits, and, during such period, shall incur no liability whatsoever for such retention."

(b) Section 1090 of such act, as amended (D. C. Code, title 24, sec. 238), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The garnishee, in any case in which the property or credits attached or sought to be attached is held by him in the name of or for the account of another than the defendant, shall retain such property or credits during the period pending determination by the court of the propriety of the attachment or the rightful owner of such property or credits, and, during such period, shall incur no liability whatsoever for such retention."

Mr. McNARY subsequently said: Mr. President, what action was taken as to Senate bill 794, Calendar No. 98?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No objection was made, and the bill was passed.

Mr. McNARY. I was engaged at the time, and I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], who reported the bill, is not present. It is a bill which was unanimously approved by the committee, and was recommended by the District Commissioners and by the banking organizations of the District. If that is not sufficient explanation, it may go over.

Mr. McNARY. I will not ask for a reconsideration, but I may do so tomorrow.

Mr. KING. There will be no objection to that.

BURIAL AND ILLNESS EXPENSES

The bill (S. 1523) to authorize the payment of burial expenses and expenses in connection with last illness and death of native employees who die while serving in offices abroad of executive departments of the United States Government was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the head of any executive department which maintains permanent staffs of employees in foreign countries is hereby authorized to pay out of any appropriation available to the department concerned for miscellaneous or contingent expenses, burial expenses, and expenses in connection with last illness and death, not in excess of $100 in any one case, of the native employees of such department in those countries with respect to which the Secretary of State shall determine it is customary for employers to pay such expenses; and the head of any executive department, which maintains permanent staffs of employees in foreign countries where such custom does not exist, is authorized, upon finding that the immediate family of the deceased is destitute, to make such payments within the limitations prescribed above to the family, heirs-at-law, or persons responsible for the debts of the deceased, as the officer in charge of the office abroad in which the deceased was employed shall determine to be proper.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 783) to amend the act, as amended, entitled "An act to refer the claims of the Delaware Indians to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States," approved February 7, 1925, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WINNEBAGO AGENCY, NEBR., INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 784) for the relief of certain Indians of the Winnebago Agency, Nebr., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $38,352.84, to the Treasurer of the United States for deposit in the official disbursing account of the superintendent and special disbursing agent of the Winnebago Indian Agency, Nebr., to replace a deposit of individual Indian money in like amount with the State Bank of Winnebago, Nebr., defunct: Provided, That any sums, not exceeding in the aggregate the amount of this appropriation, recovered from said bank or the sureties on the bonds thereof shall be deposited into the general fund of the Treasury.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly to object to this bill and other bills of similar import, but an able Member of the House of Representatives [Mr. COCHRAN] recently made some observations in regard to these Indian claims, and I think I shall have to ask that the bill go over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold his objection to the bill, I desire to make a very brief explanation.

The Indian Bureau approved the bank covered by the bill as a depository for Indian funds. Under the law the bank had to give a bond, and the bond was given. The bond was partly personal and partly a surety bond. The bank failed. The surety company paid its part of the liability, but for some reason the personal bond has not been collected. The personal sureties have not made good. That leaves a loss to the Indians of some $38,000, and the bill provides for the payment of that loss. Suit is now being instituted, and if something is recovered from the bondsmen it will be covered back to the Federal Government. That is the usual way of handling such matters. Of course, it is up to the Congress to pass upon them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I can only supplement what I stated a moment ago by saying that attention has been given and is being given by one of the distinguished Representatives at the other end of the Capitol to Indian claims of all kinds and character. I had hoped to confer with him with respect to many of the claims in the near future. I received a statement from him yesterday which I have hastily examined. For the reasons I have stated I have indicated that I would object to these Indian bills. However, this one seems to be of a different character from the others, so I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 790) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Prairie Band or Tribe of Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas and Wisconsin against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ANDREW J. CROCKETT AND WALTER CROCKETT

The bill (S. 875) for the relief of Andrew J. Crockett and Walter Crockett was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,394.13 to Andrew J. Crockett and Walter Crockett, in full settlement of their claims for compensation for improvements constructed by them upon the land transferred to the Zuni Indian Reservation, N. Mex., by the act of June 20, 1935 (49 Stat. 393): Provided, That no payment shall be made until certification by the Secretary of the Interior that the claimants have executed a satisfactory release of any and all claims arising out of the said transfer of lands.

PAYMENT TO OSAGE INDIANS

The bill (S. 1222) authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians on account of lands sold by the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this bill has been before the Congress for many years. The Senate has approved the bill on at least two or three occasions. At every one of the last several sessions the Senate has approved the bill. For some reason the House of Representatives has not seen fit to pass it. This year the attorneys for the tribe submitted the bill in a different form. The amended form was not agreeable to the committee; so the committee amended the text by substituting the exact text which has heretofore passed the Senate on two or three different occasions. The Indians are now asking that the Senate repass the bill which it has passed at previous sessions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with due respect, I still persist in my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 767) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Assiniboine Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 864) authorizing the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PURCHASE OF LANDS FOR APACHE INDIANS

The bill (S. 876) to authorize the purchase of certain lands for the Apache Tribe of the Mescalero Reservation, N. Mex., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to purchase with any available funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated pursuant to authority contained in section 5 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. L. 984), lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, north half northeast quarter southwest quarter northeast quarter, north half southeast quarter northeast quarter, section 24, township 15 south, range 15 east, and lots 4, 5, and 6, section 19, township 15 south, range 16 east, New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico. Title to the lands shall be taken in the name of the United States in trust for the Apache Tribe of the Mescalero Reservation.

LANDS FOR TURTLE MOUNTAIN INDIANS, NORTH DAKOTA

The bill (S. 1036) to authorize the purchase of certain lands adjacent to the Turtle Mountain Indian Agency in the State of North Dakota was considered, ordered, to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to acquire, by the method most advantageous to the United States and within the limits of the funds herein authorized to be appropriated, land adjacent to the Turtle Mountain Indian Reservation in the State of North Dakota, such land to become a part of such reservation and to be used for the benefit of the Turtle Mountain Indians.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the purposes of this act.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW SANATORIUM AND GENERAL HOSPITAL

The bill (S. 1104) to provide for conveying to the United States the land, buildings, and improvements comprising the Choctaw and Chickasaw Sanatorium and General Hospital was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation and the governor of the Chickasaw Nation be, and they are hereby, authorized to grant and convey to the United States of America, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, not less than 160 acres and all buildings and improvements thereon comprising the Choctaw and Chickasaw Sanatorium and General Hospital.

SUBMISSION OF CHECKS OR BONDS BY BIDDERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1477) to repeal section 9 of the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. L. 450), as amended, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. L. 450), as amended (U. S. C., title 25, sec. 95), providing for the submission by bidders of certified checks or bonds in the amount of 5 percent of each proposal in excess of $5,000 for goods, supplies, transportation, etc., for and on account of the Indian Service, is hereby repealed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in former times, when we did not have the present rapid means of transportation, and business was not so highly organized, the Indian Office required a bond when a contract was offered for letting. It took some time for the Office to get the contract in shape to be signed, and that made it necessary to have a bond. At the present time, in respect to small contracts, a contract is let immediately upon approval, so there is no interim between the letting of the contract and the actual signing of the contract. The Indian Office is, therefore, of the opinion that it is surplusage and a useless expense to require the bidder to put up a bond, when the work is all done simultaneously.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITION OF LAND TO ROCKY BOY INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The bill (S. 877) to add certain public-domain land in Montana to the Rocky Boy Indian Reservation was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby withdrawn from the public domain and added to the Rocky Boy Indian Reservation, in Montana, subject to all valid existing rights and claims, all public-domain land in the following described area: Sections 19 to 36, inclusive, township 31 north, range 14 east; sections 1 to 5, inclusive, sections 8 to 17, inclusive, sections 20 to 29, inclusive, sections 30 to 36, inclusive, township 30 north, range 13 east; township 30 north, ranges 14 and 15 east; west half, southeast quarter section 6, section 7, west half west half section 8, west half northwest quarter, southwest quarter section 17, section 18, section 19, west half, west half east half section 20, sections 29 to 32, inclusive, township 30 north, range 16 east; sections 1 to 5, inclusive, sections 8 to 17, inclusive, sections 20 to 29, inclusive, sections 32 to 36, inclusive, township 29 north, range 13 east; township 29 north, range 14 east; northeast quarter, west half southeast quarter, west half section 5, section 6, section 7, west half, west half northeast quarter, southeast quarter section 8, sections 17 to 20, inclusive, sections 29 to 32, inclusive, township 29 north, range 16 east; sections 1 and 2, township 28 north, range 13 east, sections 1 to 30, inclusive, township 28 north, range 14 east; and sections 6 and 7, sections 17 to 20, inclusive, and sections 29 and 30, township 28 north, range 15 east, Montana principal meridian.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDING, FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The bill (S. 961) for expenditure of funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Wolf Point, Mont., for completing the construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the public-school board of district No. 45, town of Wolf Point, County of Roosevelt, Mont., for completing the construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of the public high-school building at Wolf Point, Mont.: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so authorized shall be subject to the express conditions that the school maintained by the said district in the said building shall be available to all Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That plans and specifications for construction, extension, or improvement of structures shall be furnished by local or State authorities without cost to the United States, and upon approval thereof by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs actual work shall proceed under the direction of such local or State officials. Payment for work in place shall be made monthly on vouchers properly certified by local officials of the Indian Service: Provided further, That any amount expended on any project hereunder shall be recouped by the United States within a period of 30 years, commencing with the date of occupancy of the project, through reducing the annual Federal tuition payments for the education of Indian pupils enrolled in public or high schools of the district involved, or by the acceptance of Indian pupils in such schools without cost to the United States; and in computing the amount of recoupment for each project interest at 3 percent per annum shall be included on unrecouped balances.

EXPENSES OF INDIANS, QUINAIELT RESERVATION, WASH.

The bill (S. 643) authorizing the payment of necessary expenses incurred by certain Indians allotted on the Quinaielt Reservation, State of Washington, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the attorneys of record for those Quinaielt Indians who received their allotments on the Quinaielt Reservation, State of Washington, pursuant to judgments or decrees of a United States district or appellate court in a case wherein they were named parties plaintiff, the reasonable and fair value of the services rendered and expenses incurred, as heretofore fixed and determined by said Secretary; and the sum of $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to make said payments, the amount so paid for the account of each allottee to be reimbursed to the United States out of any funds now or hereafter accruing to the account of each such Indian allottee from the sale of his or her allotment, or the timber thereon.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 962) to define the status of certain lands purchased for the Choctaw Indians, Mississippi, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 18) authorizing payment to the San Carlos Apache Indians for the lands ceded by them in the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896, and reopening such lands to mineral entry was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 498) authorizing an appropriation to carry out the provisions of section 26 of the agreement with the Muscogee or Creek Tribe of Indians, approved March 1, 1901, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 645) to provide funds for cooperation with Wapato School District, No. 54, Yakima County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children of the Yakima Reservation was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks for an explanation of the bill. The Chair does not see the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] or the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] in the Chamber at the moment.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 3790) relating to taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES and Mr. KING asked that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PAYMENT TO CERTAIN NONINDIAN CLAIMANTS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, when Calendar No. 89, Senate bill 1476, was called, I had just entered the Chamber, and I heard the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] ask for an explanation of the bill. I did not realize at the time what bill was referred to. I ask unanimous consent to recur to Senate bill 1476, and that my colleague [Mr. CHAVEZ] be allowed at this time to give an explanation of the bill which the Senator from Utah requested.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the bill being taken up and an explanation of it given.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent to recur to Senate bill 1476 in order that my colleague may make an explanation of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1476) to authorize an appropriation to pay non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, but who have been found entitled to awards under said act as supplemented by the act of May 31, 1933, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, the legislation contained in Senate bill 1476 was suggested by the Secretary of the Interior, in keeping with the act passed in 1933 settling the claims under the Pueblo land-grants law enacted in 1924. The bill passed in 1933 contained a provision that in case some settler or citizen had not made his proper showing at the time the investigation was made under the Pueblo Land Grants Act, he could come before the Secretary of the Interior and show that he had not been paid for the land which had been taken from him and given to the Indians. That is authorized, as I stated before, by the law enacted in 1933.

The Department of the Interior knows all about the matter. The Department investigated the claims and they are the claims we are suggesting be paid. We do this practically at every session of the Congress, because in many instances small settlers out there did not make their proper showing at the proper time. But the matter has all been investigated by the Department of the Interior, which passes on the merits of the claims, and which has suggested the amount which should be paid.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. KING. Did any other persons receive payment for the lands in question?

Mr. CHAVEZ. No one else has been paid for these particular lands.

Mr. KING. This payment would not be a duplicate payment?

Mr. CHAVEZ. No; it would not be a duplicate payment.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the committee amendment.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 9, after the word "Taos", to strike out "$9,733.05" and insert "$10,733.05"; and in line 10, after the word "all", to strike out "$9,826.05" and insert "$10,826.05", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum to compensate white settlers or non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. 636), but who have been found by the Secretary of the Interior, in conformity with the proviso to section 3 of the act of May 31, 1933 (48 Stat. L. 108, 109), to be entitled to increased compensation by reason of errors in the amount of award previously allowed, or entitled to original awards by reason of errors in the omission of legitimate claimants, the non-Indian claimants, or their successors, as found and reported by the Secretary of the Interior, to be compensated out of said appropriation, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the amounts found to be due them, as follows:

Within the pueblo of Taos, $10,733.05; within the pueblo of San Felipe, $93; in all, $10,826.05.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT TO THE SAN CARLOS APACHE INDIANS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I am advised that while I was called out to answer the telephone objection was made when Calendar No. 115, Senate bill 18, was called. I should like to state to the Senate that an identical bill was passed in the last Congress and also in the preceding Congress. The bill had difficulty in the House of Representatives, but the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, which has reported the bill, again very properly recommends its enactment this year.

I will state what the situation is. Certain lands were excluded a long time ago from the Apache Indian Reservation with the idea that they contained coal. They were opened to settlement and entry. Coal in satisfactory quantities was not found, but the lands in the area with any kind of water supply have been taken up and patented by white people. To return the remaining land to the Indians, which is practically valueless, would be of no benefit to them. It would be better to compensate them at the rate specified in the bill, or $1.25 an acre.

I am frank to say that I do not know whether the House will agree to appropriate the total sum of money specified in the bill, but I should like to have the question presented again to the House, as it has been on two previous occasions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, one of the distinguished Representatives at the other end of the Capitol has made a searching investigation of these Indian claims which are being submitted. Claims aggregating three billion or more dollars have been and are being submitted, and great pressure is being brought by attorneys and others representing the Indians for prompt action upon these claims.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I am thoroughly familiar with the work being done by Mr. COCHRAN, of Missouri, in the other House. He is carrying out a policy that I inaugurated when I was a Member of the House. As a member of the Indian Affairs Committee of that body, I prevented the passage of a great many Indian claims bills. I am heartily in agreement with what Mr. COCHRAN is doing. The effect of that character of bills is to pay large sums of money out of the Treasury, a considerable proportion of which goes to attorneys.

The question presented by such bills is very different from the situation covered by the pending bill. Here are certain lands claimed by the Indians which have been restored to the public domain. There is no attorney representing anyone in this case. The only beneficiaries in any sum of money, if the bill becomes law, are the Apache Indians themselves, and the amount is strictly limited to $1.25 an acre as a maximum.

Mr. KING. I am not very familiar with this measure, but I have made some investigation and I am somewhat familiar with the excellent work which the Senator from Arizona did when he was in the House and the fine work now being done by Representative COCHRAN, of Missouri.

So far as I am concerned, I do not want to have passed any of these bills which provide for money payments to Indians for alleged taking of their lands, which bills involve claims, as I have indicated, for more than $3,000,000,000. In many instances payments were made 20, 30, or 40 years ago, and if direct payments have not been made for the lands there have been other gratuities given to the Indians which, if deducted from the amount which they claim, if they are entitled to anything at all in virtue of their original claim, would leave them but a moiety.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is exactly the proviso which should be attached to every one of the Indian claims bills, and I sought to do that when I was in the House. When such a case was brought before the Court of Claims the Government was authorized to submit gratuities to the Indians as an offset. This bill does not propose to submit any issue to the Court of Claims. It is a proposal recommended by the Interior Department. It is a question only of the exclusion of land from an Indian reservation with the understanding that it was to be open to coal mining, and the Indians were supposed to receive royalties. No coal in commercial quantities has been found on the land. Instead of the land being utilized for that purpose the valuable parts of it were located and patented to white settlers, so it is impossible for the Indians to reoccupy it. They ought to be compensated for their lands, and I am quite sure that whatever sum is finally granted will be agreed to by Mr. COCHRAN.

Mr. KING. I think this claim is different from the ones to which I have made objection heretofore, so I shall not object to the measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 18) authorizing payment to the San Carlos Apache Indians for the lands ceded by them in the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896, and reopening such lands to mineral entry, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, as payment in full to the San Carlos Apache Indians, at the rate of $1.25 per acre for 232,320 acres of land ceded by them under the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat. 358), less $12,433.63 received by the Indians as royalty under mining permits, the sum of $277,966.37 to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the San Carlos Apache Indians, and to be available for expenditure for the benefit of such Indians: Provided, That none of the funds herein authorized to be appropriated shall be subject to the payment of any claims, judgments, or demands against the San Carlos Apache Indians accruing prior to the approval of this act.

Sec. 2. The lands referred to in the first section of this act are hereby reopened to location and entry under the public land and mineral entry laws of the United States.

PAPERS OF CHARLES COTESWORTH PINCKNEY AND THOMAS PINCKNEY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate bill 917, and ask for its present consideration.

The bill authorizes the Library of Congress to acquire by purchase, or otherwise, the whole, or any part, of the papers of Charles Cotesworth Pinckney and Thomas Pinckney, including therewith a group of documents relating to the Constitutional Convention of 1787, now in the possession of Harry Stone, of New York City. It is a measure which was passed by the Senate at the last session and went to the House, and was favorably reported from the Committee on the Library of the House, but failed of passage because of objection on the part of someone on the floor of the House.

The Library of Congress is very anxious to purchase these historic papers. Dr. Putnam, of the Library of Congress, came before the committee and urged the purchase of the papers because of their historical value, and the price at which they can be purchased is only half of the price fixed upon them originally. Therefore, I hope the bill will pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Missouri in the chair.) Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 917) authorizing the Library of Congress to acquire by purchase, or otherwise, the whole, or any part, of the papers of Charles Cotesworth Pinckney and Thomas Pinckney, including therewith a group of documents relating to the Constitutional Convention of 1787, now in the possession of Harry Stone, of New York City, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Library of Congress is hereby authorized and empowered to acquire by purchase, or otherwise, the whole, or any part, of the papers of Charles Cotesworth Pinckney and Thomas Pinckney, including therewith a group of documents relating to the Constitutional Convention of 1787, now in the possession of Harry Stone, of 24 East Fifty-eighth Street, New York, N. Y., and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Library of Congress for that purpose not to exceed the sum of $37,500.

AUXILIARY VESSELS FOR THE NAVY

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 75, Senate bill 828. The reason for my request is that I understand that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who previously objected to it, withdrew his objection when it was shown to him that the purpose of the bill was not to appropriate more money for additional ships but merely to give authority to the President to purchase an oil tanker from the Standard Oil Co. at cost, and that the tanker could be purchased at an actual saving to the Government of more than $1,500,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 75, Senate bill 828. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think we had better take it up at some time when it may be discussed, rather than under the 5-minute rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

That completes the calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 185) making additional funds available for salaries and expenses, Federal Housing Administration, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 4011) to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 185) making additional funds available for salaries and expenses, Federal Housing Administration, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the House has passed a joint resolution making available certain funds for the Federal Housing Administration. The joint resolution has been ordered to be reported favorably by the majority of the Committee on Appropriations. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, without amendment, House Joint Resolution 185, and I ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair.) Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 185) making additional funds available for salaries and expenses, Federal Housing Administration, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in addition to the funds made available to the Federal Housing Administration for administrative expenses by the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1939, not to exceed $1,375,000 of the mutual mortgage insurance fund and not to exceed $1,125,000 of the funds advanced to the Administration by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are hereby made available for administrative expenses of the Administration for the fiscal year 1939, including the same objects specified in the provision for such expenses of such Administration in such act: Provided, That such additional funds shall be available for administrative expenses of the Administration for the fiscal year 1939 heretofore or hereafter incurred and otherwise properly chargeable thereto.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3791.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3791, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I wish it understood that if we proceed to the consideration of the bill, we may today listen to the chairman of the committee, to whom we always listen with respect and admiration, and that after he concludes consideration of the bill may go over. The reason for that is that the record of the hearings was not received until noon today. At the time the committee concluded its labors I asked the committee for a copy of the record. On Thursday it was promised to me Thursday afternoon. Friday morning came, and it was promised me Friday afternoon, then Saturday afternoon. I received it today at noon. I know there was good reason for not delivering the particular record, because it had not been thoroughly investigated concerning pagination, and that appeals to our imagination. So, with pagination forgotten in the record, and our imagination staggered in considering what pagination was, of course there was a delay in the record, and it reached the Senate only today at noon. Therefore, I make the suggestion that the Senator from Texas may proceed. I am not making this suggestion because, necessarily or at all, I am opposed to the bill, but in order that I may familiarize myself with it. I know it is a terrible thing for any Senator to rise and ask that he be permitted to familiarize himself with the record of hearings before the Military Affairs Committee. In this instance it is like solving a conundrum or a crossword puzzle. One must take the parts that are off the record and the parts that are on the record and piece together all that is said by various witnesses and members of the committee. Perhaps in the study of the record I shall be involved in pagination that will stagger my imagination. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the suggestion of the Senator from California. There is no desire to hasten the vote on the bill before Senators understand its provisions or can look into the hearings. I do not know just when the hearings were printed in bound form, but last Thursday I obtained parts of the hearings in print and took them home with me over the week end and attempted to study them. However, I do not think the Senate ought to limit itself today to the speech of the Senator from Texas. If any other Senator is ready and desires to proceed, I see no objection to permitting him to do so. I can assure the Senator from California that there is no desire to have a vote today, either on the bill itself or on the amendments, unless the Senate is ready. I think Senators who are prepared to go ahead with the argument ought to be permitted to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Do not misunderstand me as desiring to eliminate any words that may be uttered upon the floor of the Senate from the lips of Senators. I am willing that any Senator who wishes to make an argument today may do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's suggestion was that after the Senator from Texas concluded we should let the bill go over.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I was not aware that there would be such preparation on the part of other Senators, because the record had not been disclosed to them.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The able Senator from California simply wishes it understood that there will be no final disposition of the bill today. I think that understanding was had at the time the request was made by the Senator from Kentucky that we proceed to the consideration of the bill today, provided the report was filed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3791.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that action on any of the amendments, or on the bill itself, be not had until after today.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection, does not the Senator wish to ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be first taken up and disposed of in the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendments, the amendments of the committee to be first considered, and that neither any committee amendment nor the bill itself be voted upon today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair assumes the Senator means the calendar day. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the first amendment of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 1, line 8, after the word "exceed", to strike out "5,500" and insert "6,000", so as to read:

SEC. 8. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to equip and maintain the Air Corps with not to exceed 6,000 serviceable airplanes, and such number of airships and free and captive balloons as he may determine to be necessary for training purposes together with spare parts, equipment, supplies, hangars, and installation necessary for the operation and maintenance thereof. In order to maintain the number specified above, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to replace obsolete or unserviceable aircraft from time to time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] that personally I made every effort to secure the publication of the hearings by the Printing Office before last Friday.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am sure of that. I am sure the Senator was not responsible for the lack of "pagination," and that indeed he did all that could be done to see that the record was printed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. In connection with the correction of the record, and also copies of hearings, the Printing Office uses the word "pagination." That word is in use at the Printing Office. It is used there in connection with the paging of documents.

Mr. President, in presenting the bill before us, a bill to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12 to the Congress, it seems appropriate to review certain facts connected with the program this measure proposes.

This program is so vital to our future, the time consuming elements involved in adequate protection so insistent, that failure to recognize the soundness of the present proposals might result in perilous consequences.

No one who heard, or who has seen in print, President Roosevelt's messages of January 4 and 12 could fail to be impressed with the need of the program contained in the pending bill. It is a fair deduction from what he said that the hostile attitudes of certain dictator-controlled and imperialistic nations are becoming more menacing toward free, independent, self-governing, democratic nations as the years elapse and call for the immediate expansion of our armed forces to the end that they may make the most effective resistance possible in the light of modern knowledge and modern conditions.

Aside, however, from this special world situation to which the President so earnestly and properly directs our attention, it may be well to say that the normal development of our permanent defense policy justifies the prompt adoption of the President's proposals. The question here occurs as to why we have lagged in certain respects in relation to national defense. It will be recalled that the World War left us with a tremendous reserve of munitions, that is, weapons, equipment, and ammunition. For a number of years there were practically no appropriations for replacements of these munitions, except limited allotments for the development of tanks and aircraft. As the years passed these World War munitions gradually deteriorated and the necessary replacements were not made. It is true that larger appropriations for the Air Corps were provided, that an increase of the enlisted strength of the Regular Army and the National Guard was authorized, and that more funds were provided for matériel, that is, for the various types of equipment described as a whole by this single term. It is also true that insufficient funds, indeed very little funds, were allowed by Congress for research and study, the primary foundation of a national-defense system that meets new and current needs. The plan before us makes adequate provision for research in the future.

Here let us examine our present defense requirements. We cannot draw a line around the sea and land frontiers of continental United States and say that this alone is what we will defend. It is not so simple as that. The Panama Canal, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and Alaska are vital links in our defense chain. These possessions are often referred to as outposts. So to designate them is to commit an error. Outposts are usually considered as warning or delaying forces to be withdrawn when they have accomplished their mission. There can be no withdrawal from Panama, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and Alaska. To permit these strategical areas to fall into the hands of an enemy would jeopardize the security of continental United States itself.

The whole defense story, however, has not yet been told. If there is one foreign policy to which the American people subscribe, it is the doctrine that the western world belongs to the western nations, and that freedom and democracy must be preserved on this hemisphere. A violation of the Monroe Doctrine would probably not occur as a sudden, overt act. It could easily take the form of a step-by-step movement, of a peaceful penetration by foreign nationals until definite and powerful minorities would be established, with the result that before military force replaced diplomatic negotiations hostile nations might already have a foothold in areas that would threaten the most important link in our entire system of defense, the Panama Canal. With the Panama Canal out of commission permanently or for a prolonged period our Navy as at present constituted would be helpless as the guardian of the two oceans and our present defense system would collapse. It is to be hoped that it will never be necessary to fight to preserve the Monroe Doctrine and the liberties of this hemisphere, but if we must fight, prompt action will be imperative. Inability to act promptly would in the end necessitate a long and costly war effort. But what is more important, ability to act promptly is the best form of security against the necessity for action.

If war should occur, existing naval air bases must be defended and additional ones occupied. The Army's responsibilities in this respect are not generally understood. Both the Army and the Navy are maintained to provide that great objective mentioned in the preamble to the Constitution, namely, the common defense. Together they constitute the Nation's military power. Each has its function. Each may on occasion be our first line of defense. Each contributes to the success of the other's mission. The Army is responsible for the defense of all permanent naval bases and also conducts operations in support of the Navy for the establishment and defense of naval bases. When additional bases are needed by the Navy, either in peace or war, the Army must provide for their protection. It is this Army protection that affords the Navy the freedom of mobility and action essential to the Navy for the accomplishment of its mission. For example, the sole mission of the 20,000 soldiers in Hawaii is to defend the naval base at Pearl Harbor. There is almost no necessity for Army troops in the Canal Zone except to defend that most important adjunct to our naval strength, the Panama Canal.

With respect to bases, the ground forces of the Army have much the same relation to aviation as they do to the Navy. The bombing plane must have a base, a place to land, and facilities for refueling and reconditioning. Without such a base it is helpless. As in the case of the Navy, the ground forces of the Army must occupy and defend the bases required by our aviation. The important and necessary functions of the Army are not always appreciated when matters pertaining to the national defense are discussed.

Mr. President, this Nation recently celebrated the anniversary of the birth of Washington. We observed that anniversary in the Senate with the reading of his Farewell Address. I now call your attention to what he said among other things in his first annual message to the Congress; namely, "Among the many interesting objects that will engage your attention, that of providing for the common defense will merit particular regard. To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace."

It cannot in reason be denied that probably the foremost desire of this Nation is to preserve peace with the world. Neither can it in truth be questioned that, if this Nation is to preserve peace with the world, it must be known all over the globe that it is strong enough to protect its rights by armed forces if necessary.

With this end in view our Nation has developed a policy of defense resulting in our present armed set-up on land and sea. The principal object of this bill is to adapt the Army portion of that set-up to new conditions. These new conditions consist mainly in the growing power of aircraft as a fighting force, its growing importance in Army operations in peacetime or in wartime, and the growing use of instruments of warfare of such character as to require long periods of time for construction.

That set-up consists at present of a Regular Army of 165,000 men and 14,000 officers, a National Guard of 205,000 men and officers, an Officers' Reserve Corps of 100,000 subject to call for active service, a regular enlisted Reserve of about 30,000 at present, subject to call for active service, an air force of about 1,073 combat planes of all types, including observation planes, and about 724 additional planes, including training types and cargo. In addition, 558 planes are now under construction, 348 are appropriated for, but not yet contracted for, and 219 are included in the 1940 Budget. This makes a total of 2,922. By June 30, 1941, it is estimated that there will be a loss of 454 airplanes, due to wrecks and obsolescence, leaving a net balance under the current program of 2,468. The present authorized strength of the Air Corps of the Army is 4,120 planes.

This bill adds 1,880 planes to the present authorized strength, making a maximum authorization of 6,000 planes.

While the difference between the present number of current program planes, 2,468, and the number authorized in this bill before us is 3,532, it should be remembered that the sum requested for new planes by the President is $170,000,000, and that only the additional number of planes which this sum will enable us to obtain will be purchased. It will not be known what the average cost per plane will be until after the bids are in. The President in his message of January 12 stated that the amount set aside for additional planes should secure a minimum number of 3,000, but added that it is hoped that orders placed on such a large scale will materially reduce the unit cost and actually provide many more planes. He did not make the statement that 3,000 would be sufficient. When it is remembered that, whatever number is secured under the maximum of 6,000, the total fighting front-line plane strength will be under 2,500, and that not until 1941, I trust no objection will be raised to the maximum of 6,000 planes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, would it interfere with the Senator's argument if I should interrupt him at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield very gladly to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator stated a moment ago that the present authorized force of the Air Corps of the Army was 4,000 planes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; 4,100.

Mr. BARKLEY. In reading the testimony before the committee I understood the Army officer to say that the number was slightly in excess of 2,300 planes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. He was referring to the number authorized by the act of 1936.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why is it that with that authorization of 4,000 planes in 1936 we now have, the Senator says, only about 2,300 planes? Is it because Congress has not appropriated the money?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is exactly the point. The actual number of planes, of course, is controlled by the appropriations made from time to time under the authorizations.

Mr. BARKLEY. This bill authorizes a maximum of 6,000 planes—

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. Which is a couple of thousand more than the present authorization. Of course, this is only an authorization. It is not an appropriation. The same thing that has already happened might happen again if Congress should not later appropriate the money to carry out the program authorized in this bill. In other words, while we have an authorization of 4,000 planes, we have only 2,300; and when we have an authorization of 6,000 planes, unless Congress appropriates the money, we shall still be short of our full authorized strength.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is quite true; and the President has suggested the amounts of money that could properly be used at this time; that is, $170,000,000 for planes and $130,000,000 for organizational equipment, bombs, instructional equipment, flying-school tuition, personnel, construction, maintenance, and research.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think we all realize that there is a maximum or a sort of a peak of expenditure that can be economically indulged in any one year; and for that reason the recommendation of the President was that this whole program be staggered over a period of 2 years.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Of this $170,000,000, perhaps not half will be actually expended in the next fiscal year.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has the Senator any reliable information as to the air forces of other nations—for instance, Italy, Germany, Great Britain, and France?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The last reports we have, presumably from expert sources, fix the number in Germany at anywhere from 10,000 to 20,000, and the number of actual fighting planes between 6,000 and 10,000, whereas this whole program after 2 years will give us less than 2,500 combat planes. Italy has 5,000, Britain 3,000, France 2,000. Russia is credited with 10,000 by the authority I have consulted, but that authority admits that this figure is little more than a mere guess.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have been informed by those who are in a position to know, as far as we can know, what goes on in a foreign country—we cannot get exact information on the subject—that Germany at the beginning of this year, for instance, had in the neighborhood of 10,000 airplanes, and that Italy had between 4,000 and 5,000, making their combined strength between 14,000 and 15,000 planes. Of course, they are not all first-line fighting planes. They are auxiliaries, training ships, and all that. The other day, however, I saw a statement in some New York paper, I think the New York Times—I am not certain about it; I clipped it out and laid it aside, and have misplaced it and have not been able to locate it—in which it was claimed, on what the writer thought was reliable authority, that Germany alone now has 16,000 planes actually in existence.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That harmonizes roughly with my statement as to Germany.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator know the average speed of those planes?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator may rest assured that they are of the greatest speed obtainable under modern conditions. They would probably average 300 miles per hour, perhaps more.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator know what the range of those planes is—how far they can go and come back if they do not land anywhere?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not know definitely.

Mr. BARKLEY. The program which is outlined in this bill, then, when it is completed, will give us probably in the neighborhood of one-third of the fighting ships now possessed by the strongest nation in the air, so far as we can learn from all sources, will give us about the same strength as the next strongest, and will give us more strength than is possessed in the air by any other nation, unless those nations—for instance, England and France—should from now on increase their strength so as more nearly to approximate that of the other two nations to which I have referred.

Mr. SHEPPARD. And they are increasing it quite rapidly—more rapidly than this program will increase ours.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Texas a question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I was interested in the question propounded by the distinguished leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], as to the number of planes. I should like to know if the chairman of the committee has any authentic information tending to show the capacity of these various countries to produce planes; in other words, what their production capacity is?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The latest report on Germany, apparently authentic, is that they are now turning out about a thousand planes a month, but that they can turn out at least 2,500 a month.

Mr. GEORGE. And Russia, for instance?

Mr. SHEPPARD. So far as I know there is no definite information from Russia on this subject.

Mr. GEORGE. And Great Britain, about 500 a month?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Four or five hundred a month under the plan recently adopted, and perhaps nearly the same production is under way in France.

Mr. GEORGE. And how does our own production capacity rank?

Mr. SHEPPARD. We are below those figures at present.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator from Texas to interject an observation, the number of planes seems to me to be comparatively unimportant, but the capacity to produce them is the important point.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. GEORGE. In case of any great major war most of these planes would of course be crashed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. One of the great countries figures that its entire front line fighting-plane strength would be out of commission in 30 days, necessitating more than a hundred percent reserve for that country.

Mr. GEORGE. Undoubtedly so, in any great major conflict. Therefore, when we are speaking of national defense in the air, the question is the capacity of the country to provide planes. That seems to me to be the important point.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true. If all the factories in the United States were producing at utmost capacity, we could turn out something like a thousand planes a month; but they are not working at capacity. Numbers of them are without much to do at present.

Mr. GEORGE. We have a potential power to produce, then, of approximately a thousand planes per month?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Gladly.

Mr. KING. Do not the Army and the Navy work together in the production of planes, and have some sort of correlation and coordination? Is the Army interested only in the production of planes for the Army, not taking cognizance of the production for naval purposes?

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator remembers, I made a statement a while ago as to how the Army and the Navy work together as a whole; and they do that also in regard to information as to what each branch is purchasing, all to carry out the same objective—the common defense.

Mr. KING. In giving the number of planes in reply to the question of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator did not take into account the production of naval planes?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; I was discussing the part the Army plays. I did not give the data as to the Navy.

Mr. KING. I may say to the Senator, if he will permit me, that I have seen a number of statements from correspondents, as I recall, in Spain during the war, to the effect that the German planes proved quite unsatisfactory in their operations in Spain, and that the planes from Mussolini's regime were not up to the standard; in other words, that they were not of as high a grade as had been predicted and as had been supposed, that some of the French planes that had been purchased were superior to those from Germany and those from Italy. I have no information on the subject other than what was stated in the newspapers to which I have called attention.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It seems that Germany and Italy used Spain as a sort of proving ground for various types of planes. It is doubtful whether they or France would have sent their latest and best types to Spain in any large numbers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator may have covered this subject while I was out of the Chamber; but, following the question of the Senator from Utah, there is in existence an aeronautical board, composed of Army officers and naval officers and others, I believe, which was, of course, created largely for the purpose of coordinating the purchase of airplanes for both services.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. Following the question of the Senator from Georgia as to the potential capacity of our airplane factories, all of which are privately owned and operated, the Government has no airplane factories either for the Navy or for the Army. How long would it be before the potential capacity of a thousand planes a month could be realized, by a process of speeding up, and by coordination of the activities of all these factories so that we could realize, if necessary, their maximum capacity?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They could begin some deliveries in 6 months, but it is my understanding that perhaps a year would be required for most of our factories to reach maximum production.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand, unless a great emergency should occur, it would not necessarily be desirable that they should produce all these planes at once, because if that were done, unless there should follow another program, or the necessity should arise as soon as this program was completed, all these factories would then have to close and cease operations, which would be an undesirable thing from an economic or industrial standpoint. Having in view the length of time necessary to bring about the delivery of the first planes provided for, and having in view also the economic and employment situation, it would not be desirable, even if they could all be turned out and delivered in 6 months, that that should be done.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is correct. Under the plan proposed in this bill the new planes are to be delivered over a period of 2 years in increments, and the first delivery will take place within about 6 months.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. KING. Has not the experience of Germany and France and other countries in the matter of airplanes demonstrated that technical changes occur so rapidly in the construction of airplanes that it would be unwise to construct an enormous number, ten or fifteen or twenty thousand, within a very limited time, because if they followed the same pattern, perhaps in 6 months or a year thereafter they would be valueless?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is quite true. Rapid advances are being made in the science of aviation, and the rate of obsolescence may increase. This is one of the reasons for increasing the maximum authorization. It may enable us to meet more satisfactorily the increasing rate of obsolescence.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator at this point, except that I am very much interested in the last statement he made. I do not see any connection whatever between increasing the limit from 5,500 planes to 6,000 planes and the fact that planes rapidly become obsolete. It is my purpose at the proper time to oppose as vigorously as I can the committee amendment, and I should like to have the Senator explain what connection or relation there is between those two propositions.

Mr. SHEPPARD. When the ships become obsolete they have to be replaced. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that we only get the number of planes that can be purchased with $170,000,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that, but General Arnold, General Craig, Secretary Woodring, and all the other officials who appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs testified that the program of 5,500 was a complete and adequate program. It seems that the rule as to what they can be purchased for works both ways.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They can do better with more, however; and the President expressed the hope in his message of January 12 that many more might be secured for the $170,000,000 he had suggested for planes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They might also be in a position to get 5,500 cheaper by lowering the cost limit, perhaps. It works both ways.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Evidently the War Department stands a better chance to secure more planes by saying to producers "How many planes will you give us for $170,000,000," than by saying "We want 5,500 planes."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in the matter of obsolescence of planes, the Senator says, and we all know, that a plane which is current today may be obsolete tomorrow. The same thing is true of automobiles. The manufacturers are always changing the type, and bringing about new improvements, and all that sort of thing. I do not understand that an airplane becomes useless in a year. The Army has planes now which have been in operation for 5 or 6 years, and even longer.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The usual life of an airplane is about 5 years, but it may be rendered obsolete as a first-line fighting plane in much less time by the development of a better fighting plane.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. What the Senator says means that these planes are not strictly up to date for combat purposes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am speaking of combat activities.

Mr. BARKLEY. They would not be suitable for first-line planes in a combat engagement.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is right.

Mr. BARKLEY. They are still useful for training purposes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. And transport purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. For scouting and transport.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And all other purposes for which a plane may be legitimately used.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Except combat purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. If a difficulty should arise, or a war should start, naturally we would want our first-line planes as up to date and as efficient as possible, and so much so that they could excel any possible enemy against which they would have to fight.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I agree with the Senator.

In support of the action of the Senate Military Affairs Committee in raising the maximum strength of the Air Service to 6,000 planes, let me again emphasize the importance of modern aviation. Our combat aviation must be prepared instantly to perform a variety of missions in a war emergency. The interruption of the operation of the Panama Canal must be prevented at all costs. As one of the greatest threats to the Panama Canal would be from the air, our air forces in Panama must be prepared and must have sufficient numbers to intercept and drive off enemy aviation and to destroy enemy bases. The importance of a secure defense of Hawaii needs no emphasis. It is an indispensable bulwark for the defense of our Pacific continental frontier. It must be made an invulnerable base for the operation of our Navy. A sufficient air force is essential to these purposes.

New naval bases are under discussion now, all of which involve the Air Service.

The development of aviation emphasizes the strategic importance of Puerto Rico in the defense of our Gulf coast and the Panama Canal. That is due mainly to the increased speed and range of aviation, which are constantly being developed.

The vast extent of Alaska and its lack of adequate communications present a difficult problem to which the characteristics of aviation are peculiarly adaptable. Exploration and tests must be conducted by Army aviation to determine actual requirements peculiar to that Territory and to develop operating facilities.

The uncertainties of present-day conditions require the retention of the bulk of our combat aviation in continental United States. In any major war we may have several active theaters of operation and many potential ones. Our aviation force in the United States must be prepared to assist in the protection of our land and coastal frontiers and to dispatch reinforcements to the Panama Canal Zone, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or Alaska. Active operations over large and widely separated areas and the probability of operations in distant areas, therefore, must be visualized. This will call from the very start for the maximum employment of the mobility and fighting power of the Air Corps in order to insure the immunity of our territory and will require a strong air force.

In view of these facts, I trust the President will not be denied the additional planes by the increased maximum provided in the Senate bill, especially when no increased sum of money over the sum he proposed originally will be used.

The bill also provides for the selection and training of the new officers and enlisted personnel required by its terms, for additional housing and personnel for the Canal Zone, and for the placing of educational orders with private industry for munitions requiring special knowledge and equipment to produce.

About $360,000,000 comprise the sum authorized in this bill to carry out the new armament program suggested by the President. The remainder of the five hundred and fifty million requested by him for the program is already authorized and is a matter for the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate to pass upon directly, as, indeed, they must also pass upon the amounts authorized herein, as to whether all or a part of them shall be used, and as to the extent they shall be used, for what periods, and so forth. About 2 years will be required for the gradual enactment of the program.

The bill provides an Army and aircraft nucleus well balanced, well trained, fairly well equipped, capable of enlargement within a reasonable time so as to include the entire eligible manpower of the Nation, if necessary, and of presenting in connection with the Navy a formidable resistance to any peril in which war possibilities and war conditions throughout the world may involve us.

Let those who say that there is no probability of another world war remember that at the beginning of 1914 it was generally believed in this country that civilization was so firmly established that such a thing as an earth-wide clash of arms belonged to the dead and distant past. And yet in August of that year began a struggle in which eventually 28 nations took part, including our own, comprising nearly all, or about eleven-twelfths of the seventeen hundred million people of the earth and occupying seven-eighths of its land surface. Among the results of that conflict were 7,000,000 dead, 20,000,000 wounded or missing, two hundred and fifty billions of expenditure, infinite suffering and devastation. Where or when or for what reason the next orgy of death and sacrifice and mutilation known as a general modern war will occur we know no more today than we knew in January 1914. Already the science of destruction has advanced beyond the devices of the late strife, horrible as they were. Gases are being devised that are deadlier than ever. Guns are being developed with wider caliber and larger firing radius than ever before. Machine power and chemicals so useful in time of peace may be utilized on a larger scale than ever for human slaughter in periods of war. Airplanes are acquiring an increasing deadliness as instruments of battle. Marshal Foch once stated that one of the greatest factors in the next war will be aircraft and that the potentialities of aircraft attack were beyond measure. Before the close of the World War airplanes were carrying bombs and machine guns. Since then their capacity in these directions has been steadily growing. The heaviest bomb they now carry weighs 2,000 pounds and its explosion on the ground makes a crater about 25 feet deep and about 25 feet wide. Modern warfare employs every human and material resource, making towns, cities, homes, fields, factories, lines of transport, entire populations—men, women, and children—objects of attack.

Let it be noted that sea vessels known as airplane carriers are now in the navies of all the leading countries and can provide a base 200 to 500 miles from shore for an air attack. The need of a proper and adequate degree of preparedness is emphasized by our increasing liability to attack under modern conditions.

Let those who say that there is no probability of our involvement in another world war recall that when the last contest began in 1914 the feeling was practically universal in this country that our remote geographical position would save us from involvement.

And yet our military weakness and lack of organized ability to defend our rights led one of the combatants to commit acts of war against us in such fashion that the only courses open to us were to fight or meekly surrender to probable conquest and spoliation. As a result we, who had thought that the way of right and safety was that of a virtually unarmed and defenseless nation so far as our Army was concerned, found our Republic suddenly and frantically mobilizing the energies and resources of a hundred million people, assembling and equipping an army of 4,000,000 men, sending 2,000,000 of these to battle across the seas at a cost in lives and funds so staggering, due to lack of even a fair degree of preparedness for such emergencies, that the lesson should never be forgotten. In fact, it is, in my judgment, fairly certain that if we had been in possession of a military set-up at the beginning of the World War of sufficient size and efficiency to have impressed the world with a sense of our ability to expand within a reasonable period into a force capable of vigorous action the provocation that brought us into the late world struggle would have never occurred.

What tragedy, however, is compressed in the thought that a long-established policy of equipment for war sufficiently vigorous to have convinced mankind of our capacity to develop a small but efficient nucleus into a formidable force would in all reason have caused the Central Powers to have avoided the final acts of anarchy and barbarism on the seas which compelled our entry.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask the able chairman of the Military Affairs Committee to recall an observation he just made touching the air force. I was waiting for him to reach a point at which I could properly interrupt him and bring him back to his statement concerning airplanes. However, until this moment I did not feel I could interrupt the splendid utterance he was making with such volcanic force. I did not wish to disturb the course of his statement. I invite the Senator's attention to this thought: In answer to a question of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and also the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs made a statement with regard to the cost for which airplanes could be secured. He was asked the sum of money which is to be paid for the planes and, if I did not misunderstand him, and I am quite sure I understood him correctly, he said that soon we can add to the number that he has described as desired at the present time, but that the addition to the number will not add to the amount of money which the bill defines.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is what I said.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, I ask the Senator, are we not in such a position that we can be criticized, possibly, and weakened, possibly, by the assertion that we may pay a million dollars for 100 planes, and then be told afterward that we may increase that 100 to a greater number and still not pay more than a million dollars? Would not the result be a weakening in the construction of the planes by reason of the fact that before the point of capacity was reached the subsequent planes might have to be of lighter frame and suffer from ineffectual workmanship, because of the addition of so many more to the number which was intended at the time the figure was first arrived at?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The specifications of the War Department will be a sufficient safeguard against having to accept a less desirable form of plane. The difficulty here is that this bill, as it came to us from the House, contained a certain limit. If we raise that limit, with the same amount of money we may be able to get a larger number of airplanes.

Mr. LEWIS. That would call for some increase of the fund, would it not?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all.

Mr. LEWIS. The worry in my mind is how far will it be said, "Well, gentlemen, if you obtain so many planes for so much money, and you say you are going to obtain so many more planes but not expend any more money, will you not have to stretch the amount out so that there will be a sacrifice in quality?"

Mr. SHEPPARD. The War Department will guard against such danger in its contracts. It will say, "All the planes delivered must come up to a certain specification. We will not leave any leeway for the offer of an inferior plane."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I say to the Senator from Illinois that it appears to the junior Senator from Texas that his colleague is entirely correct. For example, we appropriate $170,000,000 to buy airplanes. The Army does not have to buy a single plane unless it can obtain the kind of plane it wishes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. No doubt the planes will be purchased on competitive bids. The company which builds the planes which the Army wants will compete with every other company.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; so long as the present law remains.

Mr. CONNALLY. If we can obtain 6,000 planes for $170,000,000, we are just that much better off than if we obtained 5,500.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The specifications will require approved standards of excellence.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Army would not ask merely for bids on so many airplanes. It would ask for bids on so many airplanes "of the following description," with strict specifications.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Exactly.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is conceivable that all the appropriation might be required to purchase 5,500 planes. On the other hand, we might obtain 6,000. If we can obtain 6,000, we shall be no worse off than if we obtained 5,500 for the same amount of money.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is hoped that the number obtained will be somewhere between 5,500 and 6,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. I also appreciate the complete explanation. I was left a little uncertain as to whether or not a criticism would follow, which I knew the Senator did not intend.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am glad the Senator asked the question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The whole difficulty is in the confusion between authorization and actual appropriation.

It is well that we have the authorization a little ahead of the appropriation. We do not want the authorization to come after the appropriation, and thus be handicapped.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is very true.

What further occasion for solemn pause arises from the reflection that even after our entry thousands of lives could have been saved and tremendous suffering and immense material loss could have been avoided by an adequate system of military training and study extending through the decades preceding the last world struggle. Col. E. M. House, confidant and adviser of Woodrow Wilson for years, who as Wilson's representative contacted conditions at first hand throughout Europe prior to our entry, said in effect that, given a larger and efficient Army and Navy, the United States would have become the arbiter of peace and probably without the loss of a single life.

The development of the airplane, of quicker transport on land and sea, the increase in populations, and the growing dependence of nations on outside sources for essential elements of sustenance and decent living standards, are making it more and more difficult for any country of importance to take no part in anything like a general or an extensive conflict among the nations. In the event that a conflict of world proportions became so desperate that both sides realized that our resources meant survival, neither side would hesitate to commandeer those resources if we were inadequately armed for successful resistance. Neither could we with an inadequate force utilize the foreign sources of supply and exchange essential to our existence—an objective which would call upon us for armed activity whether we endeavored to remain neutral or to cooperate with either side.

In order to maintain the economic well-being, the independence, and the progress of the United States it is necessary that we continue to draw on foreign sources for a number of essential raw materials and that we be accorded access on just and proper terms to the markets of the world for inevitable surpluses. We use about one-half of the important raw materials of the entire world. Of some of the most essential of these we do not have an adequate domestic production. In fact, with respect to some of them we have no production at all. In order to secure a steady supply of the articles necessary to our civilized existence and to our further progress we must be able to send abroad commodities of our own production to be exchanged for such articles. The lines of transport on sea and land in every part of the globe along which these articles must be conveyed are as much our lines of defense as our land borders. These lines must be kept unbroken and intact if the present status of our civilization, that colossal agricultural, industrial, and financial set-up that has produced for the American people more of the necessities and facilities of modern life than any other people have ever known, is to be preserved, if disintegration, chaos, and the ultimate alternatives of barbarism or despotism are to be prevented.

It is necessary, therefore, that a definite understanding shall prevail throughout the earth that any attack upon the processes and sources of the existence of this Republic will find us prepared to sustain our rights. Nothing will contribute more effectively to such an understanding and to world peace than the maintenance by the United States of an adequate military and naval defense.

Our position is typical of that of the rest of the world. Virtually all the leading nations must look to foreign regions for many of the necessary materials of industry and life and for the necessary exchange of surpluses. This means that the lines of defense which the principal nations, including our own, must maintain or must be prepared to maintain in connection with lines of import and export essential to modern existence and development, cross and recross in every part of the world, on sea as well as on land.

This means that the world is always faced by the danger that the struggles for raw materials and markets, too often characterized by aggressions, exactions, deceptions, and retaliations, and by distrustful and suspicious bargainings, will become sources of international friction and hostility, increasing provocations of war. Under existing world conditions, war between two or three nations anywhere on the globe may bring to any other nation whose vital transport and trade connections with the outside are suspended disasters beyond control or calculation, and thus force other nations having no part whatever in the original outbreak of hostilities into the conflict, together with the rest of the world. Under such circumstances the nation without adequate means of preserving and defending its sources of supply will lose its power to maintain for its people decent standards of existence, its power to preserve them from ultimate economic degradation, and its power to retain its own independent identity.

The possession of that power is the surest safeguard of a nation against war. The possession of such power by the United States is the surest safeguard of the world against war. In a protective and defensive system adapted to such an objective lies the chief hopes of the peace, the security, and the happiness, not only of our country, but of mankind.

Mr. VANDENBERG obtained the floor.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Hughes	Pepper
Andrews	Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in my view the question of national defense is inevitably geared to the question of foreign policy. Therefore, at the outset of this discussion, I wish to deal generally with both, and inasmuch as I am merely seeking to present a position rather than to invite a controversy, I am going to ask what for me is the usual practice of proceeding without interruption until I shall have concluded, at which time I shall be very glad to be interrupted.

Mr. President, this is the first of the bills to sustain what are asserted to be the new needs of a vastly expanded national defense. It is the proper time, it seems to me, to address myself to the whole related subject which inevitably stems from our foreign policy itself. There should be no politics in such a contemplation or in such a discussion, and neither should there be any restraints upon frank, patriotic discussion, restraints which might conveniently but unjustly ascribe politics to dissent. When the destiny of 130,000,000 people is in issue, with peace or war at ultimate stake, we are all entitled to speak our minds and hearts. Duty will be satisfied with nothing less.

To make my own defense attitude clear, let me say at the outset, that I have voted for every regular Army and Navy appropriation bill throughout my 11 years in the Senate. I believe in thoroughly adequate defense; I believe in rational preparedness. I voted against last year's extra super-supernavy bill, however, because I did not believe a showing was made to justify it, and I particularly did not want America, while protesting simultaneously against a world naval race, to be the first Government on earth officially to set the new battleship tempo at 45,000 tons.

I voted against it because we had been told only 10 days previously that the unprecedentedly large regular naval authorization gave us everything our situation required. I voted against it, I may add, because I felt it put too much emphasis upon the capital ships and too little upon air defense. But the super-supernavy bill was passed, and now once more we are told that our action was inconclusive, that infinitely more must now be done all over again.

I readily concede that defense is a relative term to a considerable extent, and that the enormous increase elsewhere in the mechanisms of war during the past year undoubtedly requires us, at least partially, to catch up; I welcome particularly a new emphasis upon air defense in this connection; but the whole thing dramatizes the awful futility of international competition in the implements of war. It is always a stern chase; each nation pursues the other. What we did last year having been overtaken by others is the new starting point from which we must undertake more this year, and our more simply puts it up to the other fellow to equalize or exceed what we shall do. Then, next year we all start around the vicious circle all over again. It finally leads to the disintegration of civilization through bankruptcy, if not through conflict. I hope and pray that the peoples of the earth may come to their senses before it is too late, and be able to impress their governments with the conviction that agreements to limit arms are the sole defense against this final calamity, and I would wish that the Government of the United States may very emphatically keep this objective before the other governments and the other peoples of the earth.

If we have a "rendezvous with destiny," this surely is our supreme assignment.

But it is accurately said that at the moment we confront a condition, not a theory. As realists, we must take the world as it is, and not as we would wish it to be. This undoubtedly calls upon us to review our defense resources, and, however reluctantly, to make them adequate. That will be my purpose; and, reluctantly again, I do not dismiss the probability that practically everything now sought by way of additional defense may be required to make our defense resources adequate.

But, Mr. President, adequate for what? That is the controlling question. Its answer must precede all other answers to all other questions.

Adequate for what? Adequate to implement national defense in the traditional American sense of minding our own business? To that I can uncompromisingly answer, "Yes."

Adequate for what? Adequate to sustain the realities of the Monroe Doctrine in the sense that we cannot allow alien ideologies to close in upon us through Western Hemisphere approaches? Again, "Yes."

Adequate for what? To implement the President's Chicago speech which talked of quarantines and suggested the use of American sanctions against so-called "aggressor nations" on other continents? This time, "No," unless the sanctions are the deliberate and conscious order of Congress, reflecting the conviction of the whole American people.

Adequate for what? To help police the world under theories of "collective security"? Again, "No." It would leave us the residuary legatee of a responsibility which would require so vast an enginery of war that even the pending mammoth program would be wholly impotent.

Adequate for what? That, I repeat, is the key question.

Perhaps the Military Affairs Committee and the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate know and hold this key. I am not a member of either of those committees. I am merely a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, which is as much in the dark upon these matters as is the man on the street. We do not know. We are not permitted to know. These other committees have met in all the sinister mystery of secret sessions, and the information they have received is sealed against the rest of the Senate and against the country.

Mr. President, so long as our foreign policy is a conundrum, so also must be this defense program. One is geared to the other. What is intended? Whither do we trend? National defense adequate for what?

I could wish for one of two things, Mr. President, before this bill and its accompanying legislation for defense come to final roll call. I could wish for one of two things:

First. Either that the President shall state the specifications and harmonize his various discussions of the subject of foreign relations; or Second. That these bills themselves shall be first referred to the Foreign Relations Committee for a conclusive declaration of what we believe and intend to be the foreign policy of the United States which we are implementing with these "defense" bills.

The situation in which the country finds itself in respect to these matters is itself a matter of grave concern. This flows less from any actual exposure than from constant propaganda, fed through one source or another, constant propaganda that stimulates fear, invites apprehension, and may too easily precipitate some of the very troubles which it presumes to forefend.

One of the dangerous misconceptions which are taking possession of our thinking in some quarters is the notion that we can thrust ourselves into foreign quarrels and mold alien destiny by methods "short of war." That is the treacherous phrase—"short of war." We hear it in high places. We can assert ourselves in respect to the clashes and the conflicts and the conquests of other peoples, it is said, but we shall always stop "short of war."

That, Mr. President, is a deeply dangerous infatuation. Perhaps there are some things, Heaven willing, which we can do "short of war" in attempting to influence the course of events in foreign controversies which find other nations preparing to fight for their own objectives; but it is an utterly treacherous reliance. When we once assert ourselves as partisan in one of these foreign collisions of self-interest we have taken a step which may put subsequent destiny entirely beyond our own control. If we take the next step in the form of some one-sided punitive action or support we definitely are no longer in control of destiny. We may still complacently and short-sightedly tell ourselves that we intend to stop "short of war," but we are unfortunately no longer in control of these tragic traffic lights. If the answering reprisals become intolerable, we have no alternative but to resist them by force of arms. Regardless of our original intention to stop "short of war," we may too easily find ourselves plunged into war itself.

We should never take the first step, Mr. President, unless we are deliberately and consciously ready and willing to take the final step if it becomes inevitable. Otherwise we invite not only humiliation but also the complete disintegration of our international influence.

There is no such thing as a partial interference in the quarrels of other nations which can dependably stop "short of war." I am speaking not only of the application of economic sanctions, I am speaking equally of provocative speech which ignores the time-tested admonitions in Washington's Farewell Address; and I want to read again from that address:

The nation which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation prompted by ill will and resentment sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy.

Still quoting from the Farewell Address:

The government sometimes participates in the national propensity and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives.

Listen:

The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

Ah, Mr. President, this address may be 150 years old but, like the law of gravity, it is as constant in its wisdom and accuracy today as it was the day it was uttered.

I continue reading briefly from the Farewell Address:

So likewise a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without adequate inducements or justifications.

Still reading from the Farewell Address:

Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side—

And let that sink in—only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

Europe has a set of primary interests—

Still reading from the address—

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns.

That fundamentally will often be found true; in fact, almost constantly so.

Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

Mr. President, if that message had been penned last night, its words could not fall upon our ears with more significant and pertinent application at this moment. True, we do live in a foreshortened world in which, compared with Washington's day, time and space are relatively annihilated. But I still thank God for two insulating oceans; and even though they be foreshortened, they are still our supreme benediction if they be wisely and prudently used.

Let no man, let no nation mistake what I am saying. I hate many of the alien ideologies that have taken possession of certain quarters of the globe; but it is not my business or my country's business to dictate internal forms of government to other people, and that which I would resist if the situation were reversed, and aliens were attempting to undermine the institutions of my Government, I cannot reasonably embrace and invoke against others. I would resist fascism or communism in my own America to the last breath of my life. I would sustain representative democracy to the last trumpet's call. But I would not jeopardize my democracy by any halfway interference—said to be "short of war"—in the affairs of others.

I would have America mind her own business, in the spirit of Washington's Farewell Address, at least until such time as the conscious and deliberate judgment of her whole people would sanction a complete and conclusive assault upon one whom we are prepared to resist and defeat with every force at our great disposal. And let this be plain: I do not close the door upon that possible eventuality. But I would not make "partial war" on anybody. There is no such thing, in grim reality, as "partial war." I would never take the first step that puts our feet again upon the bitter road to war unless my country, speaking through the whole Congress of the United States, be consciously and deliberately ready and willing to carry this cross to its last step, whatever that may be.

It is with the theory that somehow or other, in the midst of this armed and maddened world, we can mix in foreign conflicts "short of war," that I have my quarrel at the moment. I believe this to be a viciously treacherous mode of calculation. Take the latest Gallup Poll as an example. It asked this question:

If Germany and Italy go to war against England and France, do you think we should do everything possible to help England and France win, except to go to war ourselves?

And the country answered 69 percent "Yes," 31 percent "No."

Suppose that final insulating phrase, "except to go to war ourselves," had been put into the grim reality of the thing. Suppose it had read, "even to the extent of going to war ourselves." Would 69 percent of Americans have said "Yes"? They would not. I am no crystal gazer, but I doubt if 10 percent would have said "Yes." Yet the very phraseology invoked—in keeping, to be sure, with high precedent—invites our people to believe there is such a thing as being half in and half out of these foreign troubles. I fear, Mr. President, that there is no such safety zone where a truculent Uncle Sam may stand with a chip on each shoulder and with complete assurance that no one will knock them off.

From 1914 to 1917 we discovered that preliminary aid to one belligerent is calculated finally to precipitate alliance with that same belligerent; and though our hearts then sustained that particular eventuality, it does not alter the lesson we should have learned, a lesson which most Americans have no wish to learn over again.

Any foreign power which would read ultrapacifism or congenital fear or "peace at any price" into these traditional American attitudes would be sadly disillusioned. Any foreign power which would interpret them as a weakening of our attachment to constitutional democracy, a willingness to compromise our own position and to accommodate the totalitarian idea would suffer rude awakening. We are willing and ready to fight for the life of our America whenever and wherever the life of our America is attacked or is in danger, but we shall be more formidable in these attitudes because of the restraint and temperance which will precede them. Our determination to continue unentangled, our purpose to have no part of war which is not unavoidably our own, is not a posture of weakness; it is a posture of invincibility—because we are invincible when the real defense of our America is the stake.

Recently the House of Representatives declined to permit the further development of the island of Guam under a program which, rightly or wrongly, invited the interpretation that we thus propose ultimately to extend our Pacific Ocean frontier to this far-flung speck of land thrusting toward the Far East. I hope the news story on the front page of the Washington Post the next morning, February 24, was wrong when it said:

In Navy circles defeat of the proposed Guam base in the House was being characterized as an invitation to the dictator nations to make further demands on the democracies and thereby to make war more likely.

In the first place, Mr. President, it is not the Navy's business to interpret congressional decisions. In the second place, it certainly is not the Navy's business to invite the world to an erroneous interpretation of congressional decisions. In the third place, if the Navy has done either of these things—in the present circumstance—it is guilty of a saber rattling which deserves severest condemnation. In the fourth place, it would be guilty of inviting the American people to suspect their Congress of surrendering the welfare of their country—simply because it refuses to surrender to every item in a war program which the Navy may wish to undertake.

We have a superb Navy, and I join in proudest compliments to its efficiency, its patriotism, and its zeal; but I shall never join in permitting it to make policy decisions in respect to peace and war. If that hour ever strikes, we, too, shall have delivered ourselves to the mercies of militarism—and militarism—no matter how nobly meditated or how benignly intentioned, is death to democracy.

No; the Guam decision has no such untoward implications. On the contrary, it precisely typifies this whole problem. We are entitled to weigh every item in the defense program on its merits and from the viewpoint of sound American foreign and domestic policy. We are entitled to make our decisions in the light of our own conception of our own defense necessities. If we conclude to maintain the historic American policy set down in Washington's Farewell Address, if we believe in close-knit insulation as a defense objective, other nations simply fool themselves if they put wrong interpretations upon our attitudes.

I should put it this way: We propose to consult our own safety and our own peace and to act accordingly. We have no promises to make to any other nation that we will aid them in their martial enterprises. By the same token, we have no assurances to give to yet other nations that we will not join in a resistance to conquest and freebootery. The future—speaking through the authentic voice of an American Congress, which alone possesses the final war-making power in the United States—the future will speak for itself as eventualities require. Meanwhile, we mind our own business—and that "business" at the moment is 90 percent internal, despite the potential war crises which are served up to us each morning for breakfast.

I quote an observation by the well-informed Ernest Lindley in the morning newspapers of yesterday:

The war-scare fever in Washington has been rising and falling for several months without rhythm and perhaps without much reason. As this is written it seems to be subsiding a little. Several well-informed observers—some official, others outside the Government—are beginning to take a more hopeful view of the European scene. Even some of those who do not believe that the facts justify much optimism are beginning to feel that a calmer atmosphere is desirable.

Let me repeat the final phrase:

That a calmer atmosphere is desirable.

In Washington, emphatically yes, "a calmer atmosphere is desirable." We are a long, long way from war, unless we impatiently seek it. Even though there be war in Europe or new war in Asia, still we are a long, long way from war, if we mind our legitimate insulations. Theodore Roosevelt's advice was "to speak softly and carry a big stick." No one is seriously objecting to getting a bigger and a better "stick", but "speaking softly" seems to be something else. I content myself with the Lindley admonition, "A calmer atmosphere is desirable."

Walter Lippmann wrote significantly along these same lines a few days ago. After specifically analyzing the British-French-German-Italian situation, Mr. Lippmann said:

If this is the real situation, the practical conclusion to be drawn from it is quite simple and clear. It is to keep cool; to be confident; to speak quietly and resolutely and firmly to proceed with the armament programs in Great Britain, in France, and in the United States. War is not in the least inevitable. War is not even probable provided it is made clear that no one is organizing a crusade to impose democracy on Germany and that no one of the democracies will fail to defend itself if it is attacked.

Continuing the quotation:

A purely defensive policy is not only the one which fits morally the ideals of all free peoples: it is also, as a matter of diplomacy and military strategy, the soundest and strongest policy. If the situation in Europe, particularly inside Germany, is what it appears to be, then the defensive policy—the policy of armaments without hysteria and without any entangling commitments, the diplomatic policy of nonintervention in Germany's, China's, or Spain's internal affairs, the policy of emphasizing the virtues of freedom rather than the vices of tyranny—is best calculated to save mankind from the catastrophe of another world war. And in averting a world war the liberties of men will more surely be preserved and restored than by any other conceivable method.

I read the concluding paragraph from the quotation, as follows:

The supreme fact in these days is that a world war has probably been averted, can almost surely be averted. It will not be averted by becoming frightened into provocation nor by being frightened into cowardice. It can be averted, it is being averted, by being calm, by being confident, and by being resolute.

Mr. President, I accept and repeat those final words. We must become neither frightened into provocation nor frightened into cowardice. I am not conscious of the remotest scintilla of cowardice in the attitudes which any of us would have our country take. It is not cowardice to be honestly critical of defense programs if they contain any element beyond traditional American defense. That is not cowardice. It is self-enlightened, self-serving prudence. It is not cowardice to want our America, as far as possible, to avoid the suction of this utterly suicidal international arms competition, which threatens disintegration by bankruptcy if not by war. That is simply the sanity which recognizes that a sound public credit is the keystone of all national defense; that, in this element, despite the ominous hazards of deficit-spending, we still lead the world; and that we must not sacrifice this indispensable element in the pursuit of other elements.

And it is not cowardice, Mr. President, to think of America first. It is the simplest mandate of Holy Writ:

If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel.

Our task, Mr. President, in the words I have quoted, is to be calm, confident, and resolute. I know we are resolute. I believe we have a right to be confident. I hope we also may be calm.

We all have our sympathies and our natural emotions in behalf of the victims of national or international outrage all around the globe; but we are not, we cannot be, the world's protector or the world's policeman. The price of such assignment would be the jeopardy of our own democracy. Our wise course is to be wholly neutral, unless and until it is the deliberate and conscious decision of the American people, speaking through their Congress, to be wholly unneutral—which is ultimate war. There is no safe twilight zone. There is no assurance that a course which we think of as being "short of war" will not produce war itself in spite of us—war or insufferable humiliation. Let us avoid entanglement in any chain of circumstances which may be too strong for us to break. Yes; let us be "calm" even as we are "resolute." And let the still vital, still vivid admonitions of Washington's Farewell Address continue to be the genius and the inspiration of our international relationships.

I thank the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I believe that no American citizen will disagree with the general conclusions and statements of the Senator from Michigan. I have listened to him with a great deal of interest. But there are one or two things about which I should like to ask the Senator, merely for information. I have a hard time finding out things to satisfy my own mind.

The Senator, as I understood him, believes very strongly in the principles announced by George Washington in his Farewell Address. The Senator also believes that our national defense should be adequate to defend the Monroe Doctrine. How can the Senator reconcile the principles of Washington's Farewell Address and the principles announced in the Monroe Doctrine?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think they harmonize themselves in the self-defensive eventualities of history. The defense necessities which brought about the Monroe Doctrine arose subsequently to the Farewell Address. But it does not alter, as I can see, the fundamental determination of the American people to gear their entire foreign activity to their own business, because the Monroe Doctrine is based upon our own defense needs.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree with the Senator there thoroughly. But if we had not departed at all from Washington's advice in his Farewell Address, is it not probable that even at this time we would have unfriendly nations south of us?

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is entirely possible, and I am not sure that we have not in some intimate instances, anyway.

Mr. LOGAN. I rather think perhaps that is true. There was one other matter that I did not exactly understand.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask a question?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator from Kentucky to contend that the principle of Washington's Farewell Address is in conflict with the principle of the Monroe Doctrine?

Mr. LOGAN. I would put it the other way, I may say to the Senator from Idaho, that the Monroe Doctrine is in conflict with Washington's Farewell Address.

Mr. BORAH. Thomas Jefferson, when he wrote to Monroe in regard to the Monroe Doctrine, linked the doctrine of non-entangling alliances with the Monroe Doctrine, and said in effect that each one was supplemental to the other.

Mr. LOGAN. I recall that very directly, I may say to the Senator from Idaho, but notwithstanding the greatness of Jefferson, I believe there is no American citizen, much less no Senator, who does not know that if we undertake to defend South America from the aggressions of nations of Asia or Europe that we must be entangled in some way with those nations, which is contrary to the advice given by Washington.

Mr. BORAH. I cannot agree with the Senator. The Monroe Doctrine is nothing but a doctrine of self-defense. That is all it was ever intended to be, and all it can be, and when we are carrying out the Monroe Doctrine we are defending this Nation.

Mr. LOGAN. I am glad the Senator puts it that way. I agree with that. But if these totalitarian states have determined that they are going to destroy the democracies of France and England, would not any help that we might give to France and England be in our own self-defense the same as when we give help to South America?

Mr. BORAH. I do not think so. However, if the Senator can demonstrate that our going into Europe and making an agreement results in our becoming entangled through agreement with other nations, of course he is on the sound side of his contention. What Washington advised against was entangling alliances, that is, associating ourselves politically, by agreement or understanding, with other nations, and committing ourselves to a certain course of policy through such understandings. In defending our rights in South America, and in protecting our interests by reason of invasion of South America, we enter into no entangling alliances with any nation. We have no understanding with any nation. We do not depart in the slightest from Washington's doctrine. We simply say that the invasion of that territory endangers the United States, and we defend it upon the same theory as though the port of New York were invaded. It is a matter of self-defense, and is in no way related to entangling alliances.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator from Michigan will yield, I will say to the Senator from Idaho that what is bothering me at this time is that it seems to me that France and England are just as important to the defense of the United States as is any of the South American countries. We should keep out of entangling alliances, but if we know almost certainly that France and England will be destroyed, then it seems to me that if we render assistance to them we do it in our own self-defense.

Mr. BORAH. It may be said that the people of the United States are interested in preserving some parts of Great Britain, but it is no part of our concern that Great Britain retain all her colonies and far-flung possessions, in some of which millions of people are without freedom, and remember what they are quarrelling about in Europe are lands, territory, and colonies, and not democracy.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree with the Senator in that respect. However, I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan just one question. I believe he is opposed to entangling alliances. So am I. I think Washington condemned only alliances covering a long period of time. I do not think he opposed every alliance.

I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan a question. He referred to neutrality. If it be the declared purpose and policy of some of the nations in Europe to destroy democracy, and they intend to make an attack on the democracies of Europe or of the world, does the Senator believe that neutrality calls upon us, the greatest democracy on earth, to treat the nations which are fighting to destroy democracy exactly as we would treat the nations which are fighting to preserve democracy?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to answer the Senator very frankly. If he had followed my argument he would understand that I left that question definitely open. My point is that if America is proposing to help any of the European so-called democracies it should do so openly, conclusively, and convincingly as an ally, under the conscious and deliberate decision and order of the Congress of the United States, and should not half do it through the side door or back door of some policy which is less than a definite commitment of the whole American people.

Does the Senator understand what I am trying to say?

Mr. LOGAN. Am I to understand the Senator to mean that he is against the sale by our manufacturers of airplanes and articles of that kind to England or France at the present time?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Not so long as those nations are not engaged in war and such sale is not in violation of the Neutrality Act. I fail to understand why there must be any mystifying secrecy about the French purchases of planes unless there is something involved which I do not know.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that from the information I have about the subject I do not think there is anything involved that the Senator does not know. The French came over here and bought planes. The fact was publicized throughout the United States, by front-page headlines, that France had entered into a contract to buy planes, and that England had entered into a contract to buy planes. Perhaps some of us are responsible for creating the impression that there was something mysterious about it.

Just one more question and I shall conclude.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Before the Senator leaves that point, I will say that from my point of view it is the mystery rather than the purchase which seems to be sinister.

Mr. LOGAN. As I said to the Senator—and I think I ought to explain what I meant—there really was no mystery about it that I have been able to see. The French commission came here and, after consultation with a number of officials, was sent to the division of the Treasury which knew most about the business of the country, so that it could obtain advice. The commission was sent to investigate and look over the planes. It did so and bought them.

I have listened to every word of the Senator's speech. It was an excellent speech. I do not often listen so attentively.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his patience.

Mr. LOGAN. I understood the Senator to say in his speech that he did not know what took place in the Military Affairs Committee.

It is my impression—if I am in error, I should like to be corrected—that all the evidence which was taken has been made public. I think I saw a copy of the record on my desk.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Has the testimony of the Ambassadors been published?

Mr. LOGAN. The Ambassadors were not before the Military Affairs Committee, except for a joint meeting when no hearing was in progress.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am referring to the whole general body of information, which is still locked up.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator has to depend on the newspapers for what committee members said, or what the newspapermen say they said, the Senator will be very much confused.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That source is my sole reliance. I have no other.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the speech of the Senator from Michigan is one with which probably none of us will disagree if we look only at the generalities and platitudes of that speech. No one can take issue with the Senator from Michigan in his broad outline of foreign policy. However, no one could have listened to the speech without having an idea that certain implications and insinuations may be deduced from the speech of the Senator, which I think he, in all frankness, should elucidate.

For 2 or 3 weeks it has been heralded in the press that soon the artillery would open up in the Senate on our foreign policy. I assume, of course, that the opening gun has been fired by the Senator from Michigan.

I do not take issue with the broad outlines of policy announced by the Senator from Michigan, but I ask, what is wrong? What is it that Senators are insinuating, and what are they suspicious about? The Senator has just told the Senator from Kentucky that he has no complaint about the sale of airplanes to France, a foreign government. Is there anything going on in secret that Senators have a right to know, and which they do not know?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is the Senator asking me?

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment. I shall yield presently, although the Senator would not yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I merely wanted to know whether or not the Senator wished me to answer his question.

Mr. CONNALLY. No. I shall answer the Senator.

As I understand the law, if Germany wishes to buy airplanes in America, she has a perfect right to do so. I understand she has been doing it. If England wishes to buy airplanes in America, she has had a right to do it, and no doubt she would buy them here if she thought we had the best planes. She probably does, because she has been buying them here. If France wishes to buy them here, our manufacturers are prepared to supply her needs.

What is the point, then, about this whole question? The Senator from Michigan has delivered a speech on the bill, but he has not told us how he intends to vote on it. He spoke for an hour on the bill, and yet he did not tell us whether he was for it or against it. He says that the bill ought first to have been submitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the Navy bill ought to be submitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which the Senator from Michigan is a distinguished member, should give its advice and counsel with regard to these measures before they are enacted.

From the trend of the Senator's speech I assume that he believes that Congress ought to undertake to direct and control the foreign policy and the foreign intercourse of the United States of America.

Mr. President, the history of America demonstrates the fallacy in any such assumption. During the War of the Revolution, when there was no central government except the Continental Congress, it made a muddle of our foreign affairs. However, in 1778 it did bring about an alliance with France, which very largely aided us in winning the War of the Revolution. However, such a policy was a failure. Committees of Congress could not properly conduct the foreign affairs of the Colonies.

Again, Senators know that under the Articles of Confederation the foreign relations of the United States were poorly handled. They did the best they could, but we all know that under the Constitution, as Congress has interpreted it and as we have lived under it for almost a hundred and fifty years, the responsibility for the conduct of the foreign relations of the United States, in their essence, must rest in the Chief Executive of the Nation.

The ambassadors he sends abroad are but his servants and agents. Senators and others may say, "Oh, that is too much power to give one man"; but we do not have to answer for that, because the Constitution gives the President that power. It is one of those powers which have got to rest somewhere, and a unified conduct of foreign affairs can only be accomplished properly by the Chief Executive of the Nation.

Senators may say the President may do something we do not want him to do. Of course, that is so; he may do something, in the discharge of any of the high functions of his office, which we do not like; but so long, Mr. President, as he is within the boundaries of his jurisdiction, the Senate and the House of Representatives have no more right to intervene and interfere than he has a right to invade this Chamber and assume functions that belong to the Senate. To both those things the Senator from Texas is opposed. The President cannot declare war; the Congress alone can declare war. Only the Members of the House of Representatives and the United States Senate, who come here bearing the commissions of their own electorates, can declare war. It is true that any President who might so desire, through impure motives, through corruption, through lack of patriotism, might conspire to bring about a situation from which it would be difficult for Congress to recede; but I cannot conceive of any man who has ever been President of the United States or who, in the course of human events, may ever in the future become President of the United States, becoming such a traitor to his own people and his own country as that he would deliberately, for any selfish or corrupt or impure motive, bring about a situation that would force the United States to embark upon war. If such there ever be, let him be pilloried even higher than was Benedict Arnold.

Congress and Congress alone can declare war. I want to say to the Senator from Michigan and to other Senators who are present that we shall never enter a war by the declaration of any Congress until that Congress believes, at least, that the sentiment of America favors war. Congress is not going to plunge this great and mighty Nation into any armed conflict through any caprice or any idea or particular inclination of its own. We are not ever going to take that step until we are firmly convinced that the people of America feel that our national interests and the protection of our territory or our people or, I will add, our institutions require that we draw the sword. It has ever been so in the past. Every foreign war that this Nation has fought has been declared only after the people of the Nation gave evidence of the desire that we embark on that war.

Mr. President, what is all this noise about? What is all this newspaper comment about the foreign policy of the United States? What does the President say is his foreign policy? I ask the attention of the Senator from Michigan. I listened to his announcement of his foreign policy; but in the generalities, in the broad outlines of his statement, in his rounded phrases and oratorical flourishes I could not distinguish any difference between his policy enunciated in the speech and that calm statement of the President.

The Senator from Michigan invoked blessings of one of our great newspaper correspondents, who said we were not going to have any war if we shall act in calmness. He invoked calmness on everybody except himself. He is now more disturbed about this matter, I believe, than is anybody else in the Senate.

What does the President of the United States say about our foreign policy? What is that foreign policy? Here is the statement he gave to the press. I am sure the Senator from Michigan read it. He gave the press representatives this statement of policy; and if anybody wants to dispute it, I yield time for him so to do.

We are against any entangling alliances, obviously.

That is the language of the President of the United States. Does anybody dispute that statement? Oh, some may say that "entangling alliances" is a general term; that it does not mean much. Well, it means just as much when the President of the United States uses it as it does when those who assail him use it. What do Senators who are complaining of the conduct of our foreign policy mean when they say we are against any entangling alliances? They are no more definite, they are no more certain, they are no more meticulous in pointing out what they mean than is the statement of the President that "We are against any entangling alliances, obviously." I hear no dissent to that.

They quote the language of Washington in his Farewell Address. Of course, we do not quarrel with that announcement of policy of General Washington; yet we know that after he delivered his Farewell Address, in 1797, when this Government was threatened with becoming embroiled in war with France and, perhaps, with Great Britain, General Washington was called back from his retreat at Mount Vernon, had the title of lieutenant general conferred upon him, and was to take command of the military forces of this Nation in the war which it was then thought was imminent with France.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Reference has been made today to the Farewell Address of Washington, and emphasis has been placed upon the fact that he advised us against entangling alliances. Will the Senator permit me to read a paragraph from the address which I think is very appropriate?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to have the Senator's interpretation of it, and also to have the interpretation of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who, I observe, is not at the moment on the floor. After a somewhat general discussion of the theme, on page 33 of the pamphlet which was read the other day, Washington said:

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But, in my opinion, it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

In discussing the Farewell Address of Washington, emphasis is always laid upon his admonition against permanent alliances, but nothing is rarely, if ever, said about his suggestion that we may depend upon temporary alliances in time of emergency. What is the Senator's interpretation, if he is at liberty to give it, of the distinction that was in Washington's mind when he cautioned as against permanent alliances, which, as I understand, are long-term alliances somewhat like the two alliances that were set up in Europe before the World War, the Triple Entente and the Triple Alliance, which were permanent arrangements for the preservation of the balance of power in Europe? Our cooperation in that war 20 years ago was not an alliance; we had no alliances with any of the nations of Europe; we did not enter that war as a result of any alliance. We entered it, as we thought and as I now still think, in defense of our own rights, and we cooperated with the Allies in the prosecution of the war, but our action did not result in an alliance. Would the Senator, if he feels at liberty so to do, advise me and the Senate what he believes Washington had in his mind at the time he drew that distinction between permanent and temporary alliances?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me so that I may ask the Senator from Kentucky a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I should prefer first to answer the question, but I yield.

Mr. BONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he regards the last temporary alliance which we had, which has cost us at least fifty or sixty billion dollars up to the present time and perhaps will cost us a hundred billion dollars before we are through paying for it, and which also cost us an army of dead and insane, and brought about communism, bolshevism, fascism, and the Nazi philosophy as the sort of temporary alliance he thinks Washington had in mind?

Mr. BARKLEY. I just said that that was not even a temporary alliance.

Mr. BONE. How would the Senator characterize this last alliance that cost us in the fashion I have suggested?

Mr. BARKLEY. An answer to that would, I think, be entirely beside the question which I am trying to get at, namely, the interpretation of the passage quoted from Washington's Farewell Address. As I said, we did not have any alliance with England, France, or Italy; we did not enter the war as a result of an alliance; but after we got into it, because of conditions which existed after it began, we cooperated with those nations. That, however, was not an alliance. I should like to have the Senator from Texas, if it will not divert him, give me his interpretation of the statement I have read from the Farewell Address.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator and shall try to answer his question. According to the view of the Senator from Texas, to which I adverted a while ago, a great deal depends upon the adjective "entangling" in connection with the noun "alliances." General Washington no doubt had in mind that it would be unwise for the United States to negotiate secret treaties of alliance with any particular nation or any group of nations by which they would be bound one to the other to support each other, no matter what occurred, no matter what the issue that might arise. That was the case in Europe before the World War. There were the Triple Entente and the Triple Alliance, and it was understood that, through secret agreements and arrangements, they were leagued together almost as a unit and that when one of those nations would become embroiled in war, regardless of what the issue might be, it would become the duty of the others to respond with their armies and navies and all their resources.

There might be alliances of a political character. There might be alliances of a military character. There might be alliances to maintain certain forms of government, certain monarchies in Europe, from all of which General Washington wanted to flee, because they were entangling. That is why they were entangling. They were not limited to one particular transaction. They were not limited to one particular war. If we had only one incident in which we might act with another government, that would not be entangling, because when the occasion for action with them passed away the alliance would no longer subsist. That is what I had in mind a moment ago when, for instance, in the World War, we were associated with England and France and other nations; but we had no alliance. We simply had a common enemy, and, like wise generals and wise soldiers, we acted in conjunction to try to vanquish the common enemy; but when the war was over there was no alliance. Even in connection with the peace treaty the United States did not act in conjunction with Great Britain and France and their representatives in the peace council. Their views were divergent. Of course, the treaties finally were supposed to represent agreement, yet the United States was not tied. It was not leagued. It was not bound to any nation of Europe. When peace came and the enemy was vanquished, our alliance, by the very nature of things, came to an end. Is that what the Senator from Kentucky had in mind?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that is what I had in mind. I do not think, by any stretch of legal terminology, what happened in 1917 to 1918 or 1919 could have been described as an alliance.

Mr. CONNALLY. Not at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was a fortuitous combination of circumstances which associated a number of nations together in a common enterprise.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. BARKLEY. But there was nothing that bound us to stay in for any given length of time, nothing that bound us to the terms of settlement when the war should end; and, of course, as history transpired, we were not bound to enter and did not enter into any engagements as the result of that war.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that, of course, it was not an alliance. We had no treaty except through conversations as to joint action. It is just as if the Senator from Kentucky were going downtown to a department in a taxicab, and I also wanted to go to the same department in a taxicab, and we both got in the same taxicab instead of having two. That is all there was about the World War. We were both fighting Germany and Austria and their allies, and it became good common sense for both of us to fight as one army rather than to scatter all around over the face of the earth without any harmony of action. That was the issue, and that was the only issue; and the critics of this administration, and even the critics of Mr. Wilson, have never charged that after the war was over we continued in any sort of alliance, open or secret, with the allied powers of Europe.

Mr. President, nobody disagrees, then, with the first chapter; and I should be glad if the Senator from Michigan would give audience. I want him to know what the President's policy is, if he has not read it. I shall read it to him now, and I ask him whether he disagrees with it.

Second. We are in favor of maintenance of world trade for everybody—all nations—including ourselves.

I assume that nobody will dispute that policy. That simply means that every nation has a right on the highways of the sea. They have equal rights. We stand for that policy.

I hear no dissent to that. I hear no audible dissent and I see no inaudible dissent from the expression of features or things of that kind.

Third. We are in complete sympathy with any and every attempt made to reduce or limit armaments.

The Senator from Michigan says the primary duty of America is to limit armaments. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas heartily agrees to that theory—that theory—that theory; but what has been the practice? The Senator from Texas was a Member of the House of Representatives when we had the Disarmament Conference of 1922, and he was the author of an amendment urging that that conference be called. It was called, and we brought about an agreement; and what was the result of that agreement? Why, Senators know the result. Senators know that as a result of that agreement the United States junked some of its finest and best fighting material, naval equipment. We were pretty well outraded.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, the able Senator from Texas would not do that again, would he? The Senator would not again favor sinking our ships, or at any other time, I take it.

Mr. CONNALLY. No. That is just what I am going to say. I believe in the theory. That is why I accented awhile ago the word "theory." I am in favor of disarmament in theory, but I am not in favor of it in practice as we have practiced it heretofore.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am glad to hear the Senator from Texas has changed his mind. I opposed the sinking of the $40,000,000 capital ship Washington, and all the other ships, costing hundreds of millions of good American dollars, sunk by men in high office who now, one by one, are admitting their serious, terrible mistake. It was a terrible blunder. I favor an American fleet sailing the surface of the seas and guarding our coasts. I do not favor any policy which sinks our ships to the bottom of the ocean.

Mr. CONNALLY. We were moved by a lofty idealism. We were willing to scrap battleships if other nations did likewise in behalf of peace. If the other nations would all disarm, fine. I am reminded, however, that the other nations of the world are somewhat like a historic example.

It is related that the great Bob Toombs, a brigadier general in the Confederate Army and a former Member of Congress, was one of the fire-eaters in the South before the War between the States. As the war was coming on he boasted that his people from Georgia and elsewhere in the South could whip the Yankees with cornstalks. After the war was over, and Toombs was again a candidate for public office, one of his friends twitted him. He said, "Look here, Bob, you told us that we could whip the Yankees with cornstalks. What about it?" "Well," Toombs said, "now, look here, old friend, we could have done it, but they would not fight us with cornstalks." [Laughter.]

If all the nations of the earth would disarm tomorrow, we could disarm tomorrow because we probably would have more cornstalks than they would have, and we could fight them with cornstalks, but, unfortunately, they are not willing to fight with cornstalks. I conjure the Senator from Michigan to look around over the world. He says that because we are going to pass this little Army bill, authorizing the expenditure of $300,000,000—just $300,000,000; there it is, $300,000,000 for the whole Army of the United States—somebody, somewhere, somehow, is going to conclude that we are about to form an entangling alliance and bring about a world war.

Why, Mr. President, this bill authorizes the expenditure of $300,000,000 to do what? Simply to provide some airplanes. George Washington did not say anything about airplanes in his Farewell Address [laughter]; but if George Washington were here today, and if he were to walk into the Senate Chamber, in view of airplane development and in view of battleship development and in view of mobile artillery in the form of mechanized motor-propelled cannon and other artillery, what would George Washington say? He would not say, "Here; appropriate some money for some old muskets." He would not say, "Give me some of those old muskets that we used at the Battles of Brandywine and Long Island and Yorktown." George Washington would say, "Get the best and the most modern equipment that you can buy to defend the United States"; and this is what Gen. George Washington would say.

I again conjure the attention of the Senator from Michigan. He ought to read all that George Washington said. "A little learning is a dangerous thing," even for statesmen. Read it all when you read it. This is what George Washington said:

Among the many interesting objects that will engage your attention—

The attention of Congress—that of providing for the common defense will merit—

What kind of regard? Not just ordinary regard, not just casual regard, but—will merit particular regard.

Particular regard!

To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace.

The Senator from Michigan says he wants peace, and I believe he does. God knows I want peace. God knows I hope this country may never again be plunged into any kind of a war. I do not want to see our soil reddened with the blood of our sons. I do not want to see our resources drained. I do not want to see misery and horror and destruction stalk through this land of ours, or through any foreign land. Therefore, I want peace. George Washington says the way to have the peace which all of us want is to be ready to secure that kind of peace by being prepared. I imagine that when General Washington said that, as the first President of this Nation, his mind perhaps looked back yonder to Valley Forge, where he spent a terrible winter with a little starving army, with a lot of inadequate weapons, with ragged soldiers who had insufficient shoes, assailed not only by the threat of the enemy but by the storms and the snow and the sleet. I imagine General Washington was thinking, "If I had been prepared, if we had had better weapons and more food and more clothing, if we had been prepared for the Revolutionary War, we would have ended it not away off yonder in 1781 at Yorktown but perhaps in 1777 or 1778."

I invite the attention of the Senator from Michigan to these wise words of George Washington.

Mr. President, something has been said here about foreign ideologies, foreign totalitarian states, and foreign democracies. I am supporting the pending bill, not with any idea that we are getting ready to go out and attack any nation. It is none of our concern the kind of government Germany has; it is none of our concern the kind of government France has. We would prefer that they had governments like our own; but that is their business. We have never undertaken to tell Japan that it should not have an emperor. In the old days we never told Russia that it should not have a czar. We do not tell Italy today that it shall not have a king. Of course, we would prefer that all the nations of the earth embraced the democratic doctrine of self-government, under constitutions which guaranteed the rights of representative government, the rights of individuals, the rights of courts, and the rights of citizens under governments of law and of order. But after all, while Germany has a perfect right to have whatever kind of government she wants, while England has the same right, France has the same right, and Italy has the same right; when they leave the boundaries of their governments it then becomes the concern of the United States of America, and if any of these governments should be found to be infiltrating their influences into South or Central America for the purpose of stirring up insurrections there for the establishment of their systems in Central or South America,

I then agree heartily with the distinguished Senator from Idaho that, under the Monroe Doctrine, it would become our national duty to tell them that they must get out and stay out.

Mr. Monroe, I believe it was on the 2d day of December 1823, gave to the world that great document, the Monroe Doctrine. It had the hearty support of Mr. George Canning, who was then the foreign minister of Great Britain. Mr. Canning did not want to see the Spanish power grow up again in South and Central America. Most of these South American and Central American countries had achieved their independence from Spain; but Spain entertained ambitions of reconquest, and it convinced and persuaded the then Holy Alliance, consisting of the Emperors of Russia, Prussia, and Austria, to aid its ambitions. This association of great military powers in Europe was proposing to aid Spain in the reconquest of South America and the reerection there of the institutions of monarchy.

Mr. Monroe knew that such a thing would be a direct threat, a direct attack, upon the safety of republican government in North America. Mr. Canning, the great Englishman, did not want to see the power of Spain rebuked; he did not want to see monarchy again erected in Central and South America; and it was largely through the support of Canning and the British Government that Mr. Monroe's policy was accepted in Europe, though many of the governments complained secretly of its announcement.

The Monroe Doctrine is just as good today as it was 115 years ago. So America, while not becoming entangled with foreign countries, America, while not wanting war with any nation, has a primary duty; and I ask the attention of the Senator from Michigan at this point. The Senator said the primary duty of America, our primary duty, was to get the rest of the nations to disarm. I answer him, the primary duty of the American people is to be prepared to defend ourselves, not alone our persons, not alone our property, if need be, not alone our territory, but our institutions. We have the right in America to have the kind of government and the kind of institutions which we prefer, and any assault upon that conception is an assault upon things which ought to be as dear as life itself, and dearer, of course, than property and material resources.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the pending bill. We have moved a long way since George Washington and Valley Forge. We have to have airplanes because other nations have them. They have developed into one of the greatest offensive weapons known to man. They are valuable not only for offense but for defense. They are valuable for observation and scouting purposes, and today, in 1939, no nation on earth which has an armed force would even dare to undertake to conduct a war without airplane equipment.

Why should our action be construed as a threat against any nation? If it is, whom are we threatening? If we prepare for an expenditure of only $300,000,000 on airplanes and aircraft guns and other military equipment, we are charged with having made a threat against some nation. What of the great military powers? Whom are they threatening? They do not maintain their armies and their navies for domestic purposes, do they? They have armies and navies with which to fight some nation, if necessary, and whom do they fight? As a rule, they fight the nation they think they can whip the quickest and the easiest. If anyone does not believe that, I invite him to look at the case of Ethiopia; I invite him just to turn his gaze eight or ten thousand miles to the west and consider China.

Ah, Senators, the armies and the navies of powers which are ambitious, of powers which are aggressors, of powers which love conquest, of powers which are dominated by men whose vaulting ambition reaches the stars—those armies and those navies are to fight some nation when they get ready to fight. We may be that one. I do not know. I pray God America may not be that one. But we are rich in soil, we are rich in resources, we have great seacoasts, we have many things to which the cupidity and the desire for loot of human beings might well be attracted.

It is said, however, that we are protected by two great oceans, that we are in no danger, that we have the Atlantic on the east and the Pacific on the west, that we can just sit calmly here at home and we do not need any Navy, we do not need any Army, that the Atlantic is going to protect us on the east and the Pacific will protect us on the west.

Mr. President, an ocean is no longer a protection. An ocean merely affords a paved highway, a four-way highway, for the navies and the armed forces of foreign governments if they want to attack us. They do not have to climb any mountains in order to come across the sea. They do not have to go through any forests or swamps or morasses in order to reach us. They simply get out on the ocean with a good navy and steam right up to our coasts and attack us if they desire to. The same that is true of the Atlantic is true of the Pacific. Six thousand miles of ocean, yes; 6,000 miles of ocean, but not a defense as substantial as the paper I hold in my hand, because a potential enemy can come across it, and with its mother ships, can bring airplanes within striking distance of the coast of the United States.

Talk about being defended by two oceans; the only way we can defend ourselves with two oceans, Mr. President, is by having a navy good enough and strong enough to dominate two oceans. We ought to have an unbeatable navy. That is the kind of a navy the Senator from Texas favors. The Senator from Michigan told the Senate a little while ago that he voted against the last naval bill. He was for it, but—Whenever I hear a man make an argument of an hour and a half or 2 hours in favor of some principle and then say "but, but," and vote the other way, I know there is something wrong either with his ratiocination or his rationalization.

I voted for the Navy bill at the last session. I believe that the United States ought to have the finest and the most superb navy that floats on the seven seas. I believe that, not because I want to see a war, not because I want the United States to attack any other country, because God knows I do not. We have enough country to keep most of us busy for the rest of our natural lives. We do not want a foot of foreign territory, we do not want a mile of any country under the sun except our own land. But by the same token, while we shall never take another foot of land by conquest, I am not ready to give up a single inch of American territory to any conqueror or any aggressor on the face of the earth. In order that we may be able to defend such a principle, I want this Government to have the best navy we can possess, so that instead of an enemy landing on the Atlantic coast we can destroy him away out beyond Bermuda before he ever sees the American coast.

I want a navy sufficiently large to keep the enemy away from our shores so we will not have to rely on the Army alone to protect San Francisco; I want a navy that can defend the Pacific coast, that will chase the enemy back even before they get to Hawaii.

While I do not care much about Guam—I do not think it amounts to a great deal—I see no objection to the United States spending money at Guam in deepening the harbor and, if it wants to, fortify Guam. To whom does Guam belong? It is ours, is it not? It belongs to us, does it not? Whose business is it, then, what we do with it?

Talk about Japan. Is not Japan armed? Is she not now with bloody hands and bombing planes and other weapons assailing a nation which lies helpless and broken and shattered? We are afraid we are going to hurt her feelings. Let me tell you about Japan. We do not need to hurt her feelings. When she makes up her mind that she can whip the United States and she takes the notion to do it, she is going to attempt to do it, whether Guam is fortified or whether Guam is not fortified.

Mr. President, I hope no Senator will conclude that I believe in war or that I want a war. God knows, I do not want any war. I have an only son. Not for his sake alone, but for the sake of all the sons of America, I pray God we may never have to send these young men from training camps or from their peaceful pursuits out upon the red battlefields.

I do not want the homes of America desolated. I do not want to witness wreck and ruin either here in America or abroad. But we cannot control that. If there be forces loose in the world—and there are—if there be people who have a spirit of aggression in their hearts, if there be great military or political masters who seek to build up their own greatness by conquest, and by attacks on foreign nations, we cannot help that. The only answer that we can make to them is, "We want no war with you. We want no quarrel with you. But if you do provoke us into a quarrel, if you do assail us, if you attack our territory, if you attack our institutions here at home by infiltrating among our people your spies and your emissaries and your secret societies that do not believe in the American form of government, and seek to beguile our own people into following a foreign allegiance, worship a foreign flag, we shall say: 'If you assail us, if you attack us, we are going to protect ourselves with all the means of which we have command.'"

Mr. President, I shall vote for this bill through no spirit of truculency. I do not want to threaten anybody over the world. I do not want another foot of territory. I do not want this Nation to go down in history as a great militaristic power and an aggressor nation. But we know there are aggressors. And when there are aggressors they show a lack of consideration of the rights of others, and the only standard that keeps an aggressor from attacking another power is either that he is afraid that he cannot triumph over him or he does not care for his possessions.

So, Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Michigan and other Senators who have been making certain insinuations in the press, making implications—What is wrong with the foreign policy of the United States? What has the President done to bring us toward war? What has the Congress done to bring us toward war?

Mr. President, they say we ought to have everything public; that there is some secrecy. A great big noise was made about the secret purchase of airplanes by France. That matter has all been made public. I dare say anyone could have found out all they wanted to know about it at the time, because the French Government had been buying airplanes here right along. So after the secrecy was all over we asked what was wrong with it? The Senator from Michigan says there was nothing wrong with it.

Mr. President, is it simply a spirit of curiosity? Is it simply a spirit of trying to pry into the President's councils? Is it simply an anxiety to listen at a keyhole to see what is taking place? And after you have learned what it is, is it found to be entirely innocent and there is no harm in it at all.

Mr. President, it is impossible to conduct foreign relations in all of their angles and in all of their aspects out on the front porch. When the President of the United States appoints ambassadors he gives them instructions. When the ambassadors receive those instructions, would you have them printed in all the newspapers, or have have them cabled over to the country to which the ambassador is accredited, and before the ambassador arrives, have the foreign country to which he is going know all about what he is going to do and what he is going to say?

Mr. President, I dare say that there are moments when in conducting his correspondence the Senator from Michigan himself closes the door and no one is in the room but himself and his secretary. Does he invite everyone in Michigan to occupy a place in the gallery while he is dictating his correspondence; while he is transacting his business? I dare say not. There are certain things which have to be conducted, if they are conducted at all, in secrecy.

The American people have never in recent years, at least not in my time that I know of, been denied knowledge of any important governmental transaction by the President of the United States. I refer not alone to Mr. Roosevelt but Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Hoover and Mr. Harding and Mr. Wilson. No one has ever, so far as I know, charged that these men ever broke faith with their country and carried on any secret negotiations that were not finally communicated to the people of the United States.

Mr. President, in conclusion let me say to the Senator from Michigan that for years foreign countries have bought all sorts of machinery here in the United States, including automobiles. No one pays any attention to that. Yet because they bought a few airplanes we have all of this ruction, and commotion, and stir, and excitement.

I am supporting this bill because I take it to be one of my duties here as an humble Member of this body, representing millions of people. If they are going to be defended by adequate armies and adequate navies, they cannot create them themselves. If it is to be done, it has to be done by the Senate and the House of Representatives, and as one of the Members of this body I regard it as my duty to vote for adequate national defense.

The Senator from Michigan makes a great turn—and I am anxious about this—he makes a great turn about what “adequate” means. He says that if it is adequate to do this thing, why, that is all right. If it is adequate to do something else, he answers, “yes.” But if “adequate” means something else, then he says “no,” and if it means something else, then he says “no.”

I will tell Senators what “adequate” means, according to my mind. Adequate means a force big enough, strong enough, good enough to defend ourselves successfully. I never did believe that it was the wise thing to have an army just big enough to get licked. [Laughter.] I do not believe we should spend hundreds of millions of dollars for a navy only to find when war comes that it is just big enough to be defeated by an enemy navy, and then have to say, “Well, we mighty near licked them. We mighty near licked them.”

I do not mean that we should all the time keep a standing army big enough for war purposes. Nobody believes that. But you cannot build a navy in a moment. You have got to have a navy ready. That is why I believe in building up the finest one that floats around upon this revolving globe of ours.

What about an army? You can have a regular army of sufficient size to train an adequate force, to be an aid in the organization and equipment of the reserves, of the National Guard, the citizens' military training camps, and the R. O. T. C., and other units, with the view of sending out throughout the civilian population bright young men capable in time of war to become officers, and to train the great mass of unorganized reserves which we in time of war would have to call to the colors.

We remember the lessons of the World War. We finally then, after a little over a year, got into the field as fine an Army as was ever gathered under the flag of this Republic or any other flag. But it took over a year to do it. We did not have sufficient officers trained. We had to wait for the training camps to turn them out. One of the War Department's proposals before us now has to do with the maintenance of its reserves. We have nearly 100,000 young officers now out through the country, in all kinds of lines of endeavor, who belong to the Army Reserve. The purpose is that when war comes they will be potential officers, able and willing to train the great mass of reserves that we shall call.

So, Mr. President, “adequate” means adequate. It ought to mean the same in Michigan as it means in Texas. It ought to mean the same in every part of the Republic as it means in this Chamber. George Washington knew what “adequate” meant. In the Battle of Brandywine he knew that he did not have an adequate army and he had to retreat. In the Battle of Germantown he knew what “adequate” meant. He found he did not have an adequate army and he had to retreat. In the Battle of Long Island he found that he did not have an adequate army and he had to retreat. He had to go into winter quarters above New York City, bottled up, as it were, and later to Valley Forge.

Finally, however, when he had an army that he thought was adequate, he quit retreating. He became the pursuer. He stood his ground. He bottled up Cornwallis at Yorktown, and, with an adequate force, with proper armament, he vanquished the armies of a king and ran up the standard of a great people.

Mr. President, I shall vote for this bill for adequate defense of the territory, the lives, the liberties, the governmental institutions, and the culture of the United States of America.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, it is true that the Father of his Country, George Washington, did bottle up the British at Yorktown in the State of Virginia. However, I rise at this hour to say that if it had not been for the patriots of my great State of North Carolina there never would have been a Yorktown, because it was at King's Mountain, in the State of North Carolina, where the Revolutionary patriots of my State were joined by the frontiersmen from the political subdivision of Tennessee and by the patriots of my sister State of South Carolina, that the Redcoats were defeated and turned northward to Richmond. From there they went southward to Yorktown, in Virginia. Had it not been for North Carolinians, tourists who today visit that section of historic Virginia would not be interested in visiting the old Moore farmhouse, wherein the articles of surrender were drafted one night for the signature of Cornwallis the next morning.

I have listened with much interest to my distinguished colleague from the State of Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and I am thoroughly in accord with what he says in reference to keeping our powder dry. I am particularly in accord with what he says with regard to the development of our forces in the air. Here let me pause to remind my colleagues again that had it not been for North Carolina, the probabilities are that the nations of the world today, particularly France and Great Britain, would not now be interesting themselves in the difficult problem of airplanes. At Kitty Hawk, N. C., 35 years ago, occurred the first successful flight of a mechanically driven airplane carrying a weight equal to or in excess of that of the body of a man. So I am happy that my distinguished friend has provided me the opportunity to rise upon the floor of the Senate and again bring to the attention of the American people North Carolina's part in the development of the world itself.

Mr. President, I am not concerned with the problem of our being assailed or attacked by enemies from without. However, like my colleague from the State of Texas, I believe that we should at all times keep our powder dry, and that we should be prepared to repulse an attack made upon us by any nation upon the face of the earth.

However, the danger we are experiencing today is that of destruction from within. Through the columns of one of the local newspapers which has within the hour been handed to me, I observe that while we in the United States are talking about war, and doubtless are giving more attention to war than is any other section of the world, in Europe today the thoughts are of peace. I have in mind the fact that a settlement has been made of the internal affairs of historic Spain, which is attributable to the successful conquest of Franco. I observe that both France and Great Britain are expected to give recognition to the government of Franco. After the battles which have been raging in Spain since July 1936 in which, unfortunately, more than 1,000,000 persons have been killed, France, which contributed everything she possibly could to the side of the Loyalists, is one of the very first nations of the world to accord recognition to the Franco form of government. A few days ago I ventured to predict upon the floor of the Senate that immediately after the downfall of those opposing the progress of Franco, Great Britain would be the very first nation to recognize his conquest. So it has come to pass. As I have stated, both the French and the British today have made recognition, or at least are preparing to make recognition of the Franco government. Let me state in passing, Mr. President, that I think the United States of America should also make recognition of the Franco form of government.

We are thoroughly interested in the protection of our shores through the utilization of the airplane. At this hour we are interested in the question of the construction of 6,000 additional airplanes. The airplane having annihilated both time and space, of necessity we have extended our outposts, or at least desire to do so, both into the Pacific and into the Atlantic.

Speaking of outposts, I reflect upon the statement which was made several days ago by a Member of this body to the effect that in order to provide proper protection for the Atlantic shores of America and for the Panama Canal we should establish additional outposts in the West Indies. In the Pacific, as will be recalled, we have sufficient outposts in the form of the Hawaiian Islands. In the north we are now establishing outposts along the coastal sections of Alaska, an American Territory. However, on the other side of our continent, unfortunately, we are not provided with outposts in the North Atlantic.

Mention has been made of our participation in the World War, and incidentally mention was made a moment ago of the fact that in order to help our allies, Great Britain and France, we contributed more than 37,000 lives, and to date have contributed more than $67,000,000,000. I wish to say that in the development of our outposts in the Atlantic we should now take seriously into consideration the development of outposts in the North Atlantic, where we have none at the present time.

According to the World Almanac, Great Britain is indebted to us in principal and interest, taking into consideration the shaving that we gave to that indebtedness immediately following the settlement of the World War controversies, in the sum of approximately $5,437,000,000. Apparently Great Britain does not intend to make an effort, serious or otherwise, to liquidate that obligation. As I have stated, she is in a financial position to liquidate that debt, because we read from day to day that during her program of rearmament she has voted the expenditure of $7,500,000,000.

Despite the fact that we know she can pay, we know at the same time that she is not going to pay in cash as the indebtedness was contracted. So I have to suggest to the representatives of the British Empire that Great Britain pay us something on account; and, in view of the fact that we are getting ready to establish outposts in the Atlantic, I again suggest that Great Britain arrange to turn over to us Nassau, Bimini, and Bermuda; Bermuda being off the coast of North Carolina approximately a distance of about 500 miles. In addition to that, I suggest that Great Britain turn over to us or arrange to convey to us Newfoundland; and, in addition to that, let her convey to us a strip of Labrador. Some one might ask, "What is the use of doing that? We will never have any difficulty with Great Britain." Well, we have had two wars with Great Britain. One can never tell. Our friend today may become our enemy tomorrow.

Insofar as France is concerned, in view of the fact that we are preparing to spend more money to the south, particularly in South America, I suggest that France might be called upon to make delivery to us of her possession in South America, French Guiana; and, in addition to that, she might arrange to turn over to us a couple of small islands which she has in the North Atlantic, which are to be found between Newfoundland and Labrador. Let these countries make payment to us before we start making any sort of effort to relieve and save the world for the sort of democracy they have over and beyond the blue waters of the Atlantic.

I believe in adequate national defense; I believe it helps toward peace. Of course George Washington, the Father of his Country, not only in his Farewell Address but in many of his other state addresses and conversations with prominent men of the day, advised by all means that we stay clear of any and all foreign entanglements, for the reason that they might lead us into serious trouble. In addition to our staying clear of any foreign entanglements, I am thoroughly of the opinion that we should be prepared at all times to meet the aggressions of any nation that might be so bold as to proceed across either the Atlantic to the east or the Pacific to the west.

Despite the fact that I know and all others who are well-informed likewise know, that no nation now is going to attempt an invasion of our shores, it is well always, as I have said, for us to keep our powder dry and to continue the development of our defenses, so that if ever the time arrives we will be there with the implements of war and the machines for the protection of the people of our country.

Mr. President, in speaking of foreign relations and foreign affairs, I make the statement without hesitation that, in my humble opinion, there will be no general war in Europe this year, but at the same time, regardless of what may happen over there, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] stated so ably a moment ago in his address—and I was delighted to hear him make the statement upon the floor of the Senate—it is none of the business of the people of the United States of America what sort of government they have in Germany or what sort of government they have in Spain or in any other country in the world. I repeat that if Uncle Sam wants to stay out of war he had better keep his nose clean and avoid involvement in the domestic and internal affairs of the other nations of the world. I am firmly convinced that the people of America share with me 100 percent that view and idea as to what should be the attitude of the United States of America. I think that we should keep clear of any entanglements of any sort that might tend to bring trouble to our shores.

In a newspaper published today I observe the headlines, "Loyalists may flee in United States battleships." I should like to ask those in charge of what concern to the United States of America is the means of transportation by which loyalists in Spain are to make flight from dangerous shores? I say that it is none of the business of the United States of America, and that we should keep our skirts clean and our ships away from those shores. It is none of the business of our country to see that certain of the loyalists, whose lives perhaps may be imperiled, leave the shores of Spain, a country which today was fully conquered, according to the reports in the press, by Franco.

Mr. President, in reference to Guam, I am very happy, indeed, to note that the House of Representatives refused to endorse an appropriation of $5,500,000 for the purpose of making certain improvements in Oriental waters, Guam, a little bit of an island, 30 miles long and from 3 to 5 miles wide, about 6,500 miles away from the shores of the United States of America and thousands of miles beyond our sphere, perhaps, some day may be coveted by those whom we do not like, those with whom we may at some time have difficulty. In view of the fact that we are now endeavoring in certain places to economize, to cut down expenditures, to save some money, I say that, in my opinion, it is downright foolishness to make an expenditure of millions of dollars on an island thousands upon thousands of miles away from the shores of America, when, as a matter of fact, in the first place, if our outposts in the Pacific Ocean extended only to the Hawaiian Islands, that, in my opinion, would be quite sufficient, but we must remember, Mr. President, that in the Aleutian group, obtained by us in the Alaskan purchase in 1867 from Russia, Attu, the most western of that group, extends several hundred miles farther into the Pacific Ocean than do the Hawaiian Islands; and that, I contend, is far enough for us to go into the Pacific.

Do not let us get into trouble; let us stay out of troubled water; do not let us look for trouble, regardless of the fact that we would be in a position physically to combat successfully with any of the nations of the world were we called upon so to do.

I wish now to read an editorial which I clipped from the Washington Times-Herald of the issue of Monday, February 27. It is entitled "Guam as Japanese Bait."

As controversial as any item in the administration's national-defense program is the proposed fortification of the island of Guam. A surprise vote in the House last Thursday temporarily knocked out a provision in the Navy defense bill for taking the first steps—$5,000,000 worth of Guam harbor and airport improvement. But that doesn't kill off the proposal. It may be approved by the Senate, and subsequent Senate-House conferences on the Navy defense bill may put the proposition across.

A Guam naval base has the backing of several United States Navy admirals, at least. Whether the administration is actively backing it behind the scenes we don't know.

We're against it.

Says the editor of this newspaper:

We favor letting Guam remain the 30 mile by 8 mile naval station that it is, 6,000 miles west of San Francisco, and keying our Pacific defense plans to Hawaii and the Aleutian Islands. It would be better still, we think, just to give Guam away to anybody who would take it, along with the Philippine Islands. Might tie it to the Philippines as a sort of bonus for taking them off our hands.

As a matter of fact, in speaking of Guam, an island in troubled waters 6,000 miles away from San Francisco, I might mention that it is my opinion that the two nations of the earth that are vitally interested in having us retain possession of Guam are the Republic of France and the so-called democracy of Great Britain. Great Britain, as you know, Mr. President, has immense interests in the neighborhood of the island of Guam, not far withdrawn from Hong Kong, a British-owned island, and not far withdrawn from her commonwealth possessions. Great Britain would like to see us maintain our financial and moral interest in the Philippine Islands, because the interests of Great Britain and the interests of the Netherlands in the Dutch East Indies are now or certainly at some time will be imperiled, and so the British want the taxpayers of the United States of America to continue to spend millions of dollars, totaling into the billions, in oriental waters, in order that we may continue to serve Great Britain in that area, and discourage Japan from organizing the empire of the Orient.

In addition to that, the French are greatly interested over there. The French became somewhat exorcised a few days ago with regard to the occupation of the island of Hainan by Japanese troops, because the Japanese are getting closer and closer to the interests of the French. It was well said by one of the Washington newspaper columnists that the Japanese have said that they would give up Hainan when they found that they no longer needed it, but his fear was that that will be a long, long time, because one of the greatest supplies of tin to be found anywhere upon the face of the earth, and particularly in that section of the world, outside of the Straits Settlements, is upon the island of Hainan.

The Japanese have always lacked tin; and, as a result, they are going to keep that island, because they never have been able to get the supply of tin that they desired from the Straits Settlements, owned by the British. If they can command the tin supply and the tin ore on the island of Hainan, I contend that they are going to keep it. It is a very valuable deposit.

I might mention incidentally that we found during the World War that tin was a very precious metal. At the time the World War broke out we learned that the United States used about half the world's supply of tin. At that time we began to make investigations as to the deposits of tin over the face of the earth, and we found to our utter surprise and our great delight, that the peninsula of Seward, not far from Nome in Alaska, has some of the finest tin deposits to be found in all the world. I hope that in the development of our national-defense program we shall decide to expend some considerable amount of money in Alaska for the development of these deposits, so that we may not be entirely shut off in case we are forced to go to war.

I desire to read the rest of this editorial, Mr. President:

We're moved to feel this way by a picture of possible events regarding Guam which keeps coming to mind.

Suppose we should decide to make Guam a grade A naval base, at a cost of some $150,000,000 and 5 to 10 years' time.

Suppose we finished the job, and settled a garrison of the proper size among the floating drydocks, antiaircraft and coast-defense guns, buried munition and oil and food stores, and so on.

And then suppose Japan should acquire an astute government—something which has happened before and might happen again—though Japan at present appears to be suffering a vacation from astute governments. What would this astute government do about that American naval base at Guam, 6,000 miles from San Francisco, 3,850 from Hawaii, and only about 800 from Japan's big naval stronghold in the Bonin Islands? Guam, furthermore, is surrounded by islands mandated to Japan after the war, many of them improved if not fortified by the Japanese since that time.

This astute Japanese Government, we believe, would attack the Guam naval base by sea and air. But it would not be in any hurry to capture it. And it would take pains to keep Guam's radio communications with Hawaii or the United States clear and unjammed.

Horror tales from Guam would thus begin bombarding the emotions of all of us in the homeland. Our gallant boys would be picked off one by one by the Japs—Lt. Joe Murphy machine-gunned yesterday by a dastardly low-flying Japanese airman and buried this morning with full military honors, while his comrades stood around wondering who would be the next to go, and all that.

Indignation in this country would mount to such a degree that eventually our high command would have to shelve its better judgment and order the main fleet to the rescue of Guam. The Japanese fleet could then meet our fleet, far from our fleet's base and close to the Japanese bases—and our chances of victory would be lessened. We'd have been tricked into making one of the prime mistakes in sea warfare; that of letting the enemy pick his own battleground.

The Japanese know about this sea tactic, at least. That was exactly what Admiral Togo did May 27–28, 1905, at the classic naval battle of Tsushima. The Russians sent Admiral Rozhdestvensky's fleet all the way around from the Baltic via Suez and the Indian Ocean to replace the Russian Pacific fleet broken up by the Japanese before Port Arthur. Togo lay in wait in the Straits of Tsushima until the Russian ships were lined up like ninepins, then bowled them over one by one. Those he didn't sink he captured, thus wiping the Russian flag off the Pacific for years to come.

Altogether, we think our smart play is to maneuver unendingly for a choice of battleground, if we must fight Japan, somewhere off Hawaii. That is our strategic outpost in the central Pacific. Guam and Manila, we believe, are perilously weak salients.

Two ships for one.

In reference to the airplane in comparison with battleships, I say that I am thoroughly enthusiastic in regard to the development of our air forces, for this reason:

For instance, today we have in mind the construction of some superbattleships. According to the estimates that have been furnished, a superbattleship of 45,000 tons will cost anywhere from $100,000,000 to $110,000,000. As a matter of fact, at the high cost of construction at the present time, battleships in this country are costing anywhere from sixty to seventy-five million dollars. A battleship leaving San Francisco, steaming southward, passing through the Panama Canal and then going full steam ahead northward to the city of New York, requires a period of 11 days; whereas an airplane weighing many tons, traveling from San Francisco in the west to the city of New York in the east, can cover the same distance in 11 hours. For $100,000,000, in gross quantities of purchase, scores upon scores of planes, carrying tons upon tons of high explosives, could go in 11 hours from San Francisco to New York at a minimum cost, whereas battleships traveling from the waters of the Pacific in the west southward through the Panama Canal and northward to New York would require a minimum of 11 days, full steam ahead, at a cost, I dare say, far in excess of the cost involved in the flight of planes from the west to the east.

Mr. President, a moment ago I stated my opinion as to the danger the people of the United States are about to experience, unless something radically interesting on the part of patriotism is demonstrated by the people of the United States in the way of meeting with a solid front the encroachments of the aggressor nations in the form of propaganda in this country. We are at the crossroads. The enemy is boring from within. In this land of ours, within the confines of the United States of America, the political battles of the foreign "isms" of the world are being fought. Whereas heretofore the physical battles of the Communists, the Nazis, and the Fascists were fought out in old historic Spain, today the political battleground of those forces is right here in the United States of America.

We all recall that the other night, in the once-upon-awhile melting pot of the world, the city of New York, more than 28,000 persons identified with an organization of "isms" assembled within Madison Square Garden, and there stood without more thousands who were opposed to that form of foreign "isms." I have before me a copy of the Los Angeles Evening Herald and Express, published only a few days ago, on February 23, 1939. Not only in New York do we find those who are teaching principles false to the fundamental ones of the American Government, but we find demonstrations of that sort in all the largest cities of the United States of America. I take this opportunity to bring this article to the attention of the Members of this body, because I repeat for the benefit of the Members of this body and the benefit of the American people that the danger we are experiencing today in the Western Hemisphere is the danger incurred by the boring from within of the alien enemies who are in America.

The article is headed:

OFFICERS HALT ANTI-NAZIS' RIOT AT BUND

In a clamorous riot between members of the German-American Bund and anti-Nazis who picketed their meeting here, at least six persons were injured, missiles were hurled, and police had to threaten to use tear gas to disperse the mob, officers reported today.

The riot was staged last night in front of Deutches Haus at 634 West Fifteenth Street, where debris knee deep consisting of vegetables, eggs, fruit, rocks, and other missiles remained as an aftermath today.

As members of the German-American organization gathered for the meeting, lines of pickets formed outside the hall, booing, cat-calling, and waving placards reading, "Down with Hitler," or "Fight against fascism."

Arriving members, many of them clad in uniforms and wearing the Nazi swastika emblem, were pelted with overripe vegetables or rotten eggs.

Inside bund speakers sang The Star-Spangled Banner and likened George Washington to Hitler, while outside the number of pickets increased and threatened to get out of control of the 30 police assigned to maintain order.

ROCKS SMASH WINDOWS

Seven more police cars full of officers were dispatched to the scene as pickets started hurling rocks through windows of the hall, increased their catcalls and booing, and a sound truck blared out invectives against Hitler and nazi-ism.

Several persons inside, all men, were struck by rocks but not seriously injured, it was reported.

The demonstration reached its height when bund members attempted to leave the hall after the speech-making.

This description is similar to the description of a like occurrence that took place in the great city of New York.

RIOTERS BEAT UP MAN

One member, clad in a silver shirt uniform, was caught by the picket crowd, by then numbering hundreds, and beaten severely. He left without aid, however.

Women's gowns and men's evening clothes were spattered with juice from lush tomatoes or ancient eggs, and the debris was piled knee high on the steps to the hall.

At this point threats of more serious trouble came when Herman Schwinn, Pacific coast bund director, and one of the speakers at the meeting, announced he would clear the streets with his own strong-arm squad if police did not act.

"We are not worried," he said. "If the police can't clear the street we'll send out our men and do it ourselves."

PEACE OFFICERS BOOED

Meanwhile police were working furiously to maintain order. While no arrests were reported, officers occasionally led a ring-leader to the fringe of the mob and bade him depart.

Then the officers attempted to form a wedge through the crowd in order to let the departing bund members pass out. The crowd stood firm, booing both police and bundsters.

Finally the officers cleared a space in a parking lot in back and bund members departed through rear and side doors.

By threatening to use tear gas, the officers kept the crowd fairly well at bay, while they escorted the women members to cars and got them safely off.

Many departing bundsters were escorted away in police cars which went through the crowd with sirens wailing.

A sudden move on the part of the pickets to break into a side door was frustrated by quick police action as reserve officers came up to hold the entrance.

Some of the bund members, it was said, carried clubs or other weapons as they ran the cordon of missile-hurling pickets. Police disarmed one bundster who had a short length of iron pipe.

Picketing of the meeting was sponsored by the Socialist Workers' Party and the Young People's Socialist League, and was said to have been participated in by members of other liberal and labor groups.

Placards carried by the pickets bore such legends as the following:

"Solidarity with German workers against Hitler," "Labor unite against fascism," "Repeal criminal syndicalism law," "Fight against anti-Semitism," "Capital breeds fascism," and "Socialist Party leads the fight."

FLAY NEW DEAL

Principal speakers at the meeting were Schwinn and David Hall, Jr., Glendale writer and pamphleteer.

Hall, in his speech, was fourth as calling Washington "a leader of a revolution who was like Hitler of today."

High New Deal officials were criticized at the meeting, President Roosevelt for his airplane deal with France, Secretary of Treasury

Morgenthau, as holding the balance of financial favor for France and England, and Secretary of State Hull for "blocking German trade."

Mr. President, I have read this article in order that the American people may know that our land, our soil, is being used as a ground for the "isms" of the world; that political battles are being fought here; and yet we raise not our voices to speak for explicit American truth.

I find here pictured by the photographers and published in the columns of this paper, the Los Angeles Evening Herald and Express of February 23, 1939, various signs:

"Fight against anti-Semitism."

"Repeal criminal syndicalism law."

"Socialist Workers' Party leads anti-Fascist fight!"

"Build worker's defense guards!"

We find in the United States those who are opposed to our form of government advancing almost every kind of "ism" at this time.

In speaking of the battle between fascism and communism, I call attention to the fact that several days ago I presented in the Senate of the United States a resolution in reference to our looking into affairs pertaining to our sister Republic of Mexico, the country lying beyond the Rio Grande, for the reason that millions upon millions of dollars of the American people are invested there. It so happens that one of the leading Communist Bolsheviks of the world resides on the outskirts of the City of Mexico. That man, who read my statement made in the United States Senate, declared to the people of Mexico—whom I declare he is inciting to revolution—that I lied, and that I was leading the American people to believe that which was erroneous. As a result, having read about a week ago the statement of Trotsky, this leader of the Communists, who has unquestionably established communism in our sister Republic of Mexico, I took occasion to prepare a statement as the result of his declaration in regard to my having lied and misled the people. I read from that statement:

On January 27 I introduced Senate Resolution 72, providing for a Senate investigation of our relations with the Mexican Government.

The preamble of the resolution stated that:

According to widely published newspaper articles, Mexico is using certain property that it has confiscated from American citizens to enter into commercial and economic relations with countries in Europe and Asia and that if the establishment of these relations with these countries is true, as stated, would make the Government of Mexico subservient to the governments that are said to be acquiring such economic and financial control as to enable these foreign governments to control the political affairs of Mexico, as a mere colony, in violation of that policy of the United States enunciated to safeguard the republics of this hemisphere.

In the resolution I also stated that:

A revolutionary from Europe—

Those are the words I used. I mentioned no names. I read further:

A revolutionary from Europe is now in Mexico and that the un-American policy of government that he aided in establishing in Russia has now been adopted by Mexico.

Since making that statement I have obtained a copy of one of the principal newspapers of Mexico City in which there is an article, of February 3, 1939, which may be translated as follows:

Leon Trotsky said yesterday that the North American Senator REYNOLDS lies and is misleading public opinion in the United States. The exiled Communist made the above statement at his home yesterday to refute the charge made by Senator REYNOLDS to the effect that Trotsky is the instigator of the policies of the Mexican Government. "On several occasions I have categorically stated that I have had and have nothing to do with the policies of this Government."

"Senator REYNOLDS' assertion means that he holds my categorical statement is a lie. Therefore I must say that Mr. REYNOLDS is misleading public opinion in the United States. It is bad to lie and doubly bad to lie if one is a Senator, and even worse if the lie is uttered in the tribune of the Senate."

As I have been referred to as "a liar" and that I am "misleading public opinion in the United States," I believe that the Senate and the people of the United States will be interested in having brought to their attention certain facts which bear directly upon the Mexican situation, particularly as there seems to be an element of secrecy concerning Mexican affairs.

I stated a few moments ago, in my remarks upon national-defense matters, that Great Britain might liquidate some of her obligations to us by way of causing to be ceded to the United States some of the islands of the West Indies. I made a similar suggestion in regard to France. At this juncture, in view of the fact that Mexico is indebted to us in a sum of many millions of dollars as the result of confiscation of American property and similar actions, I might suggest that she cede to us all of Southern California, which we could use to very good advantage in fortifying more securely our immediate coastal section to the south of California.

I stated in my resolution that a "revolutionary" was now living in Mexico, and that the un-American policy of government he has aided in establishing in Russia has now been adopted by the Mexican Government. I called no one by name. However, the revolutionary in question has identified himself—yes, effectively identified himself as the world's greatest international troublemaker.

This gentleman, I find, was born in Russia, the son of middle-class Jews named Bronstein, and that as a political troublemaker he was first arrested in 1898 and exiled to Siberia, escaping in 1902 to England by a forged passport under the name of Trotsky. In 1905 Mr. Trotsky returned to Russia and was made a member of the St. Petersburg soviet of workers deputies and thereafter was exiled again to Siberia; but not for long, for soon thereafter he escaped to Vienna, thence to Copenhagen, where he defended a position midway between Mensheviks and Bolsheviks. During the World War he wrote a book in German on the Origin of the War, which resulted in his imprisonment. It is well known that he was against the allies and was expelled from France, at which time he came to the United States and edited a Russian revolutionary newspaper, The New World. In 1917 subscribers to that paper paid his way to Russia. On the way to Russia he was arrested by the British and taken ashore at Halifax. Thereafter Lenin asked for his release. The same year this now experienced anarchist, together with Lenin, organized the bloody Russian Revolution of 1917.

It was in this revolution in which Trotsky was a leading figure, that thousands of men, women, and children were executed without judicial trial. History shows that they were murdered to get rid of them as possible political opponents—opponents with contrasting ideologies—as it is termed in more modern language. They were murdered so that Bronstein-Trotsky and his aides in anarchy could seize the property of these people, most of which had been acquired by small tradesmen and farmer landowners. The wholesale murders, confiscations, and depredations in Russia startled the world.

In my speech over the radio of January 24, I stated that Russia owes the American Government around $600,000,000 which was renounced by the gentleman who so fondly refers to me in the Mexican press. I said that they have closed the churches, murdered priests, assaulted nuns, and that they are sending propagandists to this country in an effort to destroy or weaken our American form of government.

Again, I wish to repeat that the Communist Party in the United States of America today has in its employ the most astute and the most alert propagandists the world has ever known, because they have very adroitly succeeded in turning the interest and the eyes of the American people from Lenin and the Communists and the murderers of the Soviet Union and focusing American eyes upon Germany and Italy, Hitler and Mussolini.

Let me remind my colleagues that in 1920 this Trotsky, this breeder of international hate, organized the new Red Army as the "labor armies" of Russia. Speaking of international hates, I take time to refer now to a Miss Mann, from Germany, whom I mentioned a few days ago as being one in this country from foreign shores insisting upon America entering war to avenge Miss Mann and those whom she represents. Throughout the length and breadth of this country today and tonight are to be found people from foreign shores, who are not American citizens, lecturing in public places, creating hatreds on the part of millions upon millions of our people, separating homes, and bringing unhappiness to the firesides of America as the result of the hatred which is being engendered by the words spoken and distributed by way of printed pamphlets throughout the country.

Mr. President, I think some check should be made upon the people who come from foreign shores to this country to deliver their lectures and to spread their hatred. I think the time has arrived when the United States Government itself should make an investigation as to who they are and as to what they are talking about. But we let things go along in a slipshod fashion and are not giving the attention to them which we ought to.

In 1920 this breeder of international hate organized the new red army as the "labor armies" of Russia. In 1923 Trotsky adopted a questionable attitude that made other Communist leaders attack him and his policy. At this time he was vigorously assailed by Stalin. He was on his way to the Caucasus when Lenin died, and immediately afterward lost his position as Commissar of War. In 1927 he was expelled from the Communist Party, and it was at this time that Stalin said "Trotsky must die." However, on account of his power in Russia, Stalin was afraid to kill him, so Trotsky was exiled to Turkestan. As Senators recall, he remained in Turkestan for some time. From there he was banished to Constantinople, in 1933 to Norway, and in 1936 was given sympathetic asylum in Mexico, where the existing government of President Cardenas styles itself, "The government of the revolution." He arrived at the port of Tampico amid fanfare and local and international publicity. As Senators know, he later moved south to the city of Mexico, the capital city.

Since then this "man without a country," this master anarchist, has established himself in a suburb of Mexico City—Coyacan—where, closely guarded by the Mexican secret police, he is inaccessible to everyone except by written appointment. It is officially stated that he is carrying on what he prefers to term "literary work." However, it may be remembered that on the occasion of Trotsky's taking up his residence in Mexico Stalin, the present dictator of Russia, remarked, "This means Mexico will soon be having a revolution."

Mr. Trotsky has, on too many occasions and too emphatically, denied having had a hand in Mexican internal affairs, but press articles in Mexico and in the United States have stated that the notorious influence of Trotsky has had its effect upon Mexican political affairs. At this point I want to call to the attention of the Senate the major premise of Trotsky's teaching. He has taught this for many, many years. It is this: That communism cannot be successful unless it is simultaneously fomented in all countries.

What can be Mr. Bronstein-Trotsky's mission in this hemisphere? As has recently been stated in the press:

Trotsky is perhaps the greatest destructionist the world ever saw. Compared with him, Stalin is a conservative, constructive statesman. Trotsky's sole aim wherever he goes is to tear down in the name of world revolution.

His record shows him to be the arch enemy of law and order—an arch enemy of our American form of government. Whether he is personally directing the governmental affairs of Mexico can be determined only by what is happening in Mexico and by the Mexican Government's attitude toward the people of the United States; by the adoption of communistic anti-American policies, and by other conditions which exist and which are growing worse every day.

Not only are crime and political assassination reported by the press to be rife but that industrial warfare abounds among the labor organizations, one of which is headed by a well-known Communist radical labor leader, Lombardo Toledano. Other press articles report that one must be a hero—Mexican style—to walk the streets of the capital city at night; that crime is widespread, due in part to the corruption of justice; that some 28,000 crimes were committed last year in Mexico City alone; and that American tourists are assaulted and robbed and no serious effort is made by authorities to punish the wrongdoers. There is hardly an industry or enterprise in Mexico, national or foreign, which is not already threatened with or demoralized by strikes and disorders. As is natural, this brings about a food shortage, high prices, unemployment, and general political unrest, made more difficult by the failure of agricultural program and interunion conflicts. Other strikes are reported to be rampant in the coastal regions where shipping has been seriously hampered for periods lasting for months. Such internal political and economic strife fomented armed conflict. I have here hundreds of excerpts in English of articles appearing in the Mexican press since January 1, 1939.

The doctrine of the Fourth International appears to have made long strides in Mexico since Cardenas gave asylum to Leon Trotsky, but his teaching cannot become successful until civil war ensues, which may involve other nations and the United States.

A recent issue of the Mexican newspaper Universal, which is one of the chief daily newspapers of the capital city of Mexico, in discussing economic conditions in Mexico, says the country is fast reaching the most acute and difficult period of its history; while another paper of Tampico attributes to an army man the statement that:

The pretext of giving military training to thousands of Mexican workmen and guns to the Mexican agrarians is nothing but a farce and an excuse to form an army which at the opportune time could start a campaign of violence under the command of labor leaders.

While Mr. Trotsky fills the press with denials and accuses me of attempting to mislead the American people, it is well to remember that this subverter of peace and order was the organizer of the Red Army in Russia which he himself designated as the "labor army."

While Mr. Trotsky denies that he is the instigator of the present policies of the Mexican Government, those policies, according to widely published newspaper articles, seem to square exactly with policies of Communist Russia while he was in power, and with those of the Fourth International which he now heads.

The present political animosities, engendered by conflicting theories of economics and government in Europe, may any day cause outbreak of civil war in Mexico. Why, with intimate knowledge of the background, the policies, and influence of this subtle plotter upon conditions in Mexico, has the Government of the United States subsidized and supported the Cardenas government? And that we have done. We have given them almost unlimited help during the past 7 years by purchasing their silver, and millions of dollars have been distributed in Mexico by the more than 300,000 tourists who go there annually. Why, without serious protest have we allowed Mexico to confiscate properties of enormous value belonging to citizens of the United States, Great Britain, and the Netherlands and barter the product of those properties to other nations? Why have not the American people been better informed about what is going on in Mexico?

I have said that Trotsky was banished from Russia by Stalin. While both men are Communists, each is an avowed personal enemy of the other. Trotsky's hatred of Stalin is obvious, and this has been stated to be a prime cause why Mexico is bartering oil to the totalitarian powers, for it is they who may cause the fall of Stalin. Other reports are that Stalin now has emissaries in Mexico. Whatever the motives, I believe we ought to realize the Mexican Government is not friendly toward the United States. If there is likely to be any European or Asiatic political domination of Mexico, we should know it and act in the light of such knowledge.

Although the Mexican Government fills the press with excuses that it is dealing with the totalitarian nations because it cannot sell to the democracies, the fact remains that it has stolen an entire industry from citizens of the United States, France, Great Britain, and Holland. For these nations to permit domestic commerce in stolen goods would be in effect ratification of Mexico's confiscatory acts and the policies of government which Leon Trotsky champions. France, Great Britain, Holland, and Belgium are reported in the press to have barred such goods. What is the status of these goods in the United States? Why have we not barred them, and thereby made it plain to all the people of our Nation that our Government did not approve Trotsky communistic activity in the United States or in Mexico?

I assert here without the slightest hesitation that if the trade pact, the barter agreement, is carried out between the Government of Mexico and that of Hitler in Germany, goods received by the Mexican Government should certainly be barred in this country.

I am not quite sure of the number of Mexicans residing in the United States who have not applied for citizenship.

In reference to that matter, I may state in passing that a bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives by the able young Representative from West Virginia, Mr. JENNINGS RANDOLPH, which would make mandatory the acquisition of American citizenship after a person from foreign shores had been in the United States of America for a period of 1 year, and I understand that bill is going to have widespread support. I make mention of it on account of the Mexican situation which I am discussing.

Some persons report that the number of Mexicans residing in the United States who have not applied for citizenship is greater than 1,000,000—with thousands on relief. At one time some 50,000 Americans went to our neighboring Republic of Mexico upon the direct invitation of its Government. They all worked there to develop Mexico. Today there are less than 5,000 Americans in Mexico, and many of that number are being driven out daily. Mexican aliens in this country above the number of Americans in Mexico should be sent home. The Mexican Government is unfriendly toward citizens of the United States. It has been doing everything it can to stir up feeling in other Latin American countries against the United States, and it has been doing all it can to embarrass our Government in world affairs by making and threatening to make alliances by economic ties with European and Asiatic powers—economic alliances, Mr. President, as a result of the confiscation of properties purchased by American capital and owned by Americans in the Republic of Mexico.

I desire to emphasize the fact that the present Government of Mexico, by its acts, seems to have become an active satellite of Trotsky's communistic Fourth International, embracing a theory of government which is wholly foreign to this hemisphere, and perilous to its cherished institutions. I stated in a recent radio address that:

The present Mexican Government is a government of anarchy. They fly the red and black flag of revolution. The workers' internationale is a hymn of hate against all foreigners, including Americans.

They teach hatred in their schools, they broadcast it. They print it in their press. Fact of the matter is, neither private property nor individual investment is safe. Human life is cheap. There they are purging the country of all foreign capital by intimidations, if not by assassinations, and by wholesale confiscations. They have confiscated farm lands belonging to Americans, and stolen oil wells dug by American capital.

When the Mexicans confiscated the oil fields belonging to Britain, John Bull immediately severed diplomatic relations with them. When the Mexican confiscated oil lands belonging to Uncle Sam were seized, we closed our eyes to these confiscations.

That is the end of the quotation from the radio address. We closed our eyes to these confiscations and to other unfriendly acts, thereby creating a world-wide impression that we were not only supporting Mexico's communistic government, but that we approved of its acts.

By barter deals, future contract arrangements, and other economic ties with European and Asiatic powers, Mexico becomes directly subservient to one or all of the governments which now or soon will be enabled to control the political affairs of Mexico as a mere colony, in violation of the Monroe Doctrine.

The Monroe Doctrine was mentioned this afternoon in the speech of the able Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. If we enforce that doctrine, it may be termed by some aggression on the part of the United States. It may be that several governments acting with the Mexican Government are purposely testing our ability to deal with affairs at home.

As champion of peace of the Western Hemisphere, poor old Uncle Sam has been preoccupied for the past few years. More recently he has been active in European affairs, while in Mexico, right at our door, conditions dangerous to the peace and welfare of our Nation have steadily gone from bad to worse.

Apparently the stage is being set for Mexico to become, in the very near future, a battleground for ideologies of the Stalin-Trotsky communistic variety as opposed to both the totalitarian governments and the democracies.

The time of reckoning for the Mexican Government is close at hand; and if civil strife does arise in Mexico, or if outside armed aggression and resulting complications occur, it may well be laid at the door of Leon Trotsky, nee Bronstein, who so hostilely states that I am misleading the public of the United States.

I am happy to be able to state, Mr. President, that the gentleman to the south of us, Mr. Trotsky, is not today being permitted to formulate a revolution in the United States. The thousands upon thousands of Communists in the United States of America are creating more trouble and danger to this country by boring from within than we shall experience from all the armies from without for many years to come.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 185) making additional funds available for salaries and expenses, Federal Housing Administration, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

LAWS OF FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PHILIPPINES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 2 (a) (11) of the act of Congress approved March 24, 1934, entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith a copy of Commonwealth Act No. 253, passed by the first National Assembly of the Philippines during its second session, from October 16, 1937, to November 21, 1937, and copies of laws enacted during its third session, from January 24, 1938, to May 20, 1938, and its fourth special session, May 23 and 24, 1938.

The missing numbers will be transmitted to you hereafter when copies are received from the Philippine Islands.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 27, 1939.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Francis Biddle, of Pennsylvania, to be a judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, to fill an existing vacancy.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of several general officers in the National Guard of the United States, and also the nominations of sundry citizens and officers for appointment, or for promotion, in the Regular Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, February 28, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Spera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

To Thee, O Lord, we breathe our grateful prayer of praise. For the refreshment of divine truth and love, for the bread that feeds the immortal soul, for the treasures of conquering faith, and for the gift of Him who brings tidings of peace on earth to men of good will—for these undying blessings do Thou receive our humble thanks. Grant that our thoughts may be large, our ideals lofty, and our service heroic. As servants of our Republic, help us to set them forth in actual life and in practical conduct. Heavenly Father, remember the great army of workers who serve without trumpet, whose names are written only in the book of human life. Almighty God, multiply their numbers and increase their power, and assure them that they will yet change the scarred face of this torn earth. We beseech Thee to swell the current of peace that comes from across the sea. May it surge and live until the legions of war are transformed into the ranks of good will and brotherhood and lifted to the higher states of power and blessing. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 24, 1939, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Hess, one of his secretaries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include certain excerpts and an explanation thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include a speech made by the Solicitor General of the United States at Topeka, Kans., on the 22d of this month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein Senate Memorial 2, passed by the Senate of Montana, in relation to the Townsend plan, and also Senate Joint Memorial 5, passed by the Senate of Montana, in reference to the beet-sugar industry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Record.

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKEKELSON]?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask that the gentleman withhold that request for a few moments?

Mr. THORKEKELSON. I will be glad to.

ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 185, making additional funds available for salaries and expenses, Federal Housing Administration.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 185

Joint resolution making additional funds available for salaries and expenses, Federal Housing Administration

Resolved, etc., That in addition to the funds made available to the Federal Housing Administration for administrative expenses by the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1939, not to exceed $1,375,000 of the mutual mortgage insurance fund and not to exceed $1,125,000 of the funds advanced to the Administration by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are hereby made available for administrative expenses of the Administration for the fiscal year 1939, including the same objects specified in the provisions for such expenses of such Administration in such act: Provided, That such additional funds shall be available for administrative expenses of the Administration for the fiscal year 1939 heretofore or hereafter incurred and otherwise properly chargeable thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. This item, as I understand it, comes in a unanimous report from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. It provides funds which were originally carried in the independent offices bill as that bill passed the House, and takes care of funds which are required to meet the additional duties imposed on the Federal Housing Administration subsequent to the consideration of the last deficiency act?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. There has been no previous opportunity to provide this money?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. And this amount has been eliminated from the independent offices bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. In conference; yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

The House joint resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 2 (a) (11) of the act of Congress approved March 24, 1934, entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith a copy of Commonwealth Act No. 253, passed by the First National Assembly of the Philippines during its second session, from October 16, 1937, to November 21, 1937, and copies of laws enacted during its third session, from January 24, 1938, to May 20, 1938, and its fourth special session, May 23 and 24, 1938.

The missing numbers will be transmitted to you hereafter when copies are received from the Philippine Islands.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 27, 1939.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein Joint Resolution 23 of the California Legislature.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTON asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address made by myself last week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKEKELSON and Mr. GREGORY asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia Day.

JOHN PHILIP SOUSA BRIDGE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up for immediate consideration the bill (S. 494) to name the bridge to be erected over the Anacostia River in the District of Columbia after the late "March King," John Philip Sousa, composer of The Stars and Stripes Forever.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the bridge authorized to be erected over the Anacostia River, in the District of Columbia, in the line of Pennsylvania Avenue be hereafter known as the John Philip Sousa Bridge.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LIGHTING OF STREETS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1294) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to regulate the hours during which streets, alleys, and so forth, shall be lighted, and ask its immediate consideration.

I may say in this connection, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on the District of Columbia has reported out an identical House bill which is now on the calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, subject to appropriations therefor, are hereby authorized and empowered to require that all public and other lamps under their control be lighted during such hours as in their judgment will most effectively promote the safety and convenience of the public.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, in connection with this bill I wish to take just a few minutes of the time of the House to say that at present the lights on the District of Columbia streets, which you and hundreds of thousands of other persons in the District of Columbia use every day, are so regulated by statute passed by Congress that they have to be turned on at a certain time and turned off at a certain time, and these times have been designated by law. We believe the Commissioners should certainly have discretionary power to turn on and off the lights on the streets of the District of Columbia. They should be given regulatory power at once.

I bring this matter to your attention because we know of the sadness which came recently to one of the Members of this body, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL] when his son was hit and killed by an automobile. The driver and the car vanished. This accident happened on a damp, foggy, wet morning, at a time when it was dark in the District, yet under the statute the lights had been turned off instead of remaining on at that hour.

This is the only explanation I desire to make, but I felt the membership would want to know the reason for a bill such as this being brought to your attention.

A similar House bill (H. R. 3948) was laid on the table.

DAVID R. THOMPSON AND RALPH S. WARNER

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 2261) to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to set aside the trial-board conviction of Policemen David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner and their resultant dismissal, and to reinstate David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner to their former positions as members of the Metropolitan Police Department, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill (S. 316) may be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to reappoint David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner as members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia; compensation to commence from the date of such reappointment only, and no pay or compensation to be paid them from the date of their dismissal from the Metropolitan Police Department to the date of such reappointment.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANDOLPH: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to set aside the trial-board conviction of Policemen David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner and their resultant dismissal, and to reinstate David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner to their former positions as members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say to the membership of the House in connection with this bill that over the last 6 or 7 years since I have been a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia I have made it a policy to oppose any effort to reinstate any police officer if he has had a hearing by the trial board and has been dismissed as a result of the findings of such board.

In the case of the officers, however, who are covered by the pending bill, it would appear that a very apparent and palpable injustice has been done these two gentlemen. The matter has been thoroughly investigated. A special investigating committee has labored on the matter at great length. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have notified the chairmen of the House District Committee and the Senate District Committee that in their judgment an injustice has been done. Hence, there is before you now the reinstatement of the two officers who were dismissed.

I wish to make it very clear to the House that as a general thing the Committee on the District of Columbia as such seldom seeks to go beyond the findings of the trial board whenever it comes to reinstating officers, as the thing works at the present time. The trial board takes testimony and makes its findings. The officers are dismissed. It is so easy for them to enlist their friends on the House and Senate District Committees, and we have had this matter to contend with over a period of years. It is only because there is a very evident injustice in the present case that I go along with the chairman of the District Committee and support the measure.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Have the Commissioners any power to reconsider and change the decision of the trial board without an act of Congress?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No. That is the reason the bill is here at the present time. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are without any authority whatever to make a reinstatement after there has been a dismissal on the basis of findings by the trial board, so the matter must come back here for legislative action.

Mr. DOWELL. The trial board cannot reconsider its action?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Have the District Commissioners indicated to the gentleman's committee that they do not object to this bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right, so it is a satisfactory procedure all the way along the line.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say that what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has said is absolutely true. Further, we of the House committee believe that in being reinstated these men should be compensated for the time they have been off the force. If we pass this bill containing the amendment I have offered, the Senate and the House of Representatives will go to conference on that matter. We desire to do what it is fair and right. Justice certainly must be extended to these two former officers of the Metropolitan Police force.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

A House bill (H. R. 2261) was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to set aside the trial-board conviction of Policemen David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner and their resultant dismissal, and to reinstate David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner to their former positions as members of the Metropolitan Police Department."

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this finishes the business on the calendar today from the District of Columbia Committee.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an excerpt from a bill I have introduced and also a letter and resolution with reference to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 185. Joint resolution making additional funds available for salaries and expenses, Federal Housing Administration.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4492) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and pending this motion, I would like to develop the prospect of a unanimous-consent agreement to limit general debate. I may say to the House that we have very few requests for time on this side of the Chamber; and may I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] how he is situated with respect to such requests?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I have requests for about an hour and a half of time, but I may be able to be released from part of it, although I shall certainly require most of that time.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman knowing the present situation, can he make any suggestion with respect to the time?

Mr. TABER. Suppose we try 3 o'clock? I think we can get through in that time.

Mr. LUDLOW. I am sure that will be satisfactory on this side.

Then, I couple with my motion, Mr. Speaker, the request that general debate be concluded at 3 o'clock this afternoon, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from New York and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4492); and pending that motion, asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be concluded at not later than 3 o'clock this afternoon, the time to be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from New York. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4492, the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, fiscal year 1940, with Mr. BOEHNE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I believe we are about 37 minutes ahead of the gentleman from New York with respect to time consumed in general debate. Would the gentleman from New York care to yield some time now?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, you will observe, on page 35, of the hearings on the pending bill, that the Secretary of the Treasury accounted on the silver-purchase program carried on under the Silver Purchase Act of 1934.

Ever since the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 has been on the books I have been deeply interested in the administration of that act and have come, of course, to the same conclusion that is shared by most of the economists and most of the students of the silver problem of the country, in that we can best serve the people of the United States of America by expunging from the statute books as quickly as possible the Silver Purchase Act of 1934.

All the figures that are necessary in order to get some idea of what has happened under the Silver Purchase Act are disclosed by the Secretary of the Treasury and you will find them in the hearings.

You may recall, of course, and I shall refresh the memory of those who do not recall acutely, what the basic provisions are in the Silver Purchase Act. It sought to establish in our monetary system an amount of silver equal to one-fourth of the gold supply. It not only authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, but it directed the Secretary to purchase silver and ever since that act has been on the books, the Secretary of the Treasury has been purchasing silver both in this country and in foreign countries and will continue to do so until such time as silver reaches the value of $1.29 an ounce, or until the ratio of silver to gold in our monetary system shall be as 1 to 3.

Now here are the purchases that have been made since 1934. First of all, under the act, Congress nationalized silver and then authorized the purchase of domestic silver, not newly mined, at the rate of 50 cents an ounce. Under that program the Secretary has purchased up to the 20th of January, 113,000,000 ounces of silver, costing $56,500,000.

Secondly, he carried on a great silver purchase and acquisition program in foreign countries, including Great Britain, Spain, Mexico, India, China, and other countries, and under that portion of the program there was purchased up to the 20th of January 1,535,760,000 ounces of silver costing $820,000,000.

The third leg of the program provides for the purchase of newly mined silver, ostensibly as a subsidy to the silver mines of the country and, probably, to bring some degree of relief to those who are engaged in silver mining in the Western States. We pay 64.64 cents for newly mined silver and thus far, under the program since 1934, there has been purchased about 253,000,000 ounces of newly mined silver, costing $185,500,000.

There you have acquisitions that cost this country over a billion dollars under the silver-purchase program of 1934, and the only virtue in this whole program is the acquisition of a lot of useless metal with money that must be reflected in the national debt and in the deficit borrowings. It constitutes a tremendous burden upon the taxpayers, will reflect an increase in the interest cost, and the net result is that we take the silver and bury it in a hole up at West Point, N. Y., so that for all practical purposes, and so far as our monetary base is concerned, it does not do this country one iota of good.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me finish this statement, please; then I shall be pleased to yield.

Now we have over $1,000,000,000 worth of purchased silver, but let us see how close we have come to the objectives of the Silver Purchase Act. Understand, there are two stops. They will stop when silver reaches $1.29 an ounce, or when the ratio of silver to gold is as 1 to 3 in our monetary system. On the 20th of January 1939 we had in our gold stock $14,607,000,000, and if we take silver at its monetary value of $1.29 an ounce, it would have been necessary to have or to acquire $4,869,000,000 worth of silver. How much is to be acquired after we have already purchased 113,000,000 ounces of domestic, 253,000,000 ounces of United States newly mined silver, and one and a half billion ounces from foreign countries? When would you think, after these astronomical figures, we would reach our objective? As a matter of fact, the amount of silver still to be acquired before we reach that objective at $1.29 is $1,531,000,000, so that despite the tremendous accumulations of useless metal acquired under an edict that has been forced upon the Secretary of the Treasury by Congress in 1934, we are spending the taxpayer's money and increasing the national debt and increasing the carrying charge and the interest cost on the national debt and taking the silver up to New York and burying it in the ground at West Point.

At the present time we have a total of 2,575,000,000 ounces of silver. It is the greatest quantity of silver that has been held by any nation in the history of the world. We have enough silver to make two dozen sterling-silver teaspoons for every man, woman, and child of the 130,000,000 population in this country, and I say that it is about as useless as two dozen sterling-silver spoons would be to a 6-months-old baby in diapers.

What is the effect of this program? First of all, it is a subsidy to the silver producers in the West, and, oddly enough, it is in large part a subsidy to only a very select group.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. TABER. On top of that, it is a subsidy running to a few dollars to the silver purchased in the West, but running to millions and millions and billions of dollars to the foreign producers of silver.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Precisely so; and I will come to that directly, but first I want to point out that it is a subsidy to a very limited group in our population. Insofar as I can find out from the report of the Department of Commerce, and from the Minerals Year Book, there were 2,838 persons, including those who work in the silver mines, the executives and the superintendents, who were actually identified with the mining of silver in this country. There were only 78 actual silver mines, but whatever subsidy there is, goes in large measure to 25 mines. The Minerals Year Book of 1938 issued by the Bureau of Mines indicates on page 67 that 72 percent of the silver that was produced in 1937 was produced by 25 top mines. That means that if there is a subsidy, 25 mines are getting 72 percent of that subsidy. I remember when the Silver Purchase Act was before the House in 1934. I remember also the debates on the Senate side. I remember that one distinguished member of another body got up and indicated that this would not cost the country anything, because it would operate as a relief for 400,000 people out in the western States. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I have been unable to find those 400,000 people, and I suppose the Bureau of Mines and the Department of Commerce have not been able to find them either.

The names of these large silver producers are most interesting and I hope that if and when some of the devotees of the silver-purchase program essay to speak on this matter, they will make some comment on how these huge companies who have always been the target for the administration's wrath, should come in for such a generous subsidy.

The list includes the Anaconda Copper Mining Co., the Phelps Dodge Corporation, the United States Smelting, Refining & Mining Co., the Hecla Mining Co., the Butte Copper & Zinc Co., the Tonopah Mining Co. of Nevada, the Utah Copper Co., the Treadwell Yukon Co., Ltd., and many others.

I can remember the time when some of these corporations were assailed as the corporate octopi whose tentacles were wound around the economic structure of America but somehow, they bask in the light of popularity today because they are the recipients of the silver subsidy that is paid out of the pockets of the American taxpayers.

We have bought newly mined silver to the extent of 253,000,000 ounces. Some of it we bought at 77½ cents an ounce, some at 71 cents, and some at 64.64 cents an ounce. At the present time, under the President's proclamation, we are paying 64.64 cents an ounce for newly mined silver. What is the world price today? Pick up any New York newspaper and look at the market reports, and you will find that the world price is about 43 cents an ounce. The dentist who buys silver to fill a tooth pays 43 cents an ounce and the jeweler who buys it pays 43 cents an ounce, but when Uncle Sam buys newly mined silver he pays not 43 cents an ounce but 64.64 cents an ounce, so that you have a subsidy or a premium of something over 20 cents an ounce. Assume that subsidy has continued at about that net level figure since 1934, then you have had a subsidy for a very small group of people amounting to pretty close to $50,000,000 since 1934. If we subsidize the rest of the people of the country in like proportion, we might as well lock up shop and go home, because then we will have put the skids under the United States of America. That is No. 1 reason why the Silver Purchase Act ought to be repealed. It is an unparalleled and outrageous subsidy that is unnecessary, that goes to but a small group of producers, that has effected no economic good for the Nation, and which has not lived up to a single claim made for it when it was enacted in 1934.

Reason No. 2 is that it has been purveying great and indefensible benefits to speculators everywhere in the world and to smugglers in foreign countries who saw an opportunity to smuggle silver out of their countries and sell it to the United States at a fancy profit and at a burdensome cost to our taxpayers.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman's first point calls attention to the fact that the price of silver is 42 cents now. I want to call the attention of the Committee to the point that that is in the terms of the new gold dollar. If it were on the basis of the old gold dollar, the price of silver would be less today than it had been at any time in 25 years, or, in other words, about 25 cents.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will say that I wanted to be charitable and I did not include the factor of gold devaluation. Even on that basis it presents a rather staggering picture that requires the attention of the Congress, and very soon.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The gentleman objects to this entire policy; is that correct?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I certainly object to that portion of the Silver Purchase Act that calls for the acquisition of the amount of silver that shall be at the ratio of 1 to 3 in the gold system, for in my judgment it is injecting into our monetary system a cancerous growth that ultimately is going to add, and does add now, to the lack of confidence in the country, which is at the very basis for the failure of this country to move forward. You cannot have a dependable monetary system when you get to jockeying around with it as we have done under the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, and acquire at the expense of an increase in the public debt, a vast amount of useless metal for an amount that is right now 20 cents above the world price. That is something that will not stand up in the light of argument or reason.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Passing for a moment that phase of the question, that is, the objection to the purchase of foreign silver, does the gentleman still object to the purchase of newly mined domestic silver?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think I do if we are going to have to buy silver at a premium of 20 cents an ounce when the world price today is 43 cents an ounce.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. You regard it as a subsidy, do you?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I regard it as an outrageous subsidy, when we could have purveyed relief to every silver miner in the country and bought him a new bungalow and 10 acres of land and put him on a pension for life for what this Silver Act has cost the country.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. For the purpose of the argument only, let us dismiss all except the purchase of newly mined silver. You say it is a subsidy. Let us grant that, for the purpose of the argument. The gentleman regards it, though, as an objectionable subsidy, as I understand?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I just so characterized it, I think.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. You do characterize it as an objectionable subsidy. The gentleman realizes that there are other subsidies in this country granted by the Government of the United States, does he not?

Mr. DIRKSEN. None in the proportion that this was granted.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. It is a matter of degree, then, and not a matter of principle; is that right?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I object to the principle and I object to the degree.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Has the gentleman objected to the subsidies granted to the farmers?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No. If there is going to be a subsidy by enactment of this Congress, then let it be a uniform subsidy. But this kind of a subsidy cannot be defended on any ground that I know of, both as to the degree and as to the principle. When you talk about a subsidy for farmers, you are bringing in some considerations that certainly are not as divergent as you will find in the world price of silver.

Now, I want to get to the end of this without taking too much time, and I do not yield further, Mr. Chairman.

When the Silver Purchase Act was on this floor in 1934, men just literally beat their breasts, and their stentorian voices went up to the ceiling as they talked about the tremendous amount of good that would be done for foreign countries. It was going to stimulate the purchasing power of foreign countries. It was going to make it possible to do some business with China. It was going to substantially increase purchases by Mexico. In proportion as it did, manifestly, according to them, it would solve the unemployment problem. Let us see what has happened. The record is very clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Now, let us look at China, as far as the benefits of the Silver Purchase Act were concerned. Instead of assisting China it resulted in the debasement of China's coin. It stimulated Chinese speculators and smugglers to get silver out of the country. It introduced a wave of price devaluation in China, and it ran China off the silver standard and on to a managed currency standard. There is nobody who will stand up in his place and deny that that has been the effect of the silver-purchase program.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; I will not.

Secondly, with respect to Mexico, everybody in this House will remember the sharp message that came from the Mexican State Department and the President of Mexico as a result of the effect of the silver act upon the economic fabric of Mexico.

They have been a long time getting over the disastrous effect that this silver policy had upon the internal economy of our neighbor to the south.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; I decline to yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman knows better.

Mr. DIRKSEN. So while we gave a subsidy to the domestic producer of newly mined silver, this silver program is at the same time the delight of the foreign producers, smugglers, and speculators, since 80 percent of our silver comes from foreign countries. It has had a very definitely disturbing effect upon the economy of other silver countries.

Finally, we are left here with a huge hoard of silver which if we ever undertook to sell must be sold at the world price and at very much of a loss. Look at the hearings, page 65. There you will see Mr. Bell's testimony. We paid from $1,500,000,000 to $1,750,000,000 for the silver. Mr. Bell was asked what we could get for it if we had to sell it, and he said either $900,000,000 or $1,000,000,000. It means a loss of almost half a billion should we attempt to liquidate this hoard of metal which is a canker and a sore to the monetary system of the country. It is high time we were doing something about it, and this Congress can do something about it. Last week I filed a discharge petition at the Clerk's desk. Incidentally, it is the first discharge petition filed in the Seventy-sixth Congress. It calls for the repeal of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934. If this Congress, in line with the demands of the people and in line with the mandate that was expressed on the 8th day of November in this country, wants to resolve confidence on the part of the business structure, let us give them a dependable monetary system. One of the first steps in the direction of resolving confidence and stimulating a wedlock of idle dollars and idle hands in the direction of prosperity will be when this abomination which is known as the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 is taken off the books.

Foreign newspapers, like the India Times, for instance, said that so far as the preamble to the Silver Purchase Act was concerned—when we had a preamble in the bill—

For sheer economic nonsense, the preamble to the silver declaration is hard to beat.

That is the evaluation placed upon it by experts in silver countries like India.

It is about time this Congress got wise and took this abomination from the books. We can do it now; and I admonish you that if you want to do something in the direction of resurrecting confidence in the country so we can start on the long, uphill climb that represents the high road of prosperity, I suggest that you march right up to the Clerk's desk and put your signature on the discharge petition so we can get action. There is a reason for this. The Silver Purchase Act expires on the 30th day of June. I suppose that in the last week of June a resolution will be brought in to continue it—you know how such things are done in the last days of Congress when adjournment fever strikes Congress—and then the resolution will have to be acted on at the other side of the Capitol. The better way to do it is the more leisurely way of considering now the ultimate repeal of the Silver Purchase Act, to discharge the Ways and Means Committee from further consideration of the bill, and then have it brought to the floor while we still have time and leisure and are still free from that sense of haste under which such an act ought not to be considered. [Applause.]

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is under the control of the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DIRKSEN. One other important aspect of this matter needs consideration also, and that is the inflation of our currency. The Treasury purchases silver at 43 cents, or newly mined silver at 64.64 cents per ounce, and then issues certificates on the basis of $1.29. On June 30, 1933, before this Silver Purchase Act was on the statute books, there was $360,399,000 worth of silver certificates in circulation outside the Treasury and the Federal Reserve. On June 30, 1938, silver certificates in circulation had reached the staggering total of $1,230,000,000. Thus by leaps and bounds we have inflated our currency by the specious device of issuing silver certificates far in excess of the bullion value of the silver. Some day this house of silver may topple upon its sponsors, and they will then wonder what is wrong with the country.

The Secretary of the Treasury is under a mandate. He can do no other than fix the price of silver every day and then buy whatever is offered. No one can read the hearings on this bill without detecting in the answers of the Secretary to the questions propounded to him an earnest hope that the Congress will get busy without delay and repeal this monetary monstrosity.

Now is the time to do yeoman service in the interest of the Nation by going to the Clerk's desk and signing the discharge petition.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, in the light of recent happenings, I think this is an appropriate time for someone to offer observations on Americanism; and I should like, in the time at my disposal, to give utterance to a few random thoughts on this subject to you, my fellow Members of the House of Representatives, who, in my judgment, take your Americanism straight.

I have been very much gratified to receive lately many letters from people in various walks of life who live in the district I have the honor to represent stating vehemently their indignation at the meeting recently held in the city of New York by the German bund. I am glad to see that there is an awakening of the public conscience with reference to the dangers within our own borders to the Americanism that we prize coming from propagandists of foreign governments. From such little knowledge as I have of the German tongue, I think the word "bund" means "bound." Consequently those in our country who profess allegiance to the German bund are bound to Germany; and I for one—and I think in company with the great mass of American people—would be glad to change that to "bound for Germany." [Applause.] Whatever the lineage or the location of our ancestors, it behooves everyone who claims to be an American to be bound to America. And fortunately we have patriotic citizens whose ancestors lived in many lands.

I think it well for the people of this country to know the solid ground upon which our American Government is founded, and I believe that we, as missionaries to them, should disseminate that information and spread the enduring doctrines of our republican form of government at every time and in every place within our power.

It has been many centuries since Tacitus said that a republican form of government is more easily applauded than realized. That statement is true. In theory it is the most perfect form of government; in practice, naturally, it has many obstacles to overcome. This fact probably led to the remark of an eminent Englishman to the effect that in a democracy the people are ever eager for rapid progress, and the only progress which can be rapid is progress downhill. Perhaps the difficulties of a democracy arise from the facts that people are people and that human nature is human nature. It cannot come into full flower in a single generation.

Let us look for a few moments at this Government of ours and see upon what it is based.

You will remember that Mr. Gladstone said of the Constitution of the United States that it was the greatest document ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man. The statement with reference to the pre-eminence of that immortal document is, in my judgment, quite correct, but I cannot agree with that part of it which says that it was struck off at a given time. It came, rather, as the heritage of the ages, through slow processes of progress and development, attended with strife, suffering, hardship, and even bloodshed.

Let us go back and trace briefly at least one source of our Government, that part of it which came from the Anglo-Saxon people. You will recall that in the early centuries the great masses of people had no liberties and no privileges except such as were vouchsafed to them by the kings and the ruling classes. The Crusades and the English wars decimated the ranks of the nobility, and the masses of the people then began to feel a sense of greater power. This was a very gradual process.

There came the extension of the postal system that enabled the people to correspond with one another and exchange ideas. There came the invention of the printing press, which enabled the man in the hut to read the printed page as well as the prince in the palace. There came the invention of firearms, by which the humblest could protect himself against the most mighty. With these means of communication and with this means of defense, the sense of class consciousness and power grew and developed and the people determined to rise and claim for themselves their own rights, formerly accepted perforce as mere privileges granted to them from the ruling classes. This led, as you know, to the Magna Carta, when the barons wrested from old King John at Runnymede that great charter of liberty. So, having wrested from the kingly authority these rights which belonged to the great masses of the people, our fathers came over to this country imbued with those ideas and determined not to surrender those rights, and so they sought to establish a government quite different from that of the kingly or dictatorial rule.

It will be recalled that some of the followers of Washington, remembering the conditions under which their people had lived for centuries, wanted to make him king but that great patriot was done with things kingly and was a leading spirit in helping with the organization of this democratic country. So in contradistinction, it is quite significant to note that our doctrine of government begins not with the king or with the nobility, but with the people and that they stated in the organic law that we, the people of the United States, ordain and establish this Constitution. It devolves upon you and upon me and upon all Americans to keep our country true to these principles upon which the fathers founded it.

I wonder at the foresight and vision and prescience of these marvelous men who gave us this organic law and the principles upon which our Government is founded, coming as the rich heritage of the ages through slow processes and through much suffering. Their wisdom is reflected in the fact that these principles have not been changed in 150 years. They have not been changed because truth does not change. The Bible is just as applicable today as when the written words came from the hands of the sacred writers. We have in our Nation enduring principles of government, and it behooves us all to realize this fact in full appreciation of its worth.

If you will look at the amendments to the Constitution of the United States—and practically speaking, there have been only 11, inasmuch as the first 10, or the Bill of Rights, were substantially a part of the original instrument—you will see that they go principally to the machinery of government and not to the principles upon which the fathers founded this country. I wish I had time to elaborate upon that, but through your own study and your own research you will attest the accuracy of the statement I have made. It is significant also that, though the men who gave us our Government in our organic law were eminent statesmen, the commercial interests of our country, the businessmen, if you please, were principally responsible for the formation and the adoption of this instrument.

Why do I say that? It will be recalled that the year before the Constitutional Convention there was a convention held at Annapolis, the purpose of which was to amend the old Articles of Confederation so that the Thirteen States, which in many instances had their own tariff restrictions, their own moneys, and their own armies, might have an opportunity to trade among themselves and break down the commercial barriers at State lines. There was no disposition for a central government with great authority and with the power to tax; but they wanted some basis of commercial intercourse, and the Constitutional Convention was, as a matter of fact, the aftermath of that convention at Annapolis. The tardiness in the ratification of the Constitution was due in some degree to the fact that the delegates had exceeded their authority, inasmuch as it had been their designated purpose to get some basis of trade among the Thirteen States. So I say that this document is in contradistinction to those which prevail in some countries across the seas, because ours is a Government of the people. And inasmuch as business was so largely responsible in giving us this Government, it devolves upon business also to preserve and promote it.

Business in its various phases is the natural, the normal, and the only source of governmental revenue and of private employment. In my judgment, we could relieve many of the ills that exist today if legitimate business were permitted to proceed with certainty and with a reasonable expectation of a fair profit, and if we could get back into the great body of our people that same spirit of stamina, self-reliance, and thrift which characterized the men who gave us the United States of America. [Applause.]

Let a governmental bond issue bearing 2½ percent be offered to the American people and it will be oversubscribed many times, which is an indication of the fact that the idle capital of this country, and there is plenty of it, cannot find a commercial investment from which it can be assured that the capital will be protected and the yield be as much as 2½ percent.

So I say if we want to relieve unemployment, if we want to get this country back on the basis on which the fathers founded it, it behooves us to return to and adhere to those original principles.

With reference to the distinction between America and some of these lands across the sea it is readily observed from this random recital that we build this country for permanence, and the institutions reflect that spirit. Listen! If three men in Europe were to pass away before the rising of tomorrow's sun there would be a state of chaos over there. Just what it would be no man knows, but I think no one would dispute the fact that conditions would be chaotic, because those countries in each instance are founded upon one man, and the people are actuated by fear of that man and not by love of their institutions as we are over here. In this country a thousand of our most important men in all branches of our enterprise and endeavor might pass away before the rising of tomorrow's sun, and this great Nation of freedom, of liberty, of faith, and of hope that the fathers gave us would go right on, because it is builded for permanence upon enduring and eternal governmental truths which must have come in the first instance from the Almighty Himself.

I believe I called attention in a talk I made in this Chamber last year to a very pertinent remark. When James Russell Lowell, the American poet and a statesman of no mean ability, was visiting in France he had a talk with Francois Guizot, who had been a Prime Minister of France, as you know, and was a great historian. Guizot asked Lowell how long the American Republic would endure. Lowell answered very aptly:

As long as the principles of its founders remain dominant in the hearts of its people.

I am glad to see the people are awakening to the dangers of these spurious "isms" which propagandists from abroad are spreading in this land of ours. You will recall that in the Farewell Address of George Washington, read in our hearing a few days ago, he himself uttered words that were practically prophetic when he stated that the time might come in this country when some would rise seeking to undermine what they could not overthrow.

What I think of those propagandists who are preaching these spurious doctrines is pretty well illustrated by an incident about which I read many years ago in that book of the old-timers by Mr. Baldwin, The Flush Times of Alabama and Mississippi. In those days executions were public. A man was passing along the road when a very notorious and desperate criminal had just been hanged and was still wriggling at the end of the rope. This law-abiding citizen pointed up at him and said, "There he is, standing on nothing and kicking at the Government." I hope the time will come when these propagandists over here, who are standing on nothing and kicking at this Government, will be sent back to live under the regimes that practice the things they preach, where there is no such thing as liberty, where there is no such thing as freedom of speech, where there is no such thing as freedom of religious worship, where there is no such thing as freedom of fraternal gatherings, and where they live in an atmosphere of constant fear and uncertainty.

You know, we made a very laudable effort a good many years ago to make the world safe for democracy. In that struggle we sacrificed some of the flower of the manhood of this great country of ours. It was a noble enterprise, but unfortunately it has failed. It has left many boys sleeping beneath the poppies in Flanders fields and brought others back sick and maimed and wounded to our own shores to be cared for. It was a laudable undertaking to make the world safe for democracy, but what behooves you and me today as representatives of the American people in the Congress of the United States is to see that we keep democracy safe for America. [Applause.]

I like to reflect often upon the epitaph of Thomas Jefferson. You are all familiar with its lines. In that epitaph, which he wrote to be engraved on his tomb, he did not mention the fact that he had been President of the United States or that he had served in important posts abroad, but he mentioned three things: That he was the author of the Declaration of Independence, which back in that day when they were having, even in this country, imprisonment for debt, was in a sense a declaration for physical freedom; that he was the founder of the University of Virginia, which represented the freedom of the mind; and that he was the author of the statute for religious freedom in Virginia, the freedom of the soul.

Upon these three pillars on which our Government and all free institutions must rest, Jefferson predicated the memory of his service to the people of the United States. There is nothing more important for you and me as representatives of the people than to keep these pillars secure—freedom of the body, freedom of the mind, and freedom of the soul—that these tenets of liberty given us by the fathers may remain inviolate in this beloved country of ours.

I like to think about this country. I am glad the people are beginning to understand more of its history and the worth of its institutions. No artist can paint our picture of it. No poet can pen our psalm to it. No orator can speak our devotion for it. We love it. God bless it and keep it true, through your efforts and mine and those of the people we represent, to these enduring principles upon which the fathers founded it. [Applause.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gross].

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, it might be well for me to say a word of introduction, because I have not yet learned to know a good many of you.

It is not often, I believe, that a bona fide farmer has the privilege of standing up here and addressing the House. It is not very often that a Member who goes home over every week end and milks cows, comes back here to tell you about it, but yesterday I milked 15 cows, which is a common occurrence with me on every Sunday in order to give the boys a break. I am not telling you this for any other reason than to show you that I am a farmer and proud of it. I live on the farm where I was born, in a brick house built by my grandfather out of bricks that he made himself on that farm. In that house he raised 11 children and my father raised 9 and I raised 8, and I would like to have you see those 8 children just so you would know how boys and girls do grow on a good farm in a great State. [Applause.]

I now want, in farmer fashion, to spend a few minutes setting forth certain facts relative to Pennsylvania, my State, and the New Deal.

In the northeastern part of the United States lie approximately 45,000 square miles comprising Pennsylvania, known as the Keystone State. Pennsylvania for many generations has been the wonderland of the Nation. Today it contains the homes of 10,000,000 souls who are proud to call the Keystone State their own.

Pennsylvania, all things considered, is the greatest State in the Union. With its alabaster cities; its golden harvests; its mines; its oil wells; its rivers. From Philadelphia to Erie and from Waynesburg to Honesdale, is a treasure land of wealth and potential happiness beyond the ability of man's mind to comprehend. There is no State in the Union better adapted to the development of a hardy, vigorous people. It has a bracing, temperate climate—free from earthquakes, tornadoes, and hurricanes that often affect and afflict other States. As for a place to live wisely, healthfully, and happily, Pennsylvania is unsurpassed on this continent.

From the Delaware River to the Allegheny, and beyond, the Keystone State is a colorful pageant of natural beauty. Rugged, forest-clad mountains, and smiling fertile valleys, rushing streams and placid lakes, rolling hills and broad fields of wheat, corn, and tobacco, an abundance of wild game and bass that rise eagerly to the sportsman's lure. These are only a few of the riches of this wonderland.

Pennsylvania's natural wealth does not end there. Beneath the beauty of the mountain, meadow, and river lie fabulous strata of black gold. And beneath that soil flow torrents of liquid gold waiting to be converted to the uses of the motorized age. Across the State's broad reaches, in myriad cities, towns, and hamlets blaze the fires of countless furnaces, foundries, and mills of great diversity provide a livelihood for Pennsylvania's workers.

Pennsylvania's industry is a symbol throughout the world for prosperity and progress. Coal, oil, steel, cement, textiles, and innumerable others—it is upon these that the well-being of Pennsylvania and of its people rest.

For many, many years the Keystone State has annually loaded more freight cars with its products to distribute throughout the world than any other State in the Union. Her products have been recognized as a national asset and Pennsylvania for many years was not only the pride of her own citizenry but the glory of the Nation. The stability of her people has been widely recognized, and throughout the Nation today, wherever you find people who trace their ancestry back to the Pennsylvania Dutch you will find strong, honest citizens who are still on their own and who resent the fact that the Government wants to help everybody.

We in Pennsylvania refused to be regimented by the New Deal and our farmers never will be regimented. In 1910 President Theodore Roosevelt, speaking on the York fairgrounds, said to York County: "I am proud of your big barns and happy in the fact that every fall you have them full." Little did anyone think that day that 28 years later another Roosevelt would come along with a communistic Secretary of Agriculture and tell us that we cannot fill those barns, but we Pennsylvania Dutch are going to continue to fill those barns, regardless of the Roosevelts, Wallaces, and the New Deal threats. We love to see corn grow tall. We glory in 40-bushel wheat. We delight in clover and alfalfa knee high, and bluegrass sods that never tramp through, and we are going to continue to fill these barns as God blesses us with rain and sunshine—regardless of the New Deal.

Pennsylvania, a preponderantly Republican State, maintained her position through the first Roosevelt election, but then, due to the New Deal assault 2 years later Pennsylvania did fall by the wayside and elected the first Democratic Governor the State has had in 40 years. Then is when Pennsylvania's troubles began. The little new deal was set up, patterned after the New Deal in Washington, and we found ourselves wallowing in the New Deal mire. We soon found our great industries paralyzed—people going out of employment and being forced onto the relief rolls. We saw the State pay rolls padded, and in a short time the little new deal had inflicted upon Pennsylvania's industry the ghastly sum of $340,000,000 of additional taxes yearly. We saw labor troubles arising and strikes in our great industrial areas, and witnessed the humiliating scene of the Governor of a great commonwealth flying into an industrial section and closing plants, depriving thousands of men and women of a livelihood, who had work and wanted to work—in order to cater to the whims of a few hell raisers. And this debauching procedure was carried on within the confines of Pennsylvania until at Hershey the sturdy Dutch farmers of the community took the situation in hand and set an example for public officials by going into the great Hershey chocolate plant and taking out the sit-down strikers and clubbing them out of the community. And this thing all happened after a week of striking and rioting in the chocolate plant, and within 3 miles of the Pennsylvania State police barracks. Here we again had concrete evidence that the application of just good horse sense from the common people was the solution for some very troublesome questions.

For 3 years Pennsylvania suffered at the hands of the New Deal beast, when the righteous indignation of a great citizenry began to assert itself, and in the summer of 1938 everywhere on the streets men and women were expressing their resentment to the assaults on the State by the New Deal, and it was evident that something was going to happen. War had been declared on the New Deal by that great middle class of God-fearing, liberty-loving Pennsylvanians, that band of men and women who on Sunday morning can be seen going to church, taking their children with them, like pioneer mothers used to take their babies and small children, as they trekked westward after the prairie schooners.

The 8th of November was the day when the decisive battle was fought. That great group of uncontrolled, serious-minded people, the middle class, who can always be depended on when they act to act rightly, went to the polls and voted in their traditional manner, as their better judgment had directed them. And on Wednesday morning of November the 9th, when the smoke of the battle had cleared away, the New Deal beast lay slain at the feet of the modern David, the red-headed breaker boy from Plymouth, Pa., and a new song arose in the Keystone State—it was Forward Pennsylvania. Boys and girls playing on the school grounds were singing it. Housewives were humming it in the kitchens. Men everywhere were expressing optimism and confidence that was based upon the foundation built by the pioneers. To us had been bequeathed a great tradition, and in the singing of this new hymn Pennsylvania was declaring that it would carry on. New Hope had arisen and Pennsylvania is again coming into her own. On January 17 hundreds of thousands of people, on a cold and dreary day, flocked into Harrisburg to see the breaker boy assume the governorship. Early in the day trains came pouring in and unloaded their thousands. Traffic had to be suspended. At 12 o'clock the parade began. Thousands and thousands in solid formation passing in parade, which lasted far into the night. Such a large, happy, and optimistic group had never before assembled in Pennsylvania. They were not celebrating someone's defeat. They were celebrating a great victory, in the firm belief that this was the beginning of a better day in our national life. The great damage inflicted by the beast is by no means beyond repair, and today we find industrial leaders declaring that the pay rolls will again be in excess of $1,000,000,000, as they at one time were. Today a great revival of business is on in the Keystone State, and Pennsylvania's contribution to the national income, unless we have too much New Deal interference from Washington, will in a few years again reach the sum total of $8,000,000,000, as it at one time was. And when I say New Deal interference from Washington I mean just that.

Mr. Chairman, members of the Committee, I have studied a graph of industry in the United States running back 150 years, and I find during that period we have had four major price swings; all brought about by war. We have had numerous depressions. But if we add together all the depressions in the 150 years, they will not equal in severity and duration this one depression in which we now find ourselves. And it is all because President Roosevelt refuses to let the natural economic laws function. On the doorstep of President Roosevelt and a few New Deal "rubber stamp" Congressmen can be laid the blame for our present economic troubles. With this New Deal interference eliminated, may I repeat that Pennsylvania's contribution to the national income will again reach the sum total of $8,000,000,000, as it at one time was, made up of the following items: Metals, textiles, minerals, mines, paper, food products, clay, glass, stone, leather, rubber, natural gas, tobacco and its products, lumber, railroad repair shops, agricultural and farm products, and many others. One great highway project will employ 10,000 men. Farm machinery heads are optimistic. Great gain is seen in the anthracite coal region. Shipbuilding in our navy yards is going forward. Our steel mills, the greatest in America, are preparing for record jobs. Automobile manufacturers foresee much better business in Pennsylvania. Relief will be administered more economically. Mail-order sales are already increasing. More carpenters are being employed. Banks are going to extend more credit. Business, instead of being antagonized, has now got public sympathy. Pennsylvania's retail merchants are increasing their stocks. Meat-packing industry in Pennsylvania is being expanded. Kitchen toil will be reduced. Farmers and workers will be able to buy labor-saving devices for the housewives. Hotels have launched new advertising campaigns. The great textile industry, with a $103,000,000 pay roll, rapidly leaving the State, has stopped and will stay in Pennsylvania. More insurance is already being bought. The Pennsylvania Railroad is reconditioning thousands of cars to meet the needs of the new administration. Already the Governor has lowered the retail price of milk to consumers in metropolitan areas, showing his sympathetic attitude. Farmers are more optimistic and are purchasing much-needed equipment. Great gains in the electrical field are seen.

While it will be impossible to reduce taxes, as the new Governor had hoped, because of the New Deal extravagance in the last few years, Pennsylvania's industries are confident that the promise will be made good and the State's budget balanced in the near future, and have pledged to stand by and take it on the chin a little while longer.

And I want to say to you New Deal Members of the House who are not coming back after 1940 I have taken this time in order to give you the information you are going to need to carry back to your people.

I want to say to you from the South—some of you will be here, I know—but take this message back to your poor, be-deviled, poverty-stricken cotton farmers: Tell them that Pennsylvania has started a great movement that is rapidly gaining momentum that no force on earth can stop; that the Republican Party is going into power again in 1940—that party that set up the protective tariff and enthroned cotton king by that tariff; that tariff which has rested on your cottonfields like a heavenly benediction for years and years and made it possible for cotton and the South to find its place. Tell them that the day is coming—and it will be here in 1940—when the cotton farmers who have 10 or 50 bales of cotton will again have money enough to buy a cotton shirt, which they do not now have.

And you New Deal Members west of the Ohio to the Mississippi River who are not coming back here in 1940, tell your good people out there that they should hold on and stand by. Tell your corn and hog raisers that the Nation will again use pork and lard produced in the United States of America.

And you New Deal Members in the Missouri River Valley, tell your farmers, as you join their ranks, that Pennsylvania has started something that is going on. Tell them to feed the cattle and take care of calves—the Nation is going to eat beef again one of these days—and it is going to start in a big way in 1940.

And you New Deal Members from the Rocky Mountain States, tell your sheep herders we are going to be wearing woolen suits again. They shall not let the flocks go to pieces. Tell your cattlemen to raise calves—the Middle West is going to feed cattle again.

And you New Deal Members on the Pacific coast, tell the boys out there that we of the East are going to visit them, and we will leave a lot of money there, and there is a better day awaiting them. We are not afraid of your six-shooters, and we are not afraid of your women, but we will not come unless they get rid of that hell raiser, Harry Bridges.

Now, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I have been prompted today to set forth these facts because the New Deal has the Nation on the brink of a mighty precipice, and in fear, horror, and distress. We find our people not knowing whither they are going.

I have presented these facts to you in the earnest hope that they will be heralded throughout the land and that men will take on new courage, buckle up their belts, and renew their faith in democracy, and, with confidence in themselves and their fellow men, be in a position to enjoy the blessings that are going to be made possible by that parade that has been started in Harrisburg, headed by the red-headed breaker boy, and which will in 1941 carry him into the White House. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I want first to express my very sincere appreciation for the very splendid timely remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. I quite agree with what he said, and while it may be that some people will say that it is the recital of a platitude to rehearse the glories of this great Nation of ours, it seems that in view of the tendency of modern times we cannot reiterate too often the opportunities and the advantages that America has to offer against the world. I am afraid, however, that some of us in our zealotry to preach patriotism may, at some time, unthinkingly and unwittingly, refer to some of our citizens in a manner that I consider highly improper.

I recall very distinctly at the time we were approaching our entrance into the World War that people of German descent in my State were hounded and driven under suspicion, in a manner that was unbecoming this great country that we love so much. Today, in this country of ours, because some little minor group has banded together under the name of "the bund" and held meetings throughout the country that we all despise, perhaps, and condemn, let it not be said that the bund, or any other organization of that character, represents the true character of the German people whom I have known and lived among my entire life.

I do not think for one minute that the bund is representative of the German people and I want the Members of this House to know that the German people as I know them in Wisconsin, and I live in a community which is predominantly German in character, are among the finest citizens in the entire United States. There are no more hard-working, frugal, intelligent people in this country than the people who came here from Germany, who have been able to assimilate our traditions and who have been assimilated in this country of ours, and who are real Americans.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to add to the gentleman's statement that throughout my district we have numerous German communities, and I subscribe to their character and integrity and Americanism just as the gentleman has with respect to the Germans that reside in his State.

Mr. KEEFE. The thing I fear, Mr. Chairman, is that there will be upon this floor, as a result of a proper provocation, perhaps, or the continuance of such meetings as were held in New York, inflammatory speeches that will bring discredit upon the German people who are not entitled to receive any such discredit.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ENGEL. I served as an officer in France in the Thirty-second Division, which was a Michigan-Wisconsin division, and also in the army of occupation in Germany. That division received 3,000 replacements in 3 days. During the occupation in Germany we had a banquet of officers of that division, and on the same program the names of the officers of the division were printed, many of whom came from Wisconsin—Rhinelander, Milwaukee, and elsewhere—and 60 percent of the names on that program of officers who served in that division in France against Germany had German names.

Mr. KEEFE. I thank the gentleman. May I state this further. I am beginning to wonder what has become of these people who just a short time ago were so loud in their praise, vocally or secretly, of the Soviet Government of Russia and the communistically inspired organizations that there are in this country today. I have seen meetings held in this country under the guise of patriotism that were conducted by communistic front organizations, where the ideals of this country of ours were torn to shreds, and its flag trampled upon. I failed to hear these gentlemen who are now telling about the bunds getting on their feet and condemning that type of organization. I want it said that so far as I am concerned I condemn both of them, and I think it is high time that we do not just simply transfer our attention from the communistic party to the bund, but that in the speeches which are made on the floor of this House we condemn in no uncertain terms both those types of organization that are un-American and contrary to the ideals and traditions of this country. [Applause.] I despise any organization of that type, and it seems to me, Members of the Committee, instead of our standing up here and mouthing our patriotic sentiments, instead of standing here from day to day and week to week and month to month condemning the activities of organizations such as I have described, it is high time that we as Members of Congress do something about it. Why is it possible that in America the Communist can stand on the platform and condemn and seek to destroy the very principles of this Government? Why is it that representatives of the bund are permitted to stand on the platform and give vocal expression to the ideas given up in New York the other day, and that all we do is to talk about it and try to tell the people of the beauties and glories of Americanism?

I say to the Members of this Committee that it seems to me that the time is here now when we ought to begin to be responsive to the wishes and demands of the people of America. The time is here now when we ought to do something in the shape of real legislation to bring relief from the intolerable conditions that give rise to such organizations. [Applause.] What have we actually done aside from just administering a temporary injection in the arm of the working people in America? What are we doing for the farmers instead of merely talking about them and standing here and mouthing weasel words to them? What are we doing that evidences that this Congress intends to solve these domestic problems? The bills that have been introduced by Members of this House lie locked up in committee rooms waiting the will and caprice of the majority side of this Congress to bring them out into the open and do something for the people of America.

I am happy to state, and I address my remarks to the Democratic side of the House, that I saw in the paper this morning that the Democratic administration has finally determined that the course they have pursued for the last 6 years is finally found to be wrong, and that from now on we are going to have no more reforms. They say we are going to have progress and recovery with full steam ahead for business. The President himself timed his remarks addressed to the two captains of labor, Mr. Green and Mr. Lewis, with those of the Secretary of Commerce delivered out in Iowa.

They are beginning to scatter the propaganda to the people of this Nation that they really need business after all—business that has been hamstrung. Business designated as "Bourbon," "blue blood," "these economic royalists." With business hamstrung with taxes, with every sort of punitive legislation, these "plutocrats," these "economic royalists," are now being called upon to arise and shake off these shackles and go to work because they are the only ones in America, so Mr. Hopkins finally concludes, and so the President finally concludes, who can bring employment to America and put these idle people back on the pay roll. I say to you Members of the Democratic side that I hope the President means what he says; I hope Mr. Hopkins means what he says; I hope that they intend to embark upon a sane course of recovery. I hope that they have finally determined to renounce the destructive, unworkable parts of their program which has resulted in the staggering debt that is paralyzing business with taxes and threatens to bankrupt the entire Nation. But I say to you that, so far as I am concerned, there will have to be something more than just mere words. Why do you not repeal the iniquitous undistributed-profits tax? Why do you not put a curb on Mr. Hull, with his reciprocal-trade agreements that are killing our domestic industry? Why do you not recall the nomination of Thomas R. Amlie to the Interstate Commerce Commission? Why do you not do one of the thousand things that could be done by legislating through the acts of this Congress, and telling the people of the country that you mean what you say? You promised us the abundant life many times before, Mr. Roosevelt, and you have gone the other way. I cannot believe that you mean exactly what you say when you say that you are going to give business a chance to recover. We want recovery; and as one Republican, if the gentleman in the White House or in the Department of Commerce would offer a constructive program that will do something for business, for labor, for agriculture, and for the aged, I will support it and get behind it with everything that I can and stop bickering about it. Let us get down to work and do something; jerk some of these bills out of the committee and bring them here and let us get this Government of ours started toward real recovery. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in asking for time today is to analyze this bill with respect to the appropriation provided for post-office buildings.

You will notice on page 51 of the bill it provides for an appropriation of $30,000,000, but as I construe that appropriation, in the light of former enactments of Congress, I do not think it provides for the construction of a single new post-office building during the coming fiscal year. It simply provides for the completion of the construction of buildings for which allotments have already been made.

The act of August 25, 1937, authorized an appropriation of $70,000,000 for public buildings outside of the District of Columbia. The act of June 21, 1938, authorized an additional sum of $60,000,000, making a total appropriation for the purpose $130,000,000. On August 25, 1937, $23,000,000 was appropriated out of this authorization. On March 28, 1938, $11,000,000 more was appropriated, and on June 21, 1938, $25,000,000 additional was appropriated, making a total of $59,000,000 appropriated from the authorization of $130,000,000, as a result of both acts of Congress. Thirty million dollars is asked for in the pending bill to be expended during the fiscal year 1940, making the appropriation $89,000,000 out of the authorization of $130,000,000.

In view of the fact that this bill is simply carrying out the provisions set forth in House Document No. 177, it is high time this Congress increased this appropriation of $30,000,000 for the needed post-office buildings throughout the territories which have not, in my opinion, been treated properly.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield for a question.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman knows that the Congress eliminated the "pork barrel" in public buildings by setting up the Building Commission. What the gentleman speaks of is the result of the work of the Building Commission. Under the provisions of the act setting up the Commission it is necessary to qualify in order to get a post office. The mere fact that a Congressman wants a post-office building in his district now does not get him the post office.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Please do not take up all my time. Under the provisions that were adopted, wherever the postal receipts exceeded $10,000, that city is qualified. The State of California, for instance, has suffered. The State of Montana has suffered. I want you to compare those States with the gentleman's own State of Missouri, as shown by this House Document 177, and see how it has gotten along. I want the Members of Congress who have in mind trying to get post-office buildings in their respective districts, to study the provisions of this House Document 177. It will show how some of the States have gotten nearly all of their needs, and others very few buildings. I say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] in my own State there were 18 eligible cities a year ago. Under the operations of the said act passed in 1937, it will take 51 years before the people of my district are supplied with buildings now urgently needed for carrying on the business of the United States Government in the form of post offices.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have complimented the gentleman from Montana on several occasions for getting things done for his constituents, and I compliment him again. No Member of the House works harder for his people. My district is part of the city of St. Louis. All that I have been able to get for my district is about one-third of a post office, a branch post office. That new branch post office covers territory about one-third of which is in my congressional district and two-thirds in another congressional district.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I want the Members of Congress to see how the State of Missouri has gotten along, the State of Alabama, the State of Georgia, the State of Arkansas, the State of Tennessee, and the State of Kentucky. Texas has not done so well, but as far as California, New York, Montana, and Nebraska are concerned, they have all suffered.

I want to acquit the committee of any neglect or criticism in that respect, because I think they have tried sincerely to carry out what they considered an equitable distribution of the amount authorized during the 3 years as provided by the act of 1937. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago I wanted to interrupt the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] long enough to display something and ask him a question. While he was speaking I needed to step down to the office of the Sergeant at Arms to get a little of "what makes the wheels go round," and this green paper is what the Sergeant at Arms handed me. I would like to ask whether other Members of the Committee are not also glad to get occasionally this same sort of thing from the Sergeant at Arms? Is this money? I certainly so regard it. I notice that this $5 bill and this $1 bill that I have before me are marked "silver certificate." The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] said we have been buying a lot of silver and burying it in the ground, absolutely useless. I do not regard this paper which represents that silver as useless. I did not discount this bill one bit. I took this $5 bill as worth $5, and I fancy you do the same thing.

Now, as a matter of fact, we have been buying silver. I notice that we have now about $1,600,000,000 outstanding in silver certificates. I feel that issuing such certificates against this silver is a perfectly legitimate and wise function in our monetary system. At the last session of this House last week the gentleman from New York had a great deal to say both about the purchase of domestic silver and foreign silver. At that time on last Friday I attempted to differentiate between the two ideas. I want you Members from the South, who have a surplus of cotton and would like to dispose of it, to think along this line—we may be able to sell more cotton abroad if we can sell to those countries which have a silver basis for their money system. Why should we not exchange our surplus farm products for foreign silver?

I ask you if it is not a good policy for us to take foreign silver for our surplus cotton, for our surplus wheat, and for our other surplus commodities if we can do so? This, however, is not the reason I rose.

I rose primarily, Mr. Chairman, to say that it is plainly evident to me that this age-old battle, between those who want a certain kind of money and those who want a different kind of money, continues with increasing intensity down to this very moment. In the few minutes allotted to me I cannot go adequately into the monetary policy. I wish I could. One Member who stood in this Well this morning contemptuously spoke of "a managed currency." I ask that gentleman, Who now manages the currency? Who has been doing so? If it is a managed currency on the part of the Government perhaps in his eyes it is contemptible. But what is the alternative? The alternative is a currency managed by the banks. We have had a great banking history. No country on earth, not even England, has had a more unique and interesting banking history than has the United States of America. This holds true of our metallic money history as well. I wish I had time to go into it more fully.

Let us first look at our metallic money or coinage history. One hundred years ago we had no mint and felt the need of establishing a system of coinage, so that was done in the administration of the first President. We are told that George Washington took a great interest in the mint and that Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson made important contribution to our coinage scheme. At first it was contemplated that the dollar should be made either of gold or of silver and that the legal or mint ratio should be 15 to 1. Why was that ratio adopted? Because for many years the market ratio of gold and silver had been 15 to 1. Paul Revere was a goldsmith working with the precious metals, and his fathers before him for several generations had been workers in the precious metals. It was found when our mint was established that an ounce of gold was worth as much as 15 ounces of silver, approximately, and that that market ratio had prevailed for a long time. Accordingly, our first laws provided for a mint ratio to correspond with the market ratio of 15 to 1, and such it remained until about the year 1834, as my memory serves me.

A little over 100 years ago the mint ratio was changed and made 16 to 1, which it has remained to this present time. This change was necessitated by a fluctuation in the market price of the two precious metals. With the violent fluctuations in the market price of the two precious metals, especially of gold about the year 1849 with the discovery of gold in California and elsewhere, and especially of silver about 10 years later with the discovery of the great silver mines in our West, it seemed probable that we could not have bimetallism with such fluctuations. Meanwhile our country turned more and more toward paper money.

One hundred years ago banks were increasing in number and just prior to the panic of 1837 banks were furnishing most of our currency in the form of bank notes. There was a lot of slipshod banking in those days. Many of these bank notes were not well secured and became known as wildcat notes. One of the great evils at that time was a monetary system in which "bank managed currency" was allowed to run riot and do much harm.

During the great struggle between the North and the South, greenbacks were issued; and thus we substituted a governmental currency for the preceding bank currency. At the same time we reformed the banking system by the National Banking Act of 1863, which gave the country a new kind of bank currency which at least was far superior to the bank currency which had prevailed during the preceding 20 years. For about 20 years after the war there was a fierce conflict between those who favored a governmental currency, such as United States Treasury notes, and those who recommended bank currency represented by national bank notes. The advocates of the bank currency were quite successful over their opponents in spite of the fact that the national-bank currency was based upon an interest-bearing, bonded debt, and was not sufficiently elastic in character to serve the needs of business. The financial interests pointed out the fiat nature of greenbacks and contended that they were inadequate for our financial needs, in spite of the fact that they represented a non-interest-bearing obligation of the Government. Thus while the "battle of the standards" raged between gold and silver, which had been the money of our fathers and in which silver lost by being demonetized, an equally fierce battle raged between the currencies.

The banking element succeeded in getting more and more control over the money supply of the country. Those provisions of the Constitution were lost sight of which read as follows: "Congress shall have power to coin money and regulate the value thereof. No State shall make anything but gold or silver a legal tender in payment of debt." Thus it came about that we got a money system closely regulated and controlled by the banks which, in my judgment, put relatively too great a value on gold and which gave too great a control over the volume of our money to the banking fraternity. Perhaps we ought to be grateful that our money system from 1863 to 1913, under the national banking structure has been as well managed as it has been. However, there is a difference of opinion on that point.

I have been inclined to regard myself as a "sound-money man" and I have not cried out much against this usurpation of sovereign function on the part of American banks. I realize that there must be a greater volume of money than can be afforded alone by the two precious metals or by paper-money representatives of the two precious metals. I am also aware of the fact that the volume of money ought to vary from time to time and that a money based exclusively on gold and silver might not vary enough to meet business needs. Accordingly, I have looked with complacency upon the banks furnishing an elastic currency based upon the requirements of business. Yet I do think that it is a dangerous power to put in the hands of a business class whose interest might not always square with the general welfare and public interest. I am not at this moment advocating an entirely new money system, for that is an unusually difficult matter and one in which we must make gradual progress.

One reason why technocracy has not made a wider appeal to our people, in my judgment, is that it speaks in terms of a scientific exchange scheme which the ordinary citizen cannot understand. It is worse than attempting to change the "mother tongue" for our citizens when you try to change and substitute something else for the "dollar of the daddies." I say the American people want to retain our coinage system, including both gold and silver, and I am sure we are foolish to move as some of the gentlemen have suggested here today. Really it is a matter of degree. I do not demand that gold and silver or their representatives be used solely, nor that they be used only for subsidiary coins, but that both shall have a larger part to play in our whole monetary scheme. Of course, the complexity and the immensity of our American industry and business life today may require something more now for our country than the coinage scheme established by the fathers plus the governmental currency which later came into use. However, I am here to warn the banking interests that the mass of American people are getting more and more hostile to the control of money and credit, this vital necessity of industrial life, by a small class of private citizens. Our monetary system exists for the benefit of the American people and not for the enrichment and power of a few.

I am not inclined to look with favor upon some of the freak money proposals which bob up eternally, but I do believe that if the precious metals, gold and silver, prove to be inadequate as a base for our money system and that our money and credit cannot fairly and safely be furnished by our banks under close supervision of public authority, then we shall get something else. We may have a new money system where the dollar will be backed by commodity value—not the commodity of gold or silver, but several hundred commodities vital to the American people. I urge an improvement of the system that we now have rather than a foolish clinging to a part of our present scheme to such an extent as to bring on a complete change in our present monetary plan.

Since 1913 we have had a peculiar kind of managed currency, and that is the kind the gentleman from Illinois favors when he would abolish this kind of currency—silver certificates and, no doubt, greenbacks. I submit to you that we are going to have some kind of managed currency. What kind do we want? Since the Federal Reserve Act was passed we have put in the hands of a small group of men the very important function, that is regulating the volume of the currency we have for use. We say that it shall be managed according to business needs. There is inflation at times and there is deliberately planned deflation at times. I submit that this country has suffered terribly from these surgical operations known as deflations.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. My time is about up.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman consider that we are in a deflationary period right now?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I have reference to the deflationary period that followed the great inflation of the World War. There have been others, too, for that matter.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago the gentleman from Montana in his address to the committee was interrupted by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] with the statement that the Democratic administration should have the credit for changing the old "pork barrel" system of constructing public buildings in this country. I am sure the gentleman from Missouri made this statement inadvertently, because he must know, being so familiar with the departments in Washington, that he is incorrect in making that statement. The change from the old "pork barrel" system to the present system took place during the administration of Calvin Coolidge, in 1925. Prior to that time, post-office buildings were located according to the whim of the Congressman affected, but since 1925 buildings have been located on a showing of the greatest need. This change from the "pork barrel" to the merit system was a great reform and credit for it belongs to the Republican Party, and not to the New Deal.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I listened with much interest and approval to the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] and particularly to his denunciation of Nazi activities and propaganda in America and his high commendation of Americans of German origin. I think we are all agreed, whether we be Republicans or Democrats, that people of German descent in America are among our most loyal and industrious citizens. Wherever they may be found, in the North, East, South, or West, they have always been patriotic and law-abiding American citizens and can be depended upon to oppose communism, nazi-ism, fascism, and all subversive and un-American activities.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. LANHAM. Inasmuch as I made a talk today with reference to Americanism and referred to the meeting recently held in New York, I would like to get in the Record, in connection with my remarks, the fact that I realize all our ancestors came from some foreign land. There are patriotic American citizens today whose fathers—and many themselves—who came from every country of the world. We are all in sympathy with them. We are out of sympathy with those who are not in sympathy with America.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to an unusual role in the House of Representatives and possibly in the country. I happen to represent the district from which the President of the United States comes. I have probably been foremost amongst those who have criticized his policies, and I have repeatedly pointed out the failure of those policies. But last week at a Washington's Birthday celebration the Nazi bund, or German-American Bund, which aims to destroy American liberties, our free institutions, and our republican and constitutional form of government, met in Madison Square Garden in the city of New York. Their spokesmen abused and vilified the President of the United States. They called him "President Rosenfeldt." They attacked him viciously. I want to say as the Representative in Congress from his district, the district where he and his family have lived for over 200 years—and President Roosevelt and his family have lived in this country for nigh on 300 years—that when it comes to Nazis or hyphenated Americans heaping personal abuse and vilification on the President of the United States, I, as a Republican, resent such slurring attacks and openly denounce them. [Applause.] That is a typical example of Nazi insolence. Every one of these Nazis know that if he attacked Hitler or any man in authority in Germany, he would lose his head overnight; yet, taking advantage of our free institutions, these Nazis—just as bad as the Communists—seek to destroy our free institutions, including freedom of speech, of the press, and of assembly. They meet in public under the protection of our laws and use scurrilous and insolent language against the President of the United States, who has been elected by the people under our free institutions.

We Republicans will continue to attack the policies of President Roosevelt, we will continue to expose his unsound and radical policies, but we will not resort to personal abuse or to mud-slinging attacks upon the President of the United States.

I want to call to the attention of the House a little book entitled "Secret Armies" that is now being circulated in the House of Representatives and in the Senate.

This book, of course, is aimed against the Nazis, but when an attack is made upon the Nazis we must look at who is making the attack. The book is written by a man by the name of John L. Spivak, who writes for the Daily Worker, a Communist newspaper, and that kind of propaganda is just as bad as Nazi propaganda.

Mr. GEYER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEYER of California. May I say that I am of German descent, both on my father's side and on my mother's side, so far be it from me to say anything against them as a people. However, I happen to have a copy of this book, which was sent to every man by Walter Winchell with the request that we read it. I think there is much in there we might look at. He mentions our own $100,000 Dies committee. It might be well if we read this, and if the man is not telling the truth we should find out a little bit more about the matter.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] 1 additional minute.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman, may I say that I believe that Walter Winchell is a patriotic American citizen and had only the best intentions. I do not believe Walter Winchell has the slightest idea that this is Communist propaganda. I have no objection to anyone reading the book and getting the Communist side as well as the Nazi side. My own attitude is a plague on both their activities and propaganda.

I have introduced a bill in the House of Representatives that should have the support of both sides of the House. This bill prohibits the arming, drilling, and disciplining of all foreign groups, the Nazis, Communists, and Fascists. [Applause.] The way to stop this propaganda, this arming, drilling, and goose-stepping is to nip it in the bud, because if we do not stop it now, we will have private armies of Nazis and anti-Nazis, Communists and anti-Communists, and labor and anti-labor groups waging private wars throughout the Nation. So I ask the Democrats and Republicans, particularly those on the committee to which the bill has been referred, to report it to the House and give us a chance to enact it into law. [Applause.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, a distinguished writer once made the remark, "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown." May I add, that statement applies whether it be made of silver or of gold.

On December 21, 1933, the President issued an Executive order in connection with the silver-purchase program. The objectives, as I understand them, of the Executive order and the Silver Purchase Act were the stabilization of prices of products internally, the protection of the dollar exchange, the promotion of trade with other countries, and, no doubt, there was also an element which goes into the conception of the "good neighbor" policy. I personally feel that all of these objectives have failed, and I think most of the Members of the House will agree with me in that statement, because we know today that the price level is not anything like what we would care to have it. This is somewhat evidenced by a bill introduced only a few days ago, S. 1057, by Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma, one of the objectives of which is the regulation and stabilization of agricultural and commodity prices through the regulation and stabilization of the value of the dollar.

I think the whole situation is more clearly evidenced by statements made within the last few days by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, and by the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hopkins, as well as by a statement made by the Chief Executive at his press conference the other day before he went on a trip to the Caribbean Sea. It is further evidenced by the fact that business in this country is some fifteen or twenty-five billion dollars per annum below what we have every reason in the world to expect it should be.

Another bill was introduced the other day by Senator TOWNSEND, S. 785, to repeal the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 and to provide for the sale of silver, and for other purposes.

I am enumerating these bills today so that the Members of the House may take occasion to secure copies and study the bills in connection with hearings that are now being conducted in the Senate on Senate Resolution 137 by a special committee on investigation of silver, United States Senate, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Does not the gentleman from Michigan believe that to consider the silver question and direct legislation, whether it be repeal of the Silver Purchase Act or not, is a far more intelligent and a much more efficient way to determine the badness or goodness of the silver question than the back-door attack that is now being made on it in connection with an appropriation bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman in some respects, but I disagree that this is a back-door attack insofar as I am personally concerned. That is the reason I am tying up the whole proposition together; the Senate bills and the hearings on the appropriation bill now under consideration and also those hearings which the gentleman has been attending I believe by special invitation, along with representatives from other silver-producing States. So far as I am personally concerned I am delighted to know this careful study is being made by a special committee. I simply want to get a few of these facts before the Members of the House so that they may further look into the matter.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I did not imply that the gentleman was making a back-door attack, but I am sure this type of attack is being made during the consideration of an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If such an attack is being made, I regret it, because I know that this is an exceedingly important subject which the Members of the House will have to give attention to, either before we adjourn the present session or before we finish the Seventy-sixth Congress.

The remarks made a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Arizona with reference to exchange of cotton for silver are something I wish to comment on for a moment before yielding further for a question, because it may develop one or two additional thoughts.

If we break down the importation of silver under the Executive order and the Silver Purchase Act, and determine the amount of goods actually traded thereunder for silver, we will find it is a negligible amount of goods thus traded. As a matter of fact, if we go a step further and consider the dollar price paid for silver, we may find, as I know we would, that if we carried out the gentleman's suggestion made a few moments ago with reference to trading cotton for silver, the other countries would hold the valuable products and we would hold the silver. The value of the silver in the long run may prove to be very little—probably no more than its actual commercial use value, and far below present dollar value.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. May I call attention to the fact that I qualified my previous statement by saying "if we can exchange cotton for silver, it might be a wise policy." Does the gentleman, in wishing to repeal the Silver Purchase Act, desire that we shall be entirely and virtually on a paper-money basis? If so, what kind of paper money—bank currency or Government currency?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I may say to the gentleman that in the first place I have not advocated the repeal of the act. I called attention to the bill S. 785, which has been introduced, looking forward to the repeal of the Silver Purchase Act, together with the sale of silver under certain conditions and with certain reservations, which would, as I understand the bill, take care of the silver certificates issued. I suggest a very careful study of the proposal to repeal the Silver Purchase Act, and especially by those who represent silver-producing States. I do not feel that the people of this country will continue to support the administration in its present program. We do not need the silver that is being imported. We are paying a price far too high for the silver we are purchasing. We are diluting our currency. We are stimulating unnecessarily the production of silver throughout the entire world and at the same time maintaining an artificial price on silver which prevents its commercial use in the quantity the world should be consuming. Merely piling up silver in the vaults of this country will eventually lead to a "silver debacle" as serious for silver producers as that now faced by the cotton producers of the South. If the silver was going into consumption as rapidly as produced, that would be an entirely different proposition to that which now governs. The taxpayer will eventually rebel in a most understandable manner.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona and Mr. CHASE of South Dakota rose.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will yield in just a minute.

Let me say that I believe in subsidizing American industry, whether it be the peanut industry in the Southeast; the cotton industry of the South; the silver industry of the West; the sugar industry of the West, or the South, or the Middle West; the manufactures of New England and all other sections; the maple sap of New England; and so on down the line, "provided it is done on a proper basis"; but let me assure the gentleman that I do not believe it is a proper procedure when we subsidize the demonetization of the silver produced in other parts of the world. I believe that is exactly what we are doing under the Silver Purchase Act insofar as it applies to silver produced in other countries and sent to this country.

As an illustration, let me read this testimony by Senator KING, given the other day before the Senate Special Committee on the Investigation of Silver. The Senator is quoted as having said:

I recall going to see the Secretary of the Treasury and telling him that if I were he I would not buy silver for a little while, because they were speculating. When I was in Shanghai and when I was in Tokyo, I learned that the Japanese—I will not say the government, but the Japanese—were speculating in silver, taking it out of China, transshipping it to London and then to the United States, and we got a large quantity of Chinese silver as a result of speculation. Then Sir Henri Deterding took 60,000,000 ounces which he had on deposit in China or in India, he shipped that to the United States, and we became the beneficiaries of that silver.

Is not that a fine predicament for us to get into?

It was my privilege to be in Canton, China, the day the people were coming to the banks, turning in their silver under the Chinese Nationalizing Act, and taking back Chinese paper currency. I transferred some silver, myself, and have the Chinese paper currency in my desk at the office. There we were, through speculating procedure, teetotally destroying the entire internal economy of the Chinese Republic and fertilizing the soil for the depredations which are now being carried out against the Chinese people by the Empire of the Rising Sun.

I now yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Would the gentleman from his study of this question be able to say whether China or Japan has been more subsidized by the extension of our silver purchasing to foreign silver?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Without qualifying as an expert, I would give it as my frank opinion that Japan has reaped the reward and China has been harmed.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. If I may make just one statement before I ask the question, I should like to say I am no more in favor of the sort of thing the gentleman has just mentioned than he is.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am sure the gentleman is not in favor of it.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. We had an extensive buying program back in 1878 under a silver-purchase act—the Bland-Allison Act—and again in 1890 under the Sherman Silver Purchase Act. Does the gentleman know whether the silver we bought under the acts of 1878 and 1890 was not sold 20 years ago for more than it cost us?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am informed it was not. It is also my understanding that no other country in all history has ever pursued a silver policy such as we have been and are now following. So far the program has utterly failed. To continue it further will, in my humble opinion, bring us great trouble. I admonish the Members of the House to give the whole question most serious study in order that we may be able to avoid further mistakes in this connection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire briefly to call your attention to the cut the subcommittee has made in the appropriation for the Federal Alcohol Administration. The committee has cut the appropriation to $425,000. It was my intention to ask that the previous appropriation of $450,000 be restored. However, when the point of reading the bill for amendment is reached I shall not offer an amendment to that effect, because, in view of the scarcity of Members on the floor and the lateness of the opportunity to present to a majority of the committee the reasons for continuing the present appropriation, it is apparent to me this proposed amendment would not carry.

Those of us who believe the Federal Alcohol Administration is doing a very necessary and vital work feel that somewhere along the legislative line, perhaps in the other body, the original appropriation should be restored or perhaps even increased. I do not care whether the sympathies of the Members are with the prohibitionists or with those who are more liberal. They must recognize that the F. A. A. is doing a unique and valuable work. This organization, which was created through a bill reported from the Committee on Ways and Means some years ago, was brought into existence for the purpose of stamping out the chiselers in the alcohol industries, of promoting fair trade practices, and protecting the consumer. There is no other organization that can run down those who manufacture fake wines, adulterated and misbranded whiskies other than this particular Alcohol Administration.

To do this it is necessary that a staff of competent investigators be supplied and that they be paid sufficient salaries to overcome any offers in the line of temptation that may be presented to them. At the present these investigators must all operate out of Washington, because they may have to run down adulterations in Boston one week, violations of the law in Chicago the next, and in San Francisco the third. Regional centers have not been established out of which these investigators may work for the reason that Congress has not appropriated money other than to maintain the central office at Washington. There are 27 investigators, and they cover the entire United States out of the Washington office. The subcommittee has explained that they feel traveling expenses of these investigators are too high; but it is because of the fact that there are only 27 of these investigators covering the entire United States that the traveling expenses must be run up. The only way you can cut down these traveling expenses legitimately and protect the honest manufacturers of beer, wines, and liquor, who are trying to live up to the provisions of the Federal laws, is by giving more money to the Federal Alcohol Administration to establish regional offices where they should be established and assign them permanent investigators who can work and cover their own territories without transcontinental travel being involved. I submit that this should be done, and before this bill is enacted into law the old appropriation should at least be restored, and, in my opinion, be increased.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD].

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, the legislative branch of the Government, from all intents and purposes, is again functioning independently as it was designed to function. Since its inception on January 3 last, the Seventy-sixth Congress has impressed the country with its individuality and independence. It is showing the country that the Congress again is ready to work and operate according to the Constitution—coordinately with the other two branches. However, Mr. Chairman, it appears that if the Congress is to work effectively it should not be subjected to unnecessary handicaps especially relative to obtaining necessary information.

A governing administration should have a definite plan of action charted and have complete specifications to support it.

However, if we are to judge by the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury on the pending bill, this country is wandering in a financial maze, guided only by men who do not know where they are going and will not know where they are when and if they get there.

Faced with the most stupendous public debt in the history of this or probably any other country, the man who is at the head of our fiscal department tells your Appropriations Committee that he does not have any opinion where the danger point of such a debt is to be reached.

Admitting a complete lack of knowledge as to that danger point and even a lack of opinion as to whether we have or have not reached it, yet this Cabinet officer tells the committee that the administration is going to send the debt higher and that it is going to ask that the ceiling of debt limit, set by the Congress, be raised a least $5,000,000,000.

That is in order that the mad spending of money may continue.

But the administration and the Secretary of the Treasury are not going to accept the responsibility for the increased debt if they can shed that responsibility onto the shoulders of this Congress.

Let me quote the answer which the Secretary gave to a question I asked him as to how much higher the debt could go with safety:

Well—

He said—

I would not be worried to see it go the other four or five billions which is in the present Budget; and we are going to have to ask Congress, if you vote this money, to increase the Treasury's power to borrow another $5,000,000,000.

Note what the Secretary said, "if you vote this money." Of course, it will be the fault of Congress. But the Secretary will not say, and the administration, when it goes to the people, will not say, that a $5,000,000,000 Budget was necessitated by spending schemes which the administration rammed through this Congress when the minority was so small as to be without adequate means of protest.

But let us get back to the danger point of public debt. The Secretary says he does not know whether this additional five billions the administration proposes to pile on is going to bring us to the breaking point. And he says that he plans "only to ask for an increase of five billions."

Ordinarily we might be able to accept that from a Secretary of the Treasury. But in the present state of affairs in Washington you or anyone else cannot tell from one day to another whether the Secretary of the Treasury is actually running the Treasury.

And another fiscal official strongly indicates that the goal in this game of "lifting the lid" is not going to be a $5,000,000,000 lift but a $25,000,000,000 lift. That is what the head of the Federal Reserve Board says they are going to demand.

Billions, billions, billions. Always going up. Never coming down. How long can the American people take it?

When I asked the Secretary at the hearings if it were possible to ascertain with any degree of reasonableness how much further up this debt could go without danger to the country, he said that he did not know and that he could not answer the question.

Not only does this high-ranking instrumentality of the present administration not know where the danger point is. He does not even know if the danger point can be ascertained. This condition is a real sample of the truth to "the problem of uncertainty" business is and has been faced with.

I am convinced that it can be ascertained. And this administration seems to be taking one way to ascertain it. The administration way is apparently to pass the breaking point. After that, after disaster has been brought upon the entire country, then the administration can look back and possibly the several Cabinet members may then be able to tell us just when we passed the breaking point. By that time it will be too late for us to care any more than the administration seems to care right now.

It is inconceivable to me, however, that this Congress, which seems to be gaining back its respect for its duties as a coordinate branch of the Government, is going to let the administration continue its program of advancing to the brink of the financial precipice, with its eyes blindfolded.

Now is the time to stop, look, and listen. Within the next few days I propose to submit to the House a program for ascertaining what the administration and its Secretary of the Treasury either cannot or will not tell us.

If the responsible officials of the Government either are ignorant themselves, or propose to keep us in ignorance of the financial quicksands, then it is the duty of this Congress of the people to find other means to ascertain the truth. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moser].

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, having in mind to address myself to the subject of the bill and being in the Committee this afternoon listening to the general debate, certain things have been said on the floor here that I believe should command my attention by way of preface to my remarks, on the bill. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], having delivered a stirring and patriotic address on Americanism, prompted something that I shall mention by way of a preface to my remarks. This was followed by my colleague from Pennsylvania the gentleman from York County, Mr. Gross, who, I believe, inferentially perhaps—the wish being the father to the prophecy—sought to speak for the Pennsylvania Germans.

I would like to say that my county was settled by Germans. Berks County, originally a shire and as shown on the map given out by the Honorable SOL BLOOM as chairman of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission on the signing of the Constitution, extended from the Delaware River to the Susquehanna River. Out of that have been carved two additional congressional districts, the one represented by my colleague on the north, Mr. FENTON, and the other by my colleague on the south, Mr. DITTER.

To my county came Henry Melchior Muhlenberg, from Germany, and married the daughter of Conrad Weiser. He was a minister of the gospel and preached at the Old Trappe Church. He had three sons born there, and when his eldest was 17 years of age it became a matter of concern to him where these boys should be educated. The ages of the other boys ranged from 14 and 10. He determined that due to lack of educational facilities at that early day in this country, he would send them back to Germany to attend the university at Halle. Of these three sons, the eldest was John Peter Gabriel Muhlenberg, who did not conclude his studies, but joined a troop of dragoons and left his two younger brothers in school. The father, after some pains, got him released and got him back to this country and later he was ordained in the ministry and went to Woodstock, Va., where he preached. At Woodstock, Va., that gentleman from my congressional district and my home county, there became a contact of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and of Patrick Henry, Richard Henry Lee, and all the rest of the patriots of his era and locality. It is his statue which stands on the plaza of City Hall Square in Philadelphia, with cape and coat thrown back displaying his full uniform of a major general. It was he who made the famous declaration at the conclusion of divine service: "There is a time of war and a time of peace, and now the time to fight has come," as throwing back his clerical robe he stood before the large audience assembled, in a colonel's uniform, having given advance notice to his congregations of his farewell sermon.

He continued an intimate friend of Gen. George Washington until the end. His brother Frederick, at the time he came back from Germany, having been educated and ordained as a minister, was preaching in New York and had to flee when New York was captured by the British Army. His other brother, Henry, was preaching in Philadelphia, and had to flee when Philadelphia was captured.

It was he who, disguised as an Indian, went up to Trappe, in the upper end of what is now the district of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DITTER, and very near where I was born, about 15 miles away, and his brother, Frederick, who had come back to Trappe to preach after he fled from New York, was, too, called to his country's service. He was the president of the Pennsylvania Assembly and later a Member of the Continental Congress. It was he who was ultimately elected the first Speaker of this House of Representatives. He had gone to Lancaster to preach and there was elected to the First Congress. Frederick Muhlenberg, whose picture appeared yesterday in the press as the first Speaker of the House, in connection with the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Congress, which will be celebrated in joint assembly on Saturday next, was of that same sound, German extraction. It was his nephew, Henry Augustus Muhlenberg, whose father fled from Howe at Philadelphia, clergyman, Congressman, and first Minister to Austria, who, as a staunch supporter of President Jackson, on February 18, 1834, moved the previous question in this House after more than 2 months' debate on the United States Bank. He declined the Cabinet post of Secretary of the Navy and Minister to Russia but accepted the similar post to Austria at the hand of President Van Buren.

John Peter Gabriel Muhlenberg, having served in the Virginia House of Burgesses in 1774, returned to Pennsylvania after the Revolutionary War ended, and was, too, elected to the First Congress, where his brother was chosen Speaker. He served in the Third Congress and again in the Sixth Congress, March 4, 1799, to March 3, 1801, when elected as a Democrat to the United States Senate. He served from March 4, 1801, until he resigned to accept the appointment of President Jefferson as supervisor of revenue for Pennsylvania.

I feel that I have in Pennsylvania a typically German background, and I do not feel that I need apologize for but rather express pride in it, because wherever patriotism has been involved they have never been lacking. I have followed the precepts and the examples that have been laid down and the traditions as given to me from my earliest childhood. Some of these things are pretty dear to me, and before I would forsake them I would sacrifice everything else I possess.

So I again say that I do not believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gross] can speak exclusively for the Pennsylvania Germans, because if I had to I could say exactly what I have said here in Pennsylvania-German idiomatic expressions that are colloquial in my community.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSER. I regret I cannot. I have something to say about the bill. I desire now to address myself to the Committee on the subject of the bill. I was for 12 years a post-office inspector. Having just given you an illustration of how I feel about the matter of loyalty to a cause, I feel resentment when this House appropriates money for a certain purpose to see it diverted by a department of the Government to other uses. Last year we appropriated money to pay for 10 additional post-office inspectors. Since 1935 Mr. Mague says appropriations to increase salaries under the classification act have been passed. He means passed up. It has not been popular to raise Federal salaries. At least, not publicly. He fell behind $92,000, so he re-allocated the money for the additional inspectors. I did not know who the Mr. Mague was, who testified before the Appropriations Committee, until I inquired of an old inspector friend, Mr. Gartland, and he told me that Mr. Mague is superintendent of the post-office inspection service, and in the testimony of this gentleman, as advanced before the committee, he found himself in that uncomfortable position, that position I feel practically everybody would hate to be placed in, that of being under the compulsion of what he calls the Classification Act of 1925, more especially that portion thereof raising their own salaries to the prejudice of the will of this Congress, instead of increasing the personnel. I do not know how far I would like to go on that measure, but I feel this practice must be arrested. Feeling this resentment, I mentioned it to Mr. Farley. He took the side that I am advancing. He said they should not do that. I explained it in detail, and I do not believe he will permit it to occur again. The law of Congress is flouted time after time by the various departments, but I did not think the time would ever come when a service so well known, a service which has functioned so well, would disintegrate and get to the state where they would undertake to increase their own salaries to the prejudice of increasing the personnel, contrary to the will of the people of the United States as expressed by their Representatives in Congress.

Last year it will be remembered that we were under fire of public opinion, in the press, and in correspondence from constituents everywhere, relative to insufficient appropriations as hampering the opportunity for the advancement and prosecution of cases on the part of the G-men. The G-men, formerly agents of the Department of Justice, in my time, have come to public notice to such a degree that there is a certain glamor about them. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] stood where I am standing now, I questioned him, and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Lewis] questioned him last year on the bill relative to that allegation, and Mr. Woodrum made the statement from this Well, that they had taken over $200,000 of their appropriated money and reallocated it to increase their salaries, limiting themselves in the personnel, just as the Post Office inspectors have done.

I wanted to bring that to the attention of this Committee for this reason. Becoming entirely familiar with the operation of the laws covering the Post Office Department and the regulation set up thereunder, as well as having delved into this Classification Act of 1925, I find no compulsion under the act, the policy which Mr. Mague has indicated they have been obliged to follow and increase their salaries to the prejudice of increasing their personnel, I could not help prefacing my remarks as I did, and now expressing my resentment of any bureaucratic branch of the Government that would do such a thing. I want to say that I never believed the Post Office Department was bureaucratic, but Mr. Mague, wherever they got him, is teaching them some very bad practices, strange and unnatural to the Post Office Department, and I feel it should be made known to this Committee at this time. Therefore I asked the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Ludlow] for the time in order to make the Committee acquainted with that particular violation of the spirit of the appropriation law. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I regret I have only 10 minutes, because I wanted to share the time with any who might wish to interrupt. I have a very important subject. I wish to talk about a very great man, our Harry Hopkins, an old friend (?) of mine. After a heavy silence, we heard from him on last Friday evening. I understand that Heaven always welcomes the reformed penitent. We can only hope that he has been truly reformed, but I want to tell the Democratic side of the House that neither Harry Hopkins, the President, nor Mr. Morgenthau are deceiving anybody. We know Mr. Hopkins. No matter what he says, we know his viewpoint and his record. How can we listen to "what he says," with "what he is" ringing in our ears! And we know where he is. He rests in the arms of the President, to whom he will be loyal. We understand he is now the pipe line through which the businessmen can actually at least reach the ears of the President. But we are not so simple as not to know what causes this pretended change of heart and attitude. There were no apologies on Friday night in his speech for anything that has been done; no errors acknowledged. If businessmen have been "so damned dumb" when he has spoken heretofore, certainly they may fail to understand his language of Friday night. But he now says, "We have abandoned reform and will henceforth aim at recovery"—a perfect admission that what they have been doing has been essentially to reform and that recovery was not considered so important. This administration has denied all along that it was putting reform before recovery. Its spokesmen now say, "We will not punish any more but will cooperate." After 6 long years of constant harassment, and the most recent appointments to high places, can we rely on these spokesmen?

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GEYER of California. I just wondered if the gentleman thinks he is contributing anything toward this matter of cooperation by such a speech as he is making here today?

Mr. GIFFORD. No; I am not trying to.

Mr. GEYER of California. I thought as much.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am not trying to. I am simply warning that we should have action rather than promises, from such people. We are no longer gullible, that is all. If that is not a contribution, well and good. I am simply saying we have to judge by the past, if we are to have confidence in the future. We believe thoroughly that the Democratic Party and its spokesmen mean what they say. We must believe that. You want recovery. I know you will try, because 1940 is directly ahead. Unless you can bring about recovery you are doomed, and you know that. That is the only reason you are to desist from so-called reforms. It is not because you are sorry for anything. Your real nature has not changed. You will not change the silver policy just discussed nor acknowledge any other monumental failures of fiscal experiments. You will still persist in these; but you say, simply, that you will not spank business any more at present. My contribution is to tell you why you promise that. I now declare that if recovery does come during the next year it will be because of the hope and the expectation of the businessmen that the Republicans will return to power in 1940. It will not be because of anything that Hopkins, Morgenthau, and other rubber stamps may say, because the people do not believe in them any more.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HAWKS. Is it impossible for the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] to stand the truth? Does he not like to have it dished out on the floor of the House?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, most of them love the truth and most of them love to have me speak it for them. [Laughter.] But I again remind you that we now know these men. They have performed for some time. "Spend and spend, tax and tax, elect and elect." We hear, "I didn't say it." But when you draw a perfect word picture of a man, he need not trouble to deny his identity. No one could mistake the perfect likeness of such a word picture. He will speak only according to the desires of his President. We know his exact location. That reminds me: A very prominent person was in an insane hospital on business and did not get good service from the telephone operator. He said, "I guess you don't know who I am?" The operator replied, "I do not need to know; I know where you are." [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. I wonder if the gentleman would be kind enough to enumerate for us the real mistakes that the administration has made in the New Deal?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, if the gentleman would ask me to enumerate any successful operations I could do it very briefly. [Laughter.] But I might try to enumerate a few of the many failures. Shall I begin with a national debt of $44,000,000,000 and headed straight for $50,000,000,000? Is that something of which to be proud? You usually boast of one particular act. You will name the Securities and Exchange Commission, which dried up and froze business and capital ventures so completely. It is still the great deterrent preventing release of capital. Only yesterday it was portrayed in the papers how the Securities and Exchange Commission is now trying to make peace. They realize that new business was frightened away by their activities. The index in the New York Times of yesterday shows that business has again been rocketing downward. The Securities and Exchange Commission is the acknowledged cause of the continuous thin market.

Someone said to me, "Did not the Securities and Exchange Commission catch this man Whitney, so prominent in the stock market?" No; they did not catch him. The horse was stolen before the Commission noted what had happened. What did Whitney do? He borrowed funds that were in his control—that is, he tried to borrow himself out of the depression. He borrowed 11 times. The Government has borrowed and squandered billions, more than 11 times, trying to borrow itself out of the depression.

Mr. KELLER. You think Whitney is right, then, do you?

Mr. GIFFORD. No, indeed. Neither do I think the Government is right. But, of course, the Government can do no wrong.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Would the gentleman wipe off the work of the Securities and Exchange Commission if he could?

Mr. GIFFORD. I would wipe off a lot of these regulations that you and I had nothing to do with in passing the act. The intent of the legislation was good, but like the Federal Trade Commission which your own Democratic leader said was a dismal failure for 10 years, it has only frightened business, and I have heard it stated that the Securities and Exchange Commission has not caught even a cockroach yet. But I am not informed as to that. Certainly no criminals of importance have been mentioned and, judging from the arguments in favor of the legislation, there were plenty of them.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. There is no commission in the United States from the beginning of this Government that has gone more conscientiously and honestly trying to find out what the wrongs are and exposing them to the public.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, the intent of the act was commendable. But contemplate the results. Again I say "It was probably one of the greatest deterrents of recovery."

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. The work they have done has been marvelous.

Mr. GIFFORD. What this administration has done; the cures advanced have been far worse than the disease which was at least supposed to afflict our social economy. The Securities and Exchange Commission has undoubtedly greatly hampered business. To catch a few crooks, all honest men were suspected and threatened.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Put them in the penitentiary where they ought to be.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. HOOK. The gentleman seems so well informed on political issues I was just wondering whether or not he could inform us the amount Mr. Whitney donated to the Republican Party last year.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have no information about that, but considering his financial condition it was very little; and the gentleman from Michigan must not infer that I favor what Whitney did. Of course, I condemn it. Neither do I favor heavy Government borrowings wiping out the people's savings and squandering them. A national debt of 50 billions tells its own story.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Gladly, yes.

Mr. TABER. Is there any significance in the conviction last Saturday on 13 counts of Mr. Roosevelt's dispenser of patronage in New York City?

Mr. GIFFORD. That is in truth a sad affair. It is bitter medicine indeed.

I wish I might have had the time to discuss the billions to be asked for housing in a few days.

I ask you to consider the projects already completed. Let us inform ourselves about this ill-advised legislation in spite of the "ballyhoo" in favor of it. We cannot greatly blame officials of the Government who are forced to act hurriedly under the lash of the administration in order to gain a little temporary upturn in the building industry. We may destroy the entire real estate balance of great cities. Considering the results attained, this administration has a sad record to contemplate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should like to hear the gentleman's comment on this statement of Mr. Hopkins:

If necessary, such taxes can be replaced by increasing other taxes which do not have the same deterrent effect.

Mr. GIFFORD. I had that marked for comment. I wish I had time to refer to it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman think business knows how to interpret that statement?

Mr. GIFFORD. Indeed, no. Let me say to the Democratic side of the House: "Your outward complacency fools nobody; we know that inner disquietude fills your hearts." [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I hope we will not get so embroiled in political arguments between the two sides of the aisle that we become completely unmindful of many very important things that are now before or will come before this body for consideration.

We have been in the formation of this Government now about 160 years. During this time your forefathers and mine have been busily engaged in doing those things of which we are now beneficiaries. Your parents and my parents and your grandparents and my grandparents were part of that great band of sturdy old pioneers who, with the watchword "Westward, ho!" less than a half century ago, started the final conquest of the West. When that conquest was completed your forefathers and mine had hewn out of a wilderness a civilization, the civilization we now enjoy. Its culture, its opportunity for education, its well-ordered public society is the heritage of ourselves and of future generations. We are and they will be the beneficiaries of that long toil and labor by your and my forefathers, those who are the old people of this Nation today.

In the Seventy-fifth Congress the Government of the United States recognized and by statute law admitted that those old pioneers who had become old and stooped by their toil for civilization were entitled to something from the Government and that the Government was ready to pay an obligation long past due. Then the Government did a thing for which I am ashamed. Congress passed the Social Security Act. The only excuse under the shining sun that we had for passing that act, included in which was the provision for the payment of an old-age pension, is based upon the thing that I have just talked about—payment to those who had so busily engaged in hewing a civilization out of the wilderness that they had not had time to amass enough of the world's goods to sustain themselves in their declining years. The Government admitted an obligation to them and then dodged the obligation.

Under the old-age pension title of the Social Security Act we did not say to the old people of this Nation that the Government of the United States will pay you so much money per annum, per month, semiannually, or at some other period. No. We said that if any State in the Union recognizes that they owe you a duty and they will pass an old-age pension law the Government of the United States will pay you as much money as the State will pay you up to a certain limitation. So we find today the spectacle of two aged couples in exactly the same economic circumstances and of the same age treated differently just because one lives in one State and one lives in another State, and this notwithstanding the fact that their needs are the same. Unless this is a Government obligation the Government has no business paying out any amount of money, whether it be 5 cents or some larger amount per month; but if this be a Government obligation, all beneficiaries under it should be treated alike by the Federal Government. My own State of Oklahoma is now a shining example of the evil of the system as it exists at present.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want the Members of the House to think I am leading up to the point where I am going to endorse somebody's wild isms, either. I do not want anybody to think I am leading up to the point of placing my endorsement and approval upon some thousand-dollar-a-month scheme or any other scheme as impossible of accomplishment, as are many schemes which have been presented to this Congress. I do say if the Federal Government owes an old man 65 years old living in Maine $30 a month, then it owes $30 a month to an old man living in Florida, California, and every other State in the Union exactly the same amount of money for everyone who falls in the same classification.

If the State wants to vote an old-age pension and pay the citizens of that particular State something in addition to what the Federal Government pays them, well and good; but if the Federal Government has any obligation, and I say it has, then this obligation is exactly the same in every State and in every subdivision of every State in the United States.

We in the present Congress should stop bickering and playing politics and get down to the business of finding out how the Government, for which you and I legislate, can best discharge its duty, because the Government now admits it owes a duty to the old people of this country. I care not what the sum is. If it is the consensus of opinion of this body and the body at the other end of the Capitol that it be $15 a month, well and good. If that opinion is that it should be $30 a month, well and good. Whatever sum may be agreed to makes no difference to me. However, if it is a Federal obligation, then I want to see the Federal Government mail a check from Washington to the beneficiary in whatever State the old man or woman lives so that he or she may get the check under exactly the same rules and regulations, no matter what State they may live in.

I started to say a minute ago that my good State of Oklahoma is a shining example of the evils of this system.

After the Social Security Act was passed the State of Oklahoma passed a constitutional amendment to provide the State could pay old-age pensions, and levied a sales tax to finance such payments. The Governor named a State commission to administer this act, and the Federal Government was to contribute one-half of the amounts paid.

Since that time the State commission and the Federal Social Security Board have been in an almost continuous wrangle. The Federal Board has demanded the right to dictate the hiring and firing of employees by the State commission, and enforced its demands by withholding contributions until such demands were met. The State commission has been in hot water at home in political and other ways.

The commission recently fired the State director, saying this was done at the suggestion of the Federal Board. The Federal Board denied any such suggestion had been made and added that a bad situation had only been made worse. The members of the commission then resigned and the new Governor is now selecting a new commission.

The result of this endless friction has been that the old folks of Oklahoma have lost about $3,000,000 in Federal contributions that they should have had. I am not passing judgment on the Social Security Board's actions in withholding contributions. I have about given up trying to find out what the row is about.

I do not blame the Federal Board or the State commission for the present situation in Oklahoma. I blame the Congress. The present dual control cannot work. It should be changed at this session.

We have many problems here in Congress. We have been talking a lot about national defense and voting money with a lavish hand for the implements of war. I maintain that the best defense we have is the patriotic spirit of our people. And I believe that the way the Social Security Act has been administered has done much to tear down the patriotic heritage and instincts of our people. The spectacle of a Federal board and a State commission bickering and mouthing over trifles, and spiting each other by withholding millions of dollars from old folks who are near the borderline of starvation is as sorry a sight as I ever hope to see. I hope this Congress will put an end to such spectacles forever by enacting a fair and sane and workable old-age pension law.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD].

THE EFFECT OF COST OF GOVERNMENT AND TAXES UPON CONFIDENCE IN BUSINESS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Chairman, in consideration of the direct appropriation of $1,700,471,354 in the appropriations bill to finance the operations of the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year beginning July 1, it might be well to stop and think for a moment.

A short time ago, this amount would have run the whole Government. I am told that in the year of 1904 the total cost of all the departments of Government was $730,000,000; in 1905, $720,000,000; and in 1906, $736,000,000. Now this one item for the two Departments above named is costing twice and a half as much as all the governmental departments used to cost.

There is no question that Government costs should have had a normal rise, in keeping with natural development of the country and with the better governmental services given as time went on, but in my opinion these costs have recently risen at a ratio out of all proportion to the ability of the country to pay them, and far above that which good business judgment and common sense would dictate should continue.

The best practical evidence of this is our national debt, which Mr. Morgenthau now tells us will reach an all time high of $44,000,000,000 by June 30, 1940, and he further tells us that the administration is going to ask Congress to increase the present debt limit from forty-five billion to fifty billion. He declines to state how much higher the national debt can go with safety, and further describes the present credit of the Government as "never better"—"100 percent good."

How long can credit be maintained in this condition, even if Mr. Morgenthau is right, with the constant increase in cost of government and the constant announcement of new high debt levels, with the constant increasing demand for more taxes, without future or permanent plans for the reduction or paying off of this debt?

What will be the final cost of Government if $45,000,000,000 in principal is paid off in 33 years, at an interest rate of 3 percent per annum, including cost of accounting, handling, etc.? It will certainly be $1,500,000,000 for principal amortization and $1,500,000,000 for interest, or $3,000,000,000 per year for the first year, for interest and principal only, if the debt does not go any higher, and this does not take into account the current cost of Government operation. If the cost of Government continues in the neighborhood of $10,000,000,000, this is going to result in an annual cost of some $13,000,000,000 per year.

Does Mr. Morgenthau think any banker would continue to extend credit to any commercial borrower, who used his credit always to the limit, kept pushing it up to new high levels, and did not occasionally reduce it, or make provision for the total final repayment of the whole amount? The answer to this should be very apparent, and it would be, "No," in no unmistakable terms, for the lender would want to know how safe his loan was, and in addition would want to know when he was going to get his money back. Instead of giving more credit, he would probably cut off any further extension of credit. The banker would probably rightfully demand a new balance sheet, or credit statement, and analyze it with the idea in mind of finding out if the borrower was operating within his means, or in other words, had a balanced budget, and had made any reasonable provision for repaying that which he had already borrowed. The country at large is the banker in this instance and it is beginning to ask some of the questions above, and it is entitled to an answer.

This money all has to be paid back if the credit and standing of the Federal Government is to be maintained. The country at large knows that there is one place only that Government can get the money to pay back this debt and the additional money to carry on government, and that place is from the country itself in the form of taxes on business in some of its ramifications.

It is no wonder that business and our people are concerned and have a lack of confidence in the future, when they look at this picture and know that all these billions must eventually come out of them in the form of taxes.

Much has recently been said of social security and the provision for certain groups toward the end of their security. This, no doubt, is as it should be; but at the same time how secure are all of our people, or any of our people, or any business under this tremendous burden of not only present taxes but those taxes that they know are sure to come in contemplation of the above figures?

This debt either is or is not going to be paid. It must be paid.

God forbid the day when the United States Government repudiates its debt, either directly or indirectly through inflation, reflation, or otherwise.

Any person with the capacity to think should be able to see what would happen to every individual, every bank, every insurance policy, mortgage, financial institution, and every business both large and small, if repudiation took place, or if any of the forms of inflation was resorted to, that would in effect strip them of practically everything they owned or that measure of security they have attained and obtained through diligence, honest work and planning, thriftiness, and by exercising that judgment in their affairs that makes them independent Americans. These people have the right to expect the same kind of security they have had in this country for the last 150 years, and they should get it. They cannot have it, however, unless this Budget is balanced, provision for full payment of the national debt is made, and the costs of government are reduced to the extent of materially lowering the taxes on business. Unless this is done, God forbid the day of reckoning to the taxpayer when the final tax bill is written.

Every person interested in relief, old-age pensions, security of any kind, and all persons interested in the safety and welfare of this Government should join in the demand that a financial inventory and check-up should be made to determine where we are finally going to arrive, with the ultimate object in mind to trim our sails before we hit the rocks. Those who are on relief and those who are dependent on the Government or expect any form of security must realize that in the long run the ability of the taxpayer to pay is the thing that keeps the whole operation going; and when taxes become so heavy that they can no longer be paid the result will be chaos for everyone. This might be likened to a child in a nursery room playing with blocks. We have all seen a child pile one block upon the other until rather a high, shaky structure is erected; with each additional block the structure becomes more shaky and insecure until finally, when a final effort is made to place one more block on the structure, the whole thing falls over. It might be wise to profit from this simple knowledge before it becomes too late. [Applause.]

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know if my colleague, whose district adjoins mine, is going to extend in his remarks exactly what he asks to extend, or if he is going to do as he did on the last legislative day when he asked permission to extend in his remarks a letter from Dr. Nylander, of the National Labor Relations Board, and instead inserted an editorial in his remarks taken from an Inglewood paper?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I am going to do as I said I would. I did not extend in my remarks an editorial. If the gentleman will read the article in question he will find it is a news item. I extended that. It was printed in the paper and it stated the truth with reference to what was said at a certain meeting by Dr. Nylander.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, there is, unless he will assure me—

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] will give me his attention, I would appreciate it, because I want to direct my remarks to the gentleman with reference to statements made by him on Friday last.

I should not this afternoon be called upon to speak on the silver question if it were not for action contemplated by Republican members of the Appropriations Committee. As I understand it, the Appropriations Committee was created not for the purpose of legislating policies and enacting laws but for the sole purpose of taking care of the fiscal affairs of the Government and appropriating the money to carry out the legislative policy enacted by the Congress.

The Representatives from the Inter-Mountain States find that a back-door attack is being made on the Silver Purchase Act, which law was enacted in 1934. My position today, Mr. Chairman, is that if the Silver Purchase Act is not sound, if it has not worked successfully since its adoption, then a bill should be properly introduced to repeal the act. That bill should be brought to the floor and discussed thoroughly. However, this act should not be repealed by the back-door approach of attempting to strike out the item carried in this bill providing funds for the administration of the Silver Purchase Act. Such an attack is violative of the rules of the House; it is a usurpation of authority by the Appropriations Committee, if such a result were accomplished; and, in my opinion, it is high time for this House to take the position that the Appropriations Committee should not have appellate jurisdiction over legislative committees and should discontinue any attempts to change existing law by control of appropriation items. I have no fear for the Silver Purchase Act if I and other proponents thereof are given a fair chance to defend this legislation. But where we are taken by surprise by this back-door approach, when we are unable to get adequate time to intelligently discuss the silver question, it is wholly unfair to us and to the House that we should be called upon to combat efforts to control legislation by the methods contemplated by Republican members of the Appropriations Committee.

I have heard on the floor of this House the very distinguished gentleman who will offer tomorrow an amendment to strike the appropriation for the administration of the Silver Purchase Act, condemn, in very eloquent and in no uncertain terms, the practice, indulged in at the other end of the Capitol, of attaching legislative riders to appropriation bills. How he can condemn such action on the part of that other body, and then resort to the same practice himself, is beyond me. If we condemn such actions on the part of another great body of the Congress, there is certainly additional reason why we should not resort to a violation of our own rules here in the House. By using such tactics here we certainly lessen our own respect for our own rules, and invite disrespect for them in other branches of the Government. I therefore, Mr. Chairman, urgently implore the committee that when the amendment is offered to strike from the bill the item of appropriation necessary to administer the Silver Purchase Act, that it be emphatically voted down. I urge this action, not only to the proponents of the silver program, but also to the opponents, who cannot afford, in my opinion, to use this method of controlling legislation.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield my remaining time to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield my time to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful to the gentleman from Colorado.

If I may now have the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] I should like to comment for just a minute on what the gentleman said Friday.

Since I came here 6 years ago I have had a great admiration for the gentleman from New York by reason of his usually close adherence to the facts. However, in reading the remarks the gentleman made here on Friday I find he has skidded badly on the facts as far as silver is concerned. I thought when the gentleman made his statement he probably had done it inadvertently, but when the gentleman leaves it in the RECORD as he has I must conclude that he has not given his usual close attention to the silver question or he would not make such a statement as is included in the RECORD of last Friday.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York made the statement that under the silver-purchase program and under the proclamations of the President relative to silver we have accumulated in the Treasury 3,698,000,000 ounces of silver. The gentleman then complains of the fact that we have issued against these 3,698,000,000 ounces of silver $1,600,000,000 in silver certificates. I know the gentleman's figures are wrong. I do not want to hold him to them, but I do call them to his attention.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Certainly.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will turn to page 37 of the hearings, he will see that I simply followed the language of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. That indicates only this, then, Mr. Chairman, that neither the gentleman from New York nor the Secretary of the Treasury knows what the figures of the Treasury Department are. I further ask the gentleman from New York, who is such a close adherent to the facts, to divide the 3,698,000,000 ounces of silver by $1,600,000,000 in silver certificates, and he will find, if his figures are correct, that we can sell the silver in the Treasury for the world price of 43 cents an ounce and pay off every silver certificate in existence in the United States today.

I cannot conclude my remarks, Mr. Chairman, without referring to the very eloquent address delivered earlier today by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. I hoped he would be present when I spoke, but, notwithstanding his absence, I must say what is on my mind. He, in his usual emphatic and bombastic way, denounced the silver program as an "abomination." He denounced it as a "subsidy to the silver-mining industry" of the great West. How forgetful my friend from Illinois is in denouncing what he calls a "silver subsidy" of the fact that every person in the United States that takes a drink of liquor pays an extortionate amount to protect the liquor industry of the gentleman's district. How eloquent he waxes whenever anyone, even by implication, refers to the subsidy to the great liquor industry of his district. But with smug complacency he can condemn the program which means the very life of metal mining in the West. O Mr. Chairman, if subsidies are to be condemned as an abomination, then the gentleman from Illinois should be ever conscious of the vast subsidy the people of the United States pay to protect the rot-gut liquor that flows from the district of the gentleman from Illinois. The mining of silver provides labor for thousands of American miners. The wages so paid are conducive to a decent standard of living for decent American citizens. It provides homes, it improves morale, it furnishes a market for the great eastern industrial centers. It does not destroy homes, it does not produce criminals, it does not destroy the youth of America, it does not fill insane asylums and penitentiaries, and, although for the purpose of argument we admit that the silver program may in a way "subsidize" the silver-mining industry, we take the position that it is far better to subsidize the silver that flows from American mines than to subsidize rot-gut liquor that flows so freely in America today under a subsidy to the liquor interests of the United States. By this I do not mean that I am unwilling to protect even the American liquor industry against foreign industry. What I do mean, however, is that gentlemen like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] should get out of their own glass houses before heaving stones so viciously at the silver program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Old-age reserve account, Social Security Act: For an amount sufficient as an annual premium for the payments required under title II of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935 (42 U. S. C. 401), and authorized to be appropriated to the old-age reserve account established under section 201 (a) of the act, $580,000,000, of which $30,000,000 shall be available immediately: Provided, That such amount shall be available until expended for making payments required under the act, and the amounts not required for current payments shall be invested from time to time in such amounts and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem most expedient in accordance with the provisions of such act.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, my point of order is against the language contained in line 21, page 3, beginning with the words "from time to time" and extending to the words "most expedient," the full language being "from time to time in such amounts and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem most expedient." It is my contention this is legislation in an appropriation bill and imposes additional duties and power upon the Secretary of the Treasury.

It is my understanding that at the present time under the provisions of the original body of law the Secretary of the Treasury cannot invest this money until the revenues are received, and that this language is inserted in the bill for the purpose of permitting him to invest the money in this manner before the revenues are received by the Treasury Department. It would therefore constitute new power and new authority. On that basis, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard in opposition to the point of order.

I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the exactness of the language in the bill as compared with the original Old Age Security Act. My contention is that the language in the bill is identical in meaning, though not in verbiage, with the language in the act and does not extend the language of the act. If the Chair wishes, I shall be pleased to read the language of the bill and also the language of the act. I assume the Chair has this information before him. The language of the act to which I refer is contained in subparagraph (b) of the Social Security Act. The language of the bill, as I construe it, is simply in somewhat different words a repetition of the language in the act itself.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Is it the gentleman's understanding that at the present time, under the substantive law, the Secretary of the Treasury cannot invest the money in this manner until the revenues are received by the Treasury Department?

Mr. LUDLOW. For the information of the gentleman from Ohio and of the House, let me read the language of the act:

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to invest such portion of the amounts credited to the account as is not, in his judgment—

Note the words "in his judgment." There we have the discretion—required to meet current withdrawals.

In the bill we have before us we provide:

That such amount shall be available until expended for making payments required under the act, and the amounts not required for current payments shall be invested from time to time in such amounts—

In other words, in his judgment—and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem most expedient.

It seems to me the purport of the language of the act is identical with the purport of the language of this bill, and vice versa.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I call your attention to the language that was read by the gentleman from Indiana to the effect that the Secretary had the power to meet current withdrawals. I contend this new language goes beyond the power of meeting current withdrawals in that it places no limitation but states "from time to time in such amounts and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem most expedient." This language goes beyond current withdrawals. It eliminates a restriction of the act itself and therefore it represents new authority and new legislation.

Mr. LUDLOW. I call the attention of the Chair to the phraseology "in his judgment," which I believe conveys exactly the same authority the gentleman attributes to the language of the bill before us.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. It exceeds the authority to meet current withdrawals, and there is no such power in the present law.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I have one other point. I am advised by the Bureau of the Budget that if the Secretary is not allowed the latitude conveyed by the language in the bill it probably will largely increase expenditures. I believe there is a probability, at least, that this comes under the jurisdiction of the Holman rule. As I understand the situation, the Bureau of the Budget is apprehensive that with this language deleted the Comptroller would hold that the minute the appropriation bill becomes effective for the next fiscal year there is a mandatory obligation on the Secretary of the Treasury to invest immediately these funds that are appropriated, at 3-percent interest, whereas if the Secretary has the latitude to stagger the investment of the funds and not make an immediate investment, there will be a saving of something like $8,000,000 a year. I also submit the reasonableness of the point of view that this comes within the Holman rule.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I contend that the statement which the gentleman has just made sustains my contention that this is a grant of new power.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOEHNE). The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE] has made a point of order against the words found on page 3, lines 21 to 23:

From time to time in such amounts and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem most expedient.

The gentleman from Indiana contends that this is in accordance with the Social Security Act and cites subparagraph (b) of paragraph 401, title II, in which there appear these words:

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to invest such portion of the amounts credited to the account as is not in his judgment required to meet current withdrawals. Such investment may be made only in interest-bearing obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] has also contended that this comes within the meaning of the Holman rule, when, as a matter of fact, the Holman rule specifically provides that the saving to be effected must be shown, while the statement of the gentleman from Indiana shows that the saving to be effected is entirely speculative in character.

Mr. LUDLOW. If the Chair will permit a suggestion there, I recall distinctly that in the treatment of the Holman rule in Cannon's Precedents, it is expressly set forth that it is not necessary to show in so many words or in so many figures what the saving will be, but it is sufficient to show that in all likelihood there would be a saving.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact there is nothing in the words against which the point of order has been raised to show any saving whatever.

The Chair believes that the words referred to do grant additional discretionary power to the Secretary of the Treasury, and, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, on Friday, during the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CLEVELAND] made some remarks which will be found on page 2671 of the RECORD. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] had been referring to money that had been appropriated for the W. P. A. and allocated to various Government agencies.

The gentleman from Ohio stated that he thought this was a very proper matter for the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to investigate. The gentleman stated he was a member of the committee and that the committee had held only one meeting and he thought that the committee should investigate the matter referred to.

First, let me say to the gentleman from Ohio the authority to allocate this money will be found in the relief act and there is no reason why the Committee on Expenditures should investigate what the relief act authorizes done.

As far as the Committee on Expenditures having had one meeting is concerned, that statement is true. The committee had one meeting and it went through its entire calendar. The chairman was ordered to report one bill. He followed the instructions of the committee, the bill was reported, it has been passed by the House and is now in the Senate. The chairman was instructed to secure some reports from Government agencies on other bills, the letters went out the next day, acknowledgments have been received saying the reports will be sent to the committee as soon as possible.

Since that meeting two bills have been referred to the committee. Both of them are duplicates of bills already received by the committee.

Therefore it is not necessary to call the members of the committee together when there is nothing for them to consider and will not be necessary until the reports from the departments are received.

It so happens there is something in the hearings on this bill that shows that the Committee on Expenditures does function.

For years the Government paid insurance companies large premiums to insure valuable shipments. When this matter came to the attention of the committee we held an investigation, and a law was passed which provided for setting up funds in the Treasury Department to insure the Government's valuable shipments. In 10 years prior thereto there was paid to insurance companies over $3,000,000 in premiums.

Two days after this bill became a law a deficiency bill was before the House. I drew up an amendment, took it to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], and they agreed to the amendment. It was added to the bill, the fund was set up, and we stopped paying the premiums to the insurance companies.

Now, what happened? Since that law was enacted several years ago there has been taken out of that fund exactly $226; in other words, that one act of the Committee on Expenditures, for which the entire membership of the committee deserve credit, although I was the author of the bill, has saved annually more than the amount of money that is paid in salaries to the entire membership of the committee. If you desire to check on this statement, see page 238 of the hearings.

Whenever the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CLEVINGER] has anything to place before the committee that is worth looking into, if the gentleman will present it to the committee, I will guarantee him it will receive its consideration. Demanding investigations is one thing and submitting to the committee evidence that will justify an investigation is another. Show the chairman of the committee, who is from Missouri, something worth while if you want an investigation.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment in order to take advantage of the kind invitation extended by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], the present chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The gentleman indicated a large saving to the taxpayers' Treasury because the Government carried much of its own insurance under legislation which his committee had enacted. I rise at this time to call his attention to the fact that the committee report on this bill, page 39, indicates that the subsidies for foreign air-mail service have been increased. In fact for twice weekly trans-Atlantic service, estimated on the basis of 7 months' operation, a $996,000 increase is provided. The gentleman who boasted about the saving of the taxpayers' money by reason of the Government going into the private field of insurance no doubt observed in the press a short time ago that the Pan-American Airways is going to operate a trans-Atlantic air service, and the First Lady of the land is going to christen one of their trans-Atlantic airplanes in the near future. He also must have noted that the First Lady of the land's insurance firm wrote the liability insurance for the Pan-American Airways trans-Atlantic transport planes. I rise to respectfully suggest in view of the fact that $996,000 is provided in this bill mostly as a subsidy to Pan-American Airways, that the administration should consider the advisability of having the Government insurance agency write this insurance instead of the Roosevelt family.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, merely in order that I may make a few brief remarks. Last Friday afternoon's colloquy has been referred to. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CLEVINGER] stated that he had been placed on the Committee on Expenditures. I am indeed sorry for him, if he thought he was being placed on an important committee for that committee is not allowed to function. The illustration just given by my good friend from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] shows what the committee could do. If he could do so well in saving insurance payments, think of the great savings he could accomplish through that committee. I have complained bitterly for 5 years on this floor because I was assigned as the ranking member of that supposedly very important committee, inducing me to forego requests for a real committee. I greatly sympathize with those who are assigned to this committee. It is apparently unthinkable that the Democratic side of the House would investigate anything happening during their administration. The chairman could not get any expression of willingness from the leaders to look into extravagances or inefficiency of officials. Plenty of these have been portrayed to you in magazines and newspapers and from the floor of the House but the committee refrains from taking any notice thereof. No spender was ever summoned before that committee except in one instance, and then it had to be at the instance of a Democrat. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CLEVINGER] need not think that he can successfully make a motion in that committee to summon anybody, unless it is one, or something, of no importance.

It must be a peanut matter. One Democrat did have the nerve to refute Harry Hopkins' testimony on the one day we were functioning, and just a day or two ago I found a printed copy of those hearings, and it was amazing to read that colloquy with Mr. Hopkins. We all appreciate very much the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], but it was he who acridly said, "The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is the only one who desires to conduct this inquisition." I demanded that he take the word "inquisition" out of the record, but it is there. I could not proceed to question Mr. Hopkins because so many Democratic Members insisted on getting into the conversation in order to protect the witness. But I did find, in looking over the record, that the Member of kindly memory, Mr. Gasque, of South Carolina, did take my part and declared, "Yes, they are ruining the South and paying more in relief than the farmers can pay, and we cannot hire anybody to work." If you ever wish to read an interesting hearing, get a copy of that record. You will become better acquainted with Harry Hopkins. That was the only instance of any importance whatsoever that committee has pretended to function during all these years—a committee, think of it, headed by a man of such great ability—the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. He is very watchful of little things to prove that he is on the job, but he will not touch the big things or anything that might be harmful to his party.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Congress has been in session now nearly 2 months. Can the gentleman tell the House of any plan that has been submitted by this administration in the last 6 years to put the twelve or fourteen million people who are out of work back to work?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, yes; there is a plan.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is it?

Mr. GIFFORD. The plan is the appeasement policy. They have appointed Harry Hopkins to apologize to business and beg the businessman to go ahead.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will that save the country?

Mr. GIFFORD. That is their plan. They dare not punish any longer, having 1940 to worry about.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman undoubtedly read in the newspaper this morning or yesterday morning that Mr. Hopkins announced to the country that they were through now with the social experimentations, and they were going to work to put the country back on a self-supporting basis.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I do not.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. That is not what Hopkins said.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman should get permission from the Chair when he interposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] has expired.

Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have just listened to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] orate on a subject about which he apparently does not know very much. He says we have appropriated a certain amount of money for subsidizing the trans-Atlantic air mail. I wonder if the gentleman is opposed to that? The only reason, apparently, that he is opposed to it is that he says the First Lady of the land wrote the insurance. Now, he knows and everybody knows that that is a pure demagogic misstatement.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I said that the firm of Roosevelt & Sargent wrote the insurance.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Of which Mr. James Roosevelt is no longer a member.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. From which firm the insurance agent, James Roosevelt, resigned as a partner and was supplanted by the First Lady of the land, wrote that insurance, and it is not a lie.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The First Lady of the land did not write that insurance and you know it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Then the newspapers must all be wrong and the gentleman right?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Yes. They are just like you. They are generally wrong. That is all that is the matter with the newspapers.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman indicting the entire press of America?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I am—90 percent of them; yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. He is following the President then?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Ninety percent of them indulge in misstatements or half truths.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to object to the gentleman from Texas proceeding, but we have a bill to consider. While this is all very interesting, I think I shall have to object to other extraneous speeches and insist that the discussion be confined to the bill after this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not on the floor for the purpose of any political sniping that seems to have been indulged in lately. I rise to get information about the bill. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two.

Referring to the bottom of page 50, which provides for the construction of public buildings outside of the District of Columbia, there is $30,000,000 appropriated. I have read the hearings on that provision of the bill and have carefully read the section of the bill to which I have referred, and I find the language of the bill and the hearings both indicate that this $30,000,000 is to be used only for the construction and completion of post-office buildings heretofore allocated. That is, for which sums have been heretofore allocated.

Mr. LUDLOW. Outside of the District of Columbia, yes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Outside of the District of Columbia, yes. There are a great many Members of the House, and I am one of those, who have within their districts post offices where the receipts are sufficient to make them eligible for the construction of a new building, and where buildings are needed, and for which no allocations have heretofore been made, and I very much desire that such be done. The question I desire to ask the chairman of the committee is, if the amount of the bill as framed should be increased from $30,000,000, am I right that that would not extend its purpose so as to include new allocations?

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman is right. An amendment to the bill to include new allocations would not be in order.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Those of us who desire new post-office building allocations made under the terms of the bill, could not frame an amendment that would be germane?

Mr. LUDLOW. No, sir; it could not be done.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Have the allocations under the 3-year program heretofore established been allocated?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes; the allocations have been made.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. In other words, in order to get funds for a new post-office building where no allocation has been made, it will be necessary to have a new authorization bill passed?

Mr. LUDLOW. That is correct.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee. On page 3, beginning in line 12, I find it is proposed to appropriate $580,000,000 for social security. Is that correct?

Mr. LUDLOW. That is correct. It is the old-age reserve account.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman please inform the House what has become of the $1,000,000,000 that has been collected under the Social Security Act, out of which only about $10,000,000 has been paid out? What has become of the other $990,000,000? I am asking for information. This is no laughing matter.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. It was covered into the Treasury.

Mr. LUDLOW. As the gentleman undoubtedly knows, the reason for setting up an old-age reserve account is that it was necessary, as I understand it, that that be done to meet the requirements of the Constitution that we could not tax for a specific purpose.

The taxes, when collected, have to go into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States and are subject to the general uses of that fund. The theory of the act is to set up an old-age reserve account into which there shall be appropriated from time to time sums commensurate with the taxes collected under the Old Age Security Act. The old-age reserve account takes the place of the taxes that have been collected, and the administrative officials are scrupulously careful to keep it even in amount with the taxes collected.

Mr. KNUTSON. As I understand it—and I have every sympathy for the gentleman who is being compelled to defend legalized embezzlement of the people's money—as I understand it, this money is collected from the employers and the employees for the purpose of being paid out in social-security benefits, and that about one thousand million dollars has already been collected. Instead of spending the money for that purpose it is being used to pay the general operating expenses of the Government. Is that correct?

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to the gentleman that there has been a lot of unnecessary confusion about this matter. These taxes are collected and Congress appropriates into a fund known as the old-age reserve account, the amounts, as near as actuarial and other computations permit, which are the same in amount as the taxes collected. Under the law these appropriations are invested in a security that is created by the Secretary of the Treasury especially for this purpose, a Government security which bears 3 percent interest.

Mr. KNUTSON. They are invested in I O U's, are they not?

Mr. LUDLOW. They are just as good as any other security of the United States Government, and presumably there is nothing better than a United States Government security.

Mr. KNUTSON. What I am getting at is that the money that has been taken in has been spent, and we are going to be taxed over again as the need arises; in other words, it amounts to double taxation.

Mr. LUDLOW. Oh, no. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. KNUTSON. I cannot yield further. I want to elaborate a little. I would like to use a little of my own time.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. There is no double taxation.

Mr. KNUTSON. Upon whose authority does the gentleman make that statement?

Mr. LUDLOW. Upon the authority of common knowledge of how the act is being administered, on the authority of the act itself, and on the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury combined. As I have said, the fund set up equals as nearly as is possible the amount paid in in taxes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I cannot yield further, Mr. Chairman. The money that has been taken in for social-security purposes has been spent for the operating expenses of the Government, and as the need arises we are going to be taxed over again. Instead of being taxed once we are going to be taxed twice. As long as the American people want that kind of administration it is all right with me. I can pay my share of it.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from California for a question, not for a speech.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. This is a question. What would the gentleman have the Government do with the money it collects instead of investing it in Government bonds as the law directs?

Mr. KNUTSON. It should not be collected until it is needed. [Applause.] A large reserve fund to draw from is merely an incentive to spend and spend.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I was rather interested to hear the remarks of my distinguished friend from Minnesota [Mr. Knutson], particularly when he used the sensational word "embezzlement." It is the easiest thing in the world to make sensational remarks. It is the sensational statements that hit the headlines, but what are the facts? The Committee on Ways and Means is considering this question now, and the gentleman from Minnesota is a member of this committee. He knows the situation. The situation simply is as follows, as I see it: If there is any change to be made let us make it without charges of "embezzlement" and other sensational charges when anyone with common sense—and the gentleman from Minnesota is overendowed with common sense—knows there is no such thing involved.

What are the facts? When we passed the present Social Security Act, in order to impose the taxes we had to provide that the money raised go into the general fund of the Treasury in order to obviate a constitutional question. I see the keen eye of the former Governor of Maine who once said he voted against a bill because it was unconstitutional but the very next day appeared before the Ways and Means Committee and advocated the passage of a bill despite the fact it might be unconstitutional.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Having referred to the gentleman, I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I would remind the gentleman that my stand on constitutionality was exactly the same as that taken by the gentleman himself.

Mr. McCORMACK. The only difference was that the gentleman from Massachusetts was consistent, whereas the gentleman from Maine was inconsistent.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman understands, of course, that there is no such thing as embezzlement of the Social Security funds?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; the gentleman from Minnesota knows that it is a meaningless word, and he does not mean it in the financial sense, he means it in the political sense.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for one minute while I read what the Government actuary said?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LUDLOW. Here is what the Government actuary said when he came before the Committee on Appropriations:

The appropriations go into the Budget in the amount of taxes collected, less administrative expenses; and, as Mr. Bell has said, the appropriations and collections are practically in balance on an accumulative basis. These funds are placed in what might be called a trust fund. It is the same thing as the funds of an insurance company, except in the case of social security the funds are invested exclusively in Government bonds.

That explains the whole transaction.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would like briefly to resume my statement.

The situation that exists is as follows: Under the social-security law the taxes are levied generally and brought into the general fund, then appropriated out to a special fund. Whether we like it or not we have to do it that way. No matter what scheme of social-security law we have, where it is a contributory pension we have to do it that way unless we change the Constitution.

By this same law we say to the Secretary of the Treasury, in this case Secretary Morgenthau—at some future time it may be another Secretary, "You have got to get 3 percent interest on this money that we appropriate to you that has come into the General Treasury and which we are appropriating into the special fund." He can go out into the market and buy Government bonds, but if he cannot buy 3-percent Government bonds he is for all practical purposes forced to issue special obligations.

The Government guarantees 3 percent interest. If he cannot buy bonds carrying 3 percent interest, and you cannot do that today, he has to issue what are called "special obligations," guaranteed by the Federal Government. If he cannot buy bonds in the open market which bear 3 percent interest, and no Secretary of the Treasury can do that today, he has to issue special obligations. Whatever bond issues are outstanding which bear 3-percent interest, and I refer to governmental issues, are held closely. The average rate of interest on long-term indebtedness is about 2½ percent. So we say to the Secretary of the Treasury, "You have to pay 3 percent interest. Therefore, if you cannot buy 3-percent bonds you have to issue special obligations."

That is just exactly the situation that exists. This explains how meaningless is the charge of embezzlement.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last 11 words.

Mr. Chairman, I did not begin this discussion, and I do not care to have it terminated by the gentleman from Massachusetts dragging me rather unceremoniously into the matter.

So far as the question of constitutionality is concerned, which I understand was raised by his discussion, I think it should be perfectly clear to the Members of the House—and I think we are indebted to his very precise statement of the situation—that it was necessary to tax the money into the general fund, then appropriate it for the special purpose of social security in order to avoid constitutional questions. I should like the gentleman to also inform the House whether or not the question of the constitutionality of the appropriation is any different, even though the tax may not be the subject of constitutional attack.

If my reading of the constitutional decisions are correct, the only reason the method adopted by the majority, so far as the Social Security Act is concerned, is able to continue, whereas the A. A. A. taxes under the Hoosac Mills decision were thrown out, was because some ingenious gentleman downtown or elsewhere invented the idea that if the taxes were levied for the general fund it was not then the subject of attack, whereas if it was levied for a specific purpose it might then be thrown out. This did not affect in any way the question of whether or not under the Constitution we have the power to appropriate funds for those specific purposes. I appreciate the claim of the gentleman from Massachusetts—that he is consistent in this situation. His consistency seems to consist in the consistency with which he violates the Constitution.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Is the gentleman opposed to the Social Security Act?

Mr. BREWSTER. I voted for it.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. But the gentleman is opposed to it now. He is opposed to the method of collecting the money for it?

Mr. BREWSTER. I have not said that. The gentleman from Massachusetts brought me into this matter because of the position I took before the Ways and Means Committee, at which time I stated that I would prefer a solution of this question along constitutional lines; that I regretted it had not been adopted; that I would prefer that solution. I feel very strongly about this question, and I do not believe the Constitution itself will be of much value if 10,000,000 remain unemployed here much longer.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The question is, Is the gentleman questioning the constitutionality of the Social Security Act?

Mr. BREWSTER. I am asking the gentleman from Massachusetts if he will inform me whether the constitutional question he suggests on the tax is not equally applicable to the appropriation?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. That is not an answer, but I will accept it.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is what I am asking the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Maine is unnecessarily alarmed when he uses the word "unceremoniously." The state of mind of the gentleman from Massachusetts was not to unceremoniously bring the gentleman into the debate. It was simply to facetiously do so.

The position of the gentleman from Maine is this: When he appeared before the Ways and Means Committee advocating the Townsend plan, the gentleman from Massachusetts asked the gentleman from Maine if the gentleman from Maine felt there was a constitutional question involved, and he said, "Yes." The gentleman from Massachusetts then asked the gentleman from Maine how he voted the day before on the reciprocal-tax bill—"How did you vote?" "I voted against it." "Was the constitutional question one of the considerations involved in your vote against it?" And the gentleman from Maine frankly said "Yes." He voted against the bill one day because of the constitutional question involved, and the very next day admitting there was a serious constitutional question involved he still urged the members of the Ways and Means Committee to report out the bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. May I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts, it is just barely possible that the gentleman from Maine has read the letter that the President wrote to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in which he said, "Do not be too much concerned over the question of constitutionality."

Mr. BREWSTER. I still do not understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts has answered the question which I asked whether or not appropriating funds for social security is made constitutional by the fact that the tax is levied for the general fund of the Treasury? It is my understanding that the Supreme Court has simply indicated that by this procedure the tax and the appropriation are made immune from attack. The appropriation may still be beyond the purview of the Constitution but there is no constitutional method of challenging it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Massachusetts may say that the Supreme Court has passed upon that question and said that it is.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CUSTOMS

Salaries and expenses: For collecting the revenue from customs, for the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenue, and not to exceed $100,000 for the securing of evidence of violations of the customs laws; for expenses of transportation and transfer of customs receipts from points where there are no Government depositories; not to exceed $84,500 for allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (5 U. S. C. 118a), but not to exceed $1,700 for any one person; not to exceed $500 for subscriptions to newspapers; not to exceed $2,000 for improving, repairing, maintaining, or preserving buildings, inspection stations, office quarters, including living quarters for officers, sheds, and sites along the Canadian and Mexican borders acquired under authority of the act of June 26, 1930 (19 U. S. C. 68); and including the purchase (not to exceed $87,500), exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary for official use in field work; $21,153,000, of which such amount as may be necessary shall be available for the payment of extra compensation earned by customs officers or employees for overtime services, at the expense of the parties in interest, in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of the act approved February 13, 1911, as amended by the act approved February 7, 1920, and section 451 of the Tariff Act, 1930 (19 U. S. C. 261, 267, and 1451): Provided, That the receipts from such parties in interest for such overtime services shall be deposited as a refund to the appropriation from which such overtime compensation is paid, in accordance with the provisions of section 524 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U. S. C. 1524); for the cost of seizure, storage, and disposition of any merchandise, vehicle and team, automobile, boat, air or water craft, or any other conveyance seized under the provisions of the customs laws, for the purchase of arms, ammunition, and accessories, and $493,360 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia, exclusive of 10 persons from the field force authorized to be detailed under section 525 of the Tariff Act of 1930: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for maintenance or repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for use in the District of Columbia except one for use in connection with the work of the customhouse in Georgetown: Provided further, That hereafter section 3648 of the Revised Statutes (31 U. S. C. 529b) shall not apply to payments made for the Bureau of Customs in foreign countries: Provided further, That the offices of the surveyor of customs at the port of New York and seven comptrollers of customs, with annual salaries aggregating $51,600, are hereby abolished. The duties imposed by law and regulations upon the surveyor of customs at the port of New York and comptrollers of customs, their assistants and deputies are hereby transferred to, imposed upon, and continued in positions now established in the Customs Service by or pursuant to law, as the Secretary of the Treasury by appropriate regulations shall specify; and he is further authorized to designate the titles by which such positions shall be officially known hereafter. The Secretary of the Treasury, in performing the duties imposed upon him by this paragraph, shall administer the same in such a manner that the transfer of duties provided hereby will not result in the establishment of any new positions in the Customs Service.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language on page 16, line 14, beginning with the words "Provided further," and extending down to line 5, on page 17, as legislation on an appropriation bill, especially that part of the language beginning in line 23, which states "and he is further authorized to designate the titles by which such positions shall be officially known hereafter."

To me this seems to be purely legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York state the citation again?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. On page 16, line 23, beginning with the word "and" and reading, "and he is further authorized to designate the titles by which such positions shall be officially known hereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman raise the point of order on the words he has cited?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. On the entire proviso, on both pages.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, the point of order is directed against the proviso?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana wish to be heard?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes, Mr. Chairman. I do not believe there is any necessity for extended comment on this point of order.

In 1932 a provision in substantially identical language was included in the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill. The gentlewoman from California [Mrs. KAHN] made a point of order against the provision. The Chair ruled that the five considerations essential to the application of the Holman rule were present in the language proposed, namely, (1) that it was germane, (2) that it reduced the number and salaries of officers of the United States, (3) that it retrenched expenditures, (4) that the retrenchment was not speculative or argumentative but was specific, and (5) that every part of the legislation was essential.

The point of order was, therefore, overruled and I submit it should be in the instant case.

May I say further there is no doubt about the application of the Holman rule in cases where it is ascertainable that there will be a substantial saving, whether or not any specific amount of saving is indicated. However, in the instant case we have the peculiarly advantageous position of being able to certify to the exact amount in dollars and cents that will be saved, namely, $51,600. Therefore, I submit to the Chair this comes clearly within the Holman rule. I direct the Chair's attention to the fact that we have complied scrupulously with the Ramseyer rule, and he will find set forth on page 47 of our report the text of existing legislation and the text of the legislation we propose in place of it. Having done this, we have only to comply with the Holman rule to make the provision invulnerable to a point of order, and this we have done. I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana states there will be a saving of $51,600. If the Chair will refer to page 18 of the report he will see that new positions involving a total of $51,000 will be created in the same department so the saving is just $600. Therefore, any claim that there will be a saving of $51,600 is just not so. The report shows new positions are being created in the same department.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. If the gentleman will yield, may I say that this particular proviso takes powers away from one branch of a department and confers them on another, which clearly is legislation.

Mr. LUDLOW. Of course, the one has no connection, relation, or relevancy to the other. All that is necessary for us to say is that in this transaction by abolishing certain positions we make a saving of $51,600. If we appropriate a similar amount of money to another branch for some other purpose, what connection does that have with this?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The money is to be appropriated to the same department for men to perform the same duties as the comptrollers whose positions you are abolishing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] makes the point of order against the proviso on page 16 on the grounds that it embraces legislation in an appropriation bill. The gentleman from Indiana contends that although it is legislation on an appropriation bill it comes within the Holman rule and is therefore in order. The Holman rule may be found in the second sentence of clause 2 of rule XXI, and is as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

In order to justify language in an appropriation bill under the Holman rule three things must concur: First, it must be germane; second, it must retrench expenditures in one of the ways enumerated in the rule; and, third, the language embodied in the provision must be confined solely to the purpose of retrenching expenditures.

The Chair has carefully examined the proviso to which the point of order is directed and is of the opinion that the language is germane and that on its face it definitely shows a reduction of the officers of the United States and a retrenchment of expenditures in the amount of $51,600.

It is also apparent to the Chair that all the legislation to be found in the paragraph is necessary to accomplish the purpose of retrenching expenditures. The Chair has been fortified in his opinion on this proposition by a decision made by Chairman Howard on February 29, 1932, on a proposition almost identical with the pending proviso. In that instance the Chair overruled the point of order on the ground that the provision came clearly within the Holman rule.

For the reasons stated the Chair is of the opinion that the language to which the point of order has been directed clearly comes within the provisions of the Holman rule, and, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FITZPATRICK: On page 16, line 14, strike out, beginning with the colon down through the word "Service", on page 17, line 5.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, last year there was a bill submitted to the Ways and Means Committee abolishing these positions, and they refused to take favorable action on the bill, and recommended its disapproval.

I have always been opposed to legislation on appropriation bills. I believe the committee is going very far when they attempt to legislate, especially when a similar bill was before the Ways and Means Committee at the last session.

The committee after recommending the abolishment of the offices of the surveyor of customs at the port of New York and seven comptrollers of customs whose salaries total $51,600, created 17 new positions in the same department whose salaries will total $51,000, which is just $600 less than the total salaries for the positions that were abolished. The taxpayers will only save $600. If my amendment is defeated it means that the surveyor of customs at the port of New York and the comptrollers in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, San Francisco, and Chicago will be eliminated.

These positions have been established for many, many years.

About 1,800 employees come under the surveyor of the port of New York. These positions were created by legislation and if they are to be abolished, let the Members of this House abolish them by legislation duly enacted, but do not let it be done by the Appropriations Committee. It is time we stop the Appropriations Committee, of which I am a member, from coming in here with legislation on appropriations bills.

I hope the Members of this House will agree with me in this matter and vote for my amendment and notify the Appropriations Committee that they can no longer bring legislation of this nature in here on appropriation bills.

I ask for the adoption of my amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the psychology around a proposition of this sort is extremely interesting. Here the Appropriations Committee is charged with the responsibility of trying to defend the taxpayer and to promote the best interests of the Government in the work of its department, and suddenly we step on somebody's toes. In the interest of economy, in the interest of trying to help the taxpayer and to do our job, we step on somebody's toes because a job is going to be abolished.

It is not the purpose of the Appropriations Committee to try to save the job of somebody who is not doing any work. I cannot understand how any Member can stand on the floor here and defend the proposition when the testimony is that there is no duty to be performed or that they do perform, and that the people holding the positions are absolutely useless as far as the department is concerned, and that it is a pure 100-percent waste of Government money. I do not see how anyone can try to defend it and say, "No; we must let the fellow who is holding this job stay on and receive money for work he does not do or work that is not needed."

How can any argument be made by the Appropriations Committee on any subject if we are willing to stand up here and defend a proposition that represents a 100-percent waste of Federal money?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. If I have time when I get through with this statement, I shall yield.

Let us read what the Bureau had to say about this. We always call them in for hearings and we always ask their advice. If a man is necessary, they say so; or if a position is needed, they say so; and if it is not needed, it is very rarely that they say so; but they do say so in this instance, and our position is doubly substantiated because of that fact.

We asked Mr. Ballinger about it and he said:

Yes, sir; in my opinion they can be dispensed with, because in every office we have competent assistants who are well qualified to do that particular job.

Again:

Mr. TABER. What duties do these people perform now?

Mr. BALLINGER. They are officials in charge of offices, and they are presumed to pass upon questions of policy and procedure that come to them in that capacity as heads of the offices.

Mr. TABER. Are they primarily political appointees?

Mr. BALLINGER. They are political appointees.

Mr. TABER. Are the deputy comptrollers under them civil-service employees?

Mr. BALLINGER. They are civil-service employees. * * *

Mr. TABER. The collectors have no sort of supervision of them?

Mr. BALLINGER. No, sir; they report directly to Washington.

In the very office they are in charge of, the deputies do not even report to the man over them, but report to Washington.

Mr. LUDLOW. If it should be the judgment of the subcommittee that these comptrollers of customs may be dispensed with, would that carry with it any suggestion of the elimination of any personnel under them, or would the public service continue to function with the various personnel in the offices?

Then the statement goes on to say they would function with the same personnel.

Then we have Mr. LUDLOW's question:

By way of summation, you do not know of any reason why the comptrollers should not be dispensed with, and you believe that it would be in the interest of the public service to dispense with them?

To which Mr. Ballinger replied "yes" and Mr. Dow said:

That is correct.

That is the whole question. You can read between the lines. I do not have to expand on that. There are seven positions where there were no duties to be performed and for which there is no justification.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then why did you create the new positions that will cost the taxpayers $51,000 for the same work?

Mr. O'NEAL. They were not doing the same work.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Exactly the same work. Their account is going on now.

Mr. O'NEAL. The positions that we created are held by civil-service employees, and they were doing the same work and these were doing no work.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How about the post offices throughout the country? Are they political jobs?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. To me this is a question of a very important principle. The Committee on Ways and Means, just as eager to save a dollar, just as intellectual as the Committee on Appropriations, had this matter under consideration. Treasury experts at that time tried to cut out the surveyor of customs at the port of New York, and the Ways and Means Committee, after very careful consideration, told them that it should not be done, and what happened? The Treasury then came before the Committee on Appropriations and asked that what they were unable to accomplish through a legislative committee shall now be accomplished through emasculation. I am asking the Members of this House, regardless of the committee to which they belong, whether they intend that clerks and others from executive departments shall come before a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations and gain, by artifice or circumvention, that which a legislative committee deliberately refused to grant them. I think it is a question of honor, a question of respect of one committee for another, to say to representatives of bureaus or departments in unmistakable terms that such things do not occur. They cannot appear before one committee and be denied a certain request and then go to the Committee on Appropriations and by another method gain their end. I think if the Committee on Appropriations will do the right thing at this time, it will agree to have this provision stricken out of this bill in order that we might show these departments that we are still working together while legislating. Mind you, Mr. Chairman, I am not asking now for the retention of the surveyor of the port of New York because it makes any difference to me, but because a great principle is herein involved, and the Committee on Appropriations should agree to curb these departmental heads and petty officials who come before the committee to circumvent the dictum of another great committee of this House which has precedence and legislative jurisdiction in the matter under discussion. That is the issue before this House.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Is it not peculiar, however, that while they are saving $51,000 on this elimination, they are adding $300,000 more for other salaries?

Mr. DINGELL. I am not discussing that phase, because I say there is considerable justification to sustain that action. The Committee on Ways and Means had considered that matter and acted favorably. The House passed that bill and that reflected the sentiment of the House, so for that reason I think there is justification in carrying out what we previously passed upon; but as regards the surveyor, I think the Committee on Appropriations has been taken advantage of by experts from the Treasury Department who intended to circumvent the actions of the Ways and Means Committee which previously declared its position.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes.

Mr. SWEENEY. I believe the gentleman is sound in his argument, and the House ought to take a stand to protect the rights of the different committees. If the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL], who preceded the gentleman from Michigan, is sound, that Mr. Ballinger can come before a committee and say, "We have competent assistants, and, therefore, we do not need the head of the department," why not abolish all of the collectors of customs throughout the country and have the work done by assistants?

Mr. DINGELL. And why should they come before the Committee on Appropriations with their appeal when they were told definitely by the Committee on Ways and Means that their recommendations were disallowed? The bill known as the Customs Administrative Act was passed by the House and specifically provided that the surveyor of the port of New York shall remain.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes.

Mr. O'NEAL. The gentleman is speaking in terms of honor and right, but what right have we to vote a dollar for services not performed?

Mr. DINGELL. The Ways and Means Committee considered that phase with as much thoroughness and as conscientiously as did the Committee on Appropriations. It was admitted that the surveyor was not a sinecure, that he performed valuable and important service.

Mr. ENGEL. Is not this a case of where the Committee on Appropriations has brought in a provision which saves money, and the chairman of the committee has interpreted it as coming within the Holman rule? Is it not a fact that the chairman has ruled that this comes under the Holman rule and we have not violated any law or any rule?

Mr. DINGELL. I agree with my friend on a technical basis, but this is a question of precedence and the rights of a legislative committee functioning within its own province being later defeated by an official of an executive department.

Mr. ENGEL. And was not the Holman rule adopted for the purpose of saving money?

Mr. DINGELL. This has nothing to do with the question of saving money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, in this amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] it is sought to prevent Congress from saving $51,000. It is urged by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] that as self-respecting Members of Congress we should vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK], who seeks to keep on the pay roll, among others, a gentleman who now draws $3,000 a year for a job, a kind of political plum that he has, as comptroller of customs in New York City.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman consider a postmastership in his district to be a political plum?

Mr. MAHON. Is that all the gentleman wants to know? I am not discussing that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman consider them political positions? The gentleman is getting very patriotic all of a sudden about politics.

Mr. MAHON. I quote from the testimony of the representatives of the Treasury Department and the Customs Bureau. I read the following from page 1338 of the hearing:

Mr. BALLINGER (Treasury). If this particular position were abolished, the saving would be $51,000, and we would not have to replace them by anyone else in the Customs Service.

Mr. Dow (Customs). That is correct.

Mr. TABER (member of Appropriations Committee). You would not have to add to your employees list any personnel to take care of their work?

Mr. BALLINGER. No, sir.

Mr. McLEOD (member of the Appropriations Committee). No additional money would be required?

Mr. BALLINGER. No, sir; there would be a net saving of the salaries of the comptrollers.

It was asked that those positions in the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, San Francisco, and Chicago be eliminated.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I decline to yield. There is nothing that we are attempting to do that is contrary to the rules of procedure of the House of Representatives. If there were, of course, the chairman would see to it that the rules of the House were followed. It is true that for the purpose of increasing the pay of some of the underpaid people in the Customs Service and for the purpose of raising the pay of others some additional appropriation was made, but we did not knowingly appropriate for anybody where his services were not needed by the Government. I can hardly see how any Member can vote to spend $51,000 of the people's money when there is no reason under heaven to spend it, and the Treasury Department, charged with the performance of this work, says so.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I was going to ask why cut $51,000 in one place and spend it in another?

Mr. MAHON. We cut $51,000 and we increased the appropriation to raise the pay of some underpaid employees. In the Health Department we added $2,000,000 over the Budget estimate. We cut where we could and we made increases in the appropriation where we thought they were justifiable.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You created additional positions in that very Department for $51,000.

Mr. MAHON. I beg to differ with my good friend from New York. I think he is in error in offering this amendment but in fairness I am glad to say that he is one of the ablest and finest Members of the House and has been a valuable member of the Committee on Appropriations for a long time.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. O'NEAL. I would like to answer the question which the gentleman from California asked. One of them does some work for the money and the other does no work.

Mr. MAHON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. In 1928 I think it was this committee, in this same way, abolished the surveyors of the ports, one of them in my own city, and I helped abolish them, because they were useless. They were not needed. No harm came as a result of that.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman is not in favor of the amendment, then?

Mr. COCHRAN. I am not. I am supporting the committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a little information?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. HOOK. Not being a member of either committee, I would like information as to whether or not the Appropriations Committee knew at the time the Treasury Department officials came before the committee that this question had already been discussed before the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. TABER. The Appropriations Committee did not know—at least, I did not know. I will not say about the Appropriations Committee, but I did not know at the time the hearings were held that the matter had been before the Ways and Means Committee. I did not know it at the time the bill was marked up. But even so, the House adopted rules when it organized, and it said the Committee on Appropriations could bring in a bill germane to the subject matter which shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salaries of officers of the United States.

So that clearly, just as the chairman of this committee has ruled, the Appropriations Committee was entirely within its rights in bringing in this bill to get rid of these seven superfluous positions which pay an average of $7,000 each, and which are absolutely useless, and where the occupants of those positions do absolutely no work. The Department does not want them. They are ashamed of them.

I understand one of them—just think of it—used to come to the office once in 2 weeks to get his pay check, but now that has become too burdensome, and he is not able to come in once in 2 weeks. He has his check mailed to him.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is that in the hearings?

Mr. TABER. It was information that was given to the committee.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it in the hearings?

Mr. TABER. It was not printed in the hearings, but it is true. I do not see why we should hand out $51,000 for that kind of a proposition.

Now, let me point to another fact. The money that was allowed to improve auditing conditions in the field goes to regular civil-service employees who are going to work and bring it up to date. I cannot see any analogy between that item referred to on page 18 of the report and the cutting out of the seven useless jobs.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How many years have these been useless positions?

Mr. TABER. Oh, for a great many years. It is a good thing they are being abolished, because it will get rid of seven leeches on the pay roll of the United States for all time.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] how many years they should be useless before they are taken off the pay roll? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple proposition, resolving itself into the question: Do we want to save $51,600 or do we want to throw away $51,600? This is practically all there is to it.

I regret to find myself in disagreement with my esteemed colleague on the Appropriations Committee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] is a very valuable Member of this House and he always protects his district very nicely and very adequately. One has to admire him for it, but that is no reason why we should stand here today in a time of widespread distress and colossal deficit financing and throw away $51,600.

This was not of our initiation, I may say. This proposal was initiated in the administrative offices of the Treasury Department, the Department that administers the Customs Service. Secretary Morgenthau, the head of the Treasury Department, is a fellow citizen of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] and I am sure he understands the needs of the Customs Service in New York as well as any man on Capitol Hill. He sent Mr. Ballinger to us and Mr. Dow of the Customs Service.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ballinger and Mr. Dow came before our committee and told us that these places were useless, that these people did not do anything, and that the places ought to be abolished. They made it plain to us that these offices are as superfluous and unnecessary as the fifth wheel of a wagon would be. Acting on this information we abolished them.

The question arose here awhile ago as to the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee. We have the highest regard for the Committee on Ways and Means and we respect it because it is a great committee and we are not reaching out to assume any jurisdiction that belongs to that committee, but the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] was absolutely right when he said that under the Holman Rule there is in matters that involve saving a concurrent jurisdiction between the legislative committees and the Appropriations Committee. We are entirely within our rights, and our action is entirely proper in every way, when we try to bring about this slight reduction in the Federal pay roll. Would anybody have any respect for us if we had failed to bring in legislation to abolish these perfectly useless offices after we had been advised of their uselessness?

The question is, Is this an economy House or is it a House that wants to pile expenditure upon expenditure and throw away money? Here is the touchstone.

The CHAIRMAN. All time on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DINGELL) there were—ayes 28, noes 88.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

Salaries and expenses: For salaries and expenses in connection with the assessment and collection of internal-revenue taxes and the administration of the internal-revenue laws, including the administration of such provisions of other laws as are authorized by or pursuant to law to be administered by or under the direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; including the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Assistant General Counsel for the Bureau of Internal Revenue, an assistant to the Commissioner, a special deputy commissioner, five deputy commissioners, one stamp agent (to be reimbursed by the stamp manufacturers), and the necessary officers, collectors, deputy collectors, attorneys, experts, agents, accountants, inspectors, investigators, chemists, supervisors, storekeeper-gagers, guards, clerks, janitors, and messengers in the District of Columbia, the several collection districts, the several divisions of internal-revenue agents, and the several supervisory districts, to be appointed as provided by law; the securing of evidence of violations of the acts, the cost of chemical analyses made by others than employees of the United States and expenses incident to such chemists testifying when necessary; telegraph and telephone service, rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, postage, freight, express, necessary expenses incurred in making investigations in connection with the enrollment or disbarment of practitioners before the Treasury Department in internal-revenue matters, expenses of seizure and sale, and other necessary miscellaneous expenses, including stenographic reporting services; for the acquisition of property under the provisions of title III of the Liquor Law Repeal and Enforcement Act, approved August 27, 1935 (49 Stat. 872-881), and the operation, maintenance, and repair of property acquired under such title III; for the purchase (not to exceed $25,000), exchange, hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary for official use of the Alcohol Tax Unit in field work; printing and binding (not to exceed $525,000); and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, furniture, mechanical devices, laboratory supplies, law books and books of reference, and such other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia, the several collection districts, the several divisions of internal-revenue agents, and the several supervisory districts, $59,772,500, of which amount not to exceed $10,812,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That no part of this amount shall be used in defraying the expenses of any officer designated above subpoenaed by the United States court to attend any trial before a United States court or preliminary examination before any United States commissioner, which expenses shall be paid from the appropriation for "Fees of jurors and witnesses, United States courts": Provided further, That not more than $100,000 of the total amount appropriated herein may be expended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for detecting and bringing to trial persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violation: Provided further, That not to exceed $942,000 of the total appropriated herein may be expended for personal services of the Intelligence Unit, of which not to exceed $50,500 may be expended in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. LUDLOW: Page 20, line 10, strike out "$59,772,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$59,877,500."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I may say in explanation of this amendment that it is offered simply to correct a miscalculation that was made. It does not in any way have any significance or indicate any change of attitude on the part of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the committee amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read down to and including line 4 on page 27.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOEHNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 4492, the Treasury-Post Office bill, 1940, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JARRETT (at the request of Mr. RUTHERFORD), for the balance of the week, on account of sickness.

To Mr. GIBBS (at the request of Mr. PETERSON of Georgia), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. ROBERTSON, for March 1, on account of official business.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. COCHRAN. To submit a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT REORGANIZATION

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have conferred with the ranking minority member, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], and I ask unanimous consent that the Select Committee on Government Organization be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including an editorial from today's Philadelphia Inquirer, and also an article by Gen. Hugh Johnson on the new reorganization bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein certain excerpts from documents published by the Senate with reference to silver.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the bill H. R. 4042 and to include therein three brief tables.

The SPEAKER. without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial comment on the duty of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a certain table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution adopted by the Legislature of West Virginia on H. R. 1888.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. EDMISTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a couple of quotations from outstanding citizens of my State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a petition signed by 40 members of the faculty of the Evening School of New York City.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by the Hon. Henry Ellenbogen, a former Member of this body.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter which I received from the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Department of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER]?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, on page 1852 of the RECORD it is stated that I asked unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter of Dr. Nylander, of the National Labor Relations Board. I ask unanimous consent that the words "a letter from" be stricken and the words "a news item from the Inglewood Daily News giving the speech of Dr. Nylander" be inserted in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, permission was granted under this extension to include a letter from Dr. Nylander, of the National Labor Relations Board. The matter included in the RECORD was a newspaper article by the Inglewood Daily News. I do not understand why anyone should confuse a newspaper article with a letter from a public official.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. The fact that the word "letter" is stated instead of "newspaper article" is simply an error on the part of the reporter taking it down. I never said "letter." I said "a newspaper article." The fact is that a newspaper article was submitted and not a letter. I never had a letter, and it was an error in taking it down.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I know the gentleman never had a letter.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I never said that. It was an error.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I do not know about that.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I do.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I know what is in the RECORD.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has sufficiently explained it.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. As it stands there is a violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD] has the floor under a reservation of objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order under the rules of the House.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I have the floor on a reservation.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am demanding the regular order, and I can take the gentleman off the floor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the request. I want to make this clear.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take care of the situation.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I think the Chair should make a comment on this situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserved the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The regular order was demanded.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I did not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object—

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order, and I ask that the rules of the House be enforced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must enforce the rules of the House. The regular order has been demanded.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MONKIEWICZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address made by my colleague the Honorable ALBERT E. AUSTIN on Thursday last over the radio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MONKIEWICZ]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute to call attention to three Supreme Court decisions rendered today, and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court today handed down three decisions, a clear understanding of which will do much to promote industrial peace.

The first two of these decisions should answer all doubts which may still exist on the part of the Secretary of Labor as to the legality or the illegality of the sit-down strikes. They hold in no unmistakable terms that the sit-down strike is illegal.

It is regrettable that Attorney General Murphy did not act upon this theory during the time he was Governor of Michigan, and especially during the period from the 1st day of January 1937 until the fall of that year.

In the case of National Labor Relations Board against Fansteel Metallurgical Co., the Supreme Court held that the N. L. R. B. was in error in holding that men who took part in a sit-down strike could not be discharged by their employer; that they must be reinstated with back pay; and that prior unfair labor practices on the part of the employer deprived it of all right to discharge an employee who had violated the law.

The decision of the Supreme Court rendered today in the case of National Labor Relations Board against the Sands Manufacturing Co. is a repudiation of the contention of the National Labor Relations Board that an employer must continue to bargain indefinitely with employees.

The decision holds that, where the employer has sincerely and in good faith made an effort to reach an agreement with the employees and they have been unable to do so, it may then employ new men in the place of those with whom it could not agree upon terms.

The case also holds that, where the union and the employees violate their contract prior to the date when the employer refuses to meet them for collective-bargaining purposes and has replaced the old employees with new ones, he cannot be held guilty of an unfair labor practice.

Both of these cases reaffirm the doctrine announced in the Jones-Laughlin case, which laid down the doctrine that the act does not deprive the employer of his right to select his own employees, so long as he does not make their union activity an excuse for their discharge.

In the case of National Labor Relations Board against Columbian Enameling & Stamping Co., Inc., the Court laid down the doctrine that conciliators from the Labor Department making a demand upon the employer for the reopening of negotiations for collective bargaining are not necessarily representatives of the union involved in the dispute and that a refusal on the part of the employer to reopen negotiations on such a demand is not an unfair labor practice—the reason for the holding being, as given by the Court, that such negotiations would be futile unless there was evidence that the conciliators had authority from the union to enter into an agreement.

The Court further holds that, where negotiations have been broken off, the employer is not required to seek out the employees or their representatives and request further negotiations before employing new men.

Had we amended the Wagner law, as for 2 years we have known we should do, the costly litigation in these three and in many other cases might have been avoided and peace between industry and labor, as well as in the labor unions, been long ago established.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to state that I am the one who objected in the Committee of the Whole to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] to revise and extend his remarks. At this time I wish the RECORD to be clear that I am no longer objecting to what the gentleman from California wishes to do.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a matter of a misunderstanding of the reporter in connection with his transcription of the record. I never at any time said I had a letter I wished to insert in the RECORD. I simply asked to insert a speech that was reported in the Inglewood Daily News, which I did. There is no use of taking exception to that because I know what I said. The evidence is there that I never submitted any letter, but I did submit the statement. This is just taking technical exception to that, and I do not see any particular reason it should be done. The RECORD should be perfectly clear in respect of it.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a resolution from the Legislature of the State of Oregon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] is entitled to be recognized for 20 minutes. The Chair does not see the gentleman from Oklahoma on the floor.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the gentleman from Indiana that the gentleman from Oklahoma spoke under general debate this afternoon and may not desire to speak at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair assumes that the gentleman has waived his rights under the order by not being present.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 4011. An act to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 185. Joint resolution making additional funds available for salaries and expenses, Federal Housing Administration.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 4011. An act to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 185. Joint resolution making additional funds available for salaries and expenses, Federal Housing Administration.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, February 28, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

R. 3704) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; room 346, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m. Tuesday, March 7, 1939, on the bill (H. R. 4307) to extend the provisions of the Shipping Act, 1916, and the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, to all common carriers by water in interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m., on the bills and dates listed below:

Tuesday, March 14, 1939:

H. R. 180, H. R. 202, construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201, additional facilities for Panama Canal; H. R. 2667, construction of a Mexican Canal.

In listing the bills to be heard on March 14, 1939, House Joint Resolution 112 (TINKHAM), to create a commission to study and report on the feasibility of constructing the Mexican Canal, was inadvertently omitted from the notice.

This is to advise all interested parties that House Joint Resolution 112 will be considered at that time with the following bills: H. R. 180 (IZAC), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 202 (BLAND), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201 (BLAND), need for additional lock facilities at Panama; H. R. 2667 (TINKHAM), relative to the construction of a Mexican Canal.

Tuesday, March 21, 1939:

H. R. 137, H. R. 980, H. R. 1674, relating to annuities for Panama Canal construction force.

Thursday, March 23, 1939:

H. R. 139, H. R. 141, H. R. 142, H. R. 1819, miscellaneous Panama Canal bills.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, February 27, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of our fathers and Lord of mercy, who hast made all things with Thy word and hast ordained man through Thy wisdom that he should have dominion over the creatures which Thou hast made, and order the world according to equity and righteousness, and execute judgment with an upright heart: Give us wisdom that sitteth by Thy throne that is the brightness of the everlasting light, the unspotted mirror of the power of God, and the image of His goodness, for, though a man be never so perfect among the children of men, yet if Thy wisdom be not with him he shall be nothing regarded. O Christ of God, incarnate wisdom and all love divine, send us forth this day as messengers of Thine to homeless hearts, to loveless lives, to the crowds without a compass, and make each one of us a radiance on the way, a bearer of the light divine. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, February 27, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine, in the eighty-ninth legislative session assembled, most respectfully present and petition your honorable body as follows:

Whereas for over 100 years Maine fishermen have earned a precarious and bare living; and

Whereas the competition from foreign countries, aided by Federal treaties, is such that the Maine fishermen can no longer make their bare living; and

Whereas the Maine fishermen have been a group that has always been self-reliant, and expressive of the real spirit of American democracy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, your memorialists, do hereby respectfully petition and urge that the various types of fishing in the State of Maine be protected by proper subsidies to equalize the effects of the present and future tariff rates or that such changes and modifications of the present tariff rates shall be made that our Maine fishermen may compete upon a just and equal basis with fishermen in foreign countries; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated by the secretary of state, be immediately transmitted by the secretary of state to the proper officers and committees of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, the President of the United States, and to each of the Representatives and Senators representing the State of Maine in the United States Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Enrolled Joint Memorial 4

Joint memorial memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to amend the Constitution of the United States relative to taxes on incomes, gifts, and inheritances; and providing limitations on taxes so levied; and repealing the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States

Whereas there is now pending or will be pending in the current session of the Congress of the United States of America proposed legislation to repeal the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and to amend the Constitution of the United States relative to taxes on incomes, gifts, and inheritances; providing for a limitation of taxes thereon; that the people of the State of Wyoming are greatly interested in the passage of this said amendment: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Wyoming (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized as follows: That application be and it hereby is made to the Congress of the United States of America to call a convention for the purpose of proposing the following article as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"Sec. 2. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration, provided that in no case shall the maximum rate of tax exceed 25 percent.

"Sec. 3. The maximum rate of any tax, duty, or excise which Congress may lay and collect with respect to the devolution or transfer of property, or any interest therein, upon or in contemplation of death, or by way of gift, shall in no case exceed 25 percent.

"Sec. 4. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect at midnight on the 31st day of December, following the ratification of this article."

Be it further resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, requested to provide as the mode of ratification that said amendment shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of the Constitution of the United States, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States; be it finally

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he hereby is, directed to send a duly certified copy of this resolution to the Senate of the United States and one to the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, favoring protection for the livestock industry threatened by importations of meats and meat products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See joint memorial printed in full when presented by Mr. SCHWARTZ on the 27th instant, p. 1897, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of Local Union, No. 78, United Packinghouse Workers of America, of Albany, Ga., protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate petitions, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for the enactment of House bill 11, a general-welfare bill granting old-age assistance, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a memorial from the Scotchtown Presbyterian Church of Middletown, N. Y., signed by the pastor and moderator, and clerk of session, remonstrating against inclusion of religious bodies and their employees under the operation of the social-security system, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Delaware, in reference to Federal taxes on motor fuels and lubricating oils, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 27th instant, pp. 1894-1895, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. NEELY presented a resolution of the House of Delegates of the State of West Virginia, protesting against the enactment of certain pending legislation relative to freight rates, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

(See resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. HOLZ on the 27th instant, p. 1896, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution of the Federation of Women's Associations of Protestant Churches, Waltham, Mass., favoring the preservation of democracy and peace, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MEAD presented a resolution of Buffalo Lodge, No. 1, International Ship Masters' Association, of Buffalo, N. Y., protesting against the ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of McPherson, Kans., praying for the adoption of a policy of nonparticipation in aggression, and also discontinuance of the shipment of war supplies from the United States to Japan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Athol, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to exempt small independent telephone companies from the provisions of the Labor Standards Act of 1938, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BONE presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Washington, praying that the traffic in war materials to Japan for use in operations in China be stopped, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Washington, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Washington, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Whereas the State of Washington and the North Pacific coast of the United States is now the part of our country most vulnerable to attack;

Whereas it is to the interest of the rest of the Nation that this area be well protected so as to prevent any possible foothold being obtained on these shores by any foreign power; and

Whereas national defense week is being celebrated from February 12 to February 22, this year, in the State of Washington: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the State of Washington, in legislative session now assembled, requests the Federal Government to do all in its power to increase the defenses of the State of Washington and Pacific Northwest to the point where invasion, either by land, sea, or air shall be prevented, and that copies of this resolution be immediately transmitted to the members of our congressional delegation in Washington, D. C., to the Secretaries of War and Navy, and to the President of the United States.

Mr. GERRY presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress of the United States of America to eliminate the taxation of gasoline and lubricating oil by the Federal Government

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has imposed a tax upon all sales of gasoline and lubricating oil; and

Whereas the Federal tax on such sales is untimely and prohibitive and places a burden upon the users of gasoline and lubricating oil beyond that which they should carry and beyond that which the traffic can legitimately bear: And, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Rhode Island (the house of representatives concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, respectfully memorialized to enact with all convenient speed such legislation as may be necessary to abolish the Federal gasoline sales tax and the Federal lubricating oil sales tax; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and to each Member of Congress elected from the State of Rhode Island, and that the latter be urged to use their best offices to procure the enactment of such legislation as will accomplish the purposes of this resolution.

(Mr. GREEN presented an identical copy of the foregoing concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.)

Mr. RUSSELL presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas the State of Georgia is dependent upon farming and the prosperity of our farmers reflects itself in every other vocation, profession, and occupation; and

Whereas for the past 6 years we have tried experimentation and new and untried laws affecting farming generally; and

Whereas after the expenditure of billions of dollars on this experimentation and untried legislation the farmers now find themselves in equally as bad condition as in 1912: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Georgia delegation in Congress be requested to enact and pursue some method of legislation to restore the prosperity of the farmers, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to Georgia's 2 Senators and 10 Members of the House of Congress.

Resolution urging an increased Federal appropriation for forest-fire control

Whereas additional Federal funds are urgently needed in Georgia for forest-fire protection; and

Whereas there has been introduced into Congress a bill (S. 228) providing for an increase in the Federal appropriation for national forest-fire control from $2,500,000 to $9,000,000; and

Whereas Georgia's portion of Federal funds for forest-fire control would be materially increased if the new bill is passed by Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Georgia (the house of representatives concurring), That the members of the Georgia delegation in Congress be requested to give their full support to this bill; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to each members of the Georgia delegation in our National Congress.

REMOVAL OF SPANISH EMBARGO—PETITION

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the letter of Charles Rabbits, secretary of the lawyers' committee on American relations with Spain, together with an enclosed petition printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as he has requested.

There being no objection, the letter and petition were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the body of the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LAWYERS COMMITTEE ON AMERICAN RELATIONS WITH SPAIN,
NEW YORK, N. Y., February 21, 1939.

Senator JAMES JOHN DAVIS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DAVIS: The signatories of the petition sent you herewith have asked our committee to forward the same to you with the request that you introduce it into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

We would appreciate early word from you regarding this matter.
Respectfully yours,

CHARLES RABBINS, Secretary.

The President and Congress of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, citizens of the United States, respectfully urge that the embargo imposed on the established and recognized Government of Spain on May 1, 1937, be immediately revoked by whatever procedure is best adapted to the accomplishment of that purpose.

We firmly believe that such action is in the enlightened self-interest of our Nation; that the continuance of this embargo encourages and assists those international forces which are systematically undermining democracy in the Western Hemisphere; that if these forces succeed in subduing the Spanish people, the antidemocratic forces in this hemisphere will be immeasurably strengthened, to the detriment and danger of the Government and people of the United States.

Respectfully submitted.

ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations a letter received from Mr. Frank Mantz, executive secretary, Hazleton Chamber of Commerce, February 13, 1939, protesting the St. Lawrence waterway and calling attention to the constantly diminishing pay rolls of the anthracite industry in the Hazleton area.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HAZLETON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Hazleton, Pa., February 13, 1939.

Senator JAMES J. DAVIS,

The United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The St. Lawrence waterway project, in the judgment of the directors of the Hazleton Chamber of Commerce, who met on Tuesday, February 7, would adversely affect the anthracite region of Pennsylvania.

Nearly one and one-half million people reside in this great region, and our businessmen, through the chamber of commerce, desire to go on record against this project. Opposition springs from the fact that labor in the mines will be materially affected, and this, of course, will result in unemployment in the service institutions, lower property values, and generally cause a recession in our social life.

For your information, the Hazleton area has shown a steady decrease from 1930 to 1938. Eighty percent of the mine pay roll in the Hazleton area for a period of years follows:

1932	6,062,826.40
1934	9,160,718.24
1936	7,641,305.28
1938	6,730,923.04

Our region needs every bit of tonnage that it is possible to secure at the present time in order to take care of our idle miners.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK MANTZ, Executive Secretary.

THE STABILIZATION FUND—REFERENCE OF CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, under date of February 14 I submitted certain questions to the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, regarding the stabilization fund. Under date of February 23 he replied that the questions could be properly answered in the Committee on Banking and Currency. Not being a member of that committee, I am therefore foreclosed from that particular opportunity to get the information myself. I wrote the Secretary of the Treasury again and asked him if he would be willing to answer the questions in the forum of the committee. Under date of February 27 he replies that he will. The questions are as follows:

1. Is the Government of the United States under agreement with the Governments of Great Britain and France to sustain the value of the French franc and the British pound in relation to the value of the American dollar?
2. What is the nature and extent of this agreement, if any; and, if any, is it summarily revocable in the event that any of these nations become involved in war?
3. Are there any agreements of this same general nature with any other foreign governments?
4. Does the Treasury construe its authority under the Stabilization Fund Act to include the power to deal with wartime problems of international exchange precisely as with peacetime exchange without further instructions from the Congress?

In view of the Secretary's willingness that these questions should be answered in the Committee on Banking and Currency, I ask that this entire correspondence be referred to that committee, and I request that the questions be posed to the Secretary when he appears as a witness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ELLENDER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 810) for the relief of Joe Pizl, Sr., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 118) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 572) to provide for the common defense by acquiring stocks of strategic and critical raw materials, concentrates, and alloys essential to the needs of industry for the manufacture of supplies for the armed forces and the civilian population in time of a national emergency, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 119) thereon.

PRINTING OF TREATISE ON RECLAMATION AND IRRIGATION

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Printing I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 90, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 90) submitted by Mr. HAYDEN on the 27th instant, was read, considered, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That certain correspondence and papers exchanged between the Bureau of Reclamation and Senator CARL HAYDEN consisting of a treatise on "What Federal Reclamation Means to the United States and a Discussion on the National Irrigation Policy, Its Development and Its Significance" be printed as a Senate document, with illustrations.

PROTECTION AND CARE OF PUBLIC HEALTH

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill of widespread interest, the so-called national health bill. I ask that the bill, together with an explanatory statement, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill introduced by the Senator from New York will be received, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and, together with the explanatory statement, printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1620) to provide for the general welfare by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for public health, prevention and control of disease, maternal and child health services, construction and maintenance of needed hospitals and health centers, care of the sick, disability insurance, and training of personnel; to amend the Social Security Act; and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to provide for the general welfare by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for public health, prevention and control of disease, maternal and child health services, construction and maintenance of needed hospitals and health centers, care of the sick, disability insurance, and training of personnel; to amend the Social Security Act; and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "National Health Act of 1939."

Sec. 2. Title V, parts 1, 2, and 5 of the Social Security Act are amended to read as follows:

"TITLE V—GRANTS TO STATES FOR MATERNAL AND CHILD WELFARE

"PART 1—MATERNAL AND CHILD HEALTH SERVICES

"APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 501. For the purpose of enabling each State, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, especially in rural areas and in areas suffering from severe economic distress, to extend and improve services, supplies and facilities for promoting the health of mothers and children and medical care during maternity and infancy including medical, surgical, and other related services and care in the home or in institutions, and facilities for diagnosis, hospitalization, and after care; and to develop more effective measures for carrying out the purposes of this part of this title, including the training of personnel, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $3,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, the sum of $20,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, the sum of $35,000,000; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this part of this title. The sums authorized under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Chief of the Children's Bureau, State plans for extending and improving such services.

"ALLOTMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 502. (a) The Chief of the Children's Bureau shall allot to the States prior to the beginning of each fiscal year, and at such time or times thereafter as may be necessary, the sums appropriated pursuant to section 501 for such year, and the sums available for allotment under subsection (b) of this section. The amounts of the allotments to the States shall be determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Chief of the Children's Bureau with the approval of the Secretary of Labor. In determining the allotments under this section the following factors for the respective States shall be taken into consideration: (1) The total number of births in the latest calendar year for which the Bureau of the Census has available statistics; (2) the number of mothers and children in need of the services; (3) the special problems of maternal and child health; and (4) the financial resources.

"(b) The amount of an allotment to any State under subsection (a) of this section for any fiscal year remaining unobligated and unpaid at the end of such fiscal year shall be available for allotment to States under subsection (a) for the succeeding fiscal year, in addition to the amount appropriated for such year.

"APPROVAL OF STATE PLANS

"SEC. 503. (a) A State plan to effectuate the purpose of this part of this title shall—

"(1) provide for financial participation by the State;

"(2) provide for a State-wide program or for extension of the program each year so that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State in need of the services not later than the beginning of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945;

"(3) provide for the administration of the plan by the State health agency or for the supervision by the State health agency of any part of the plan administered by another State agency or by a political subdivision of the State;

"(4) provide such methods of administration as are found by the Chief of the Children's Bureau to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan, including: Methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis; and methods of establishing and maintaining standards of medical and institutional care and of remuneration for such care, such methods to be prescribed by the State agency after consultation with such professional advisory committees as the State agency may establish;

"(5) provide for an advisory council or councils, composed of members of the professions and agencies, public and private, that furnish services under the State plan, and other persons informed on the need for, or provision of, maternal and child health services;

"(6) provide that the State health agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Chief of the Children's Bureau may from time to time require and comply with such provisions as the Chief of the Children's Bureau may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(7) provide for cooperation and, when necessary, for working agreements between the State health agency and any public agency or agencies administering services related to the services furnished under the State plan, including public agencies concerned with welfare, assistance, social insurance, education, or medical care; and

"(8) provide that the State health agency (or other State agency administering services under this plan) shall have authority to make and publish such rules and regulations as are necessary for efficient operation of the services, having special regard for the quality and economy of service.

"(b) The Chief of the Children's Bureau shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a).

"PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 504. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor under section 501, and the allotments made in accordance with section 502, payments shall be made to each State which has a plan approved under section 503 for each year or part thereof covered by such plan beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, in amounts which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the purposes of section 501. These payments shall be in such proportion to the total amount of public funds expended under the State plan, during each year or part thereof covered by such plan as is determined in accordance with subsection 1101 (e) upon the basis of the financial resources of the State, not counting so much of such total expenditures as are included in any other State plan submitted for grants to the State under any other part of this title or any other title of this act or any other act of Congress. In no event shall the total sum paid to the State for any fiscal year or part thereof covered by its plan be in excess of the total sum expended or obligated for amounts planned for expenditures from Federal funds.

"(b) The Chief of the Children's Bureau shall, from time to time, but not less often than semiannually, determine the amounts to be paid to each State necessary for carrying out its plan, upon the basis of estimates submitted by the State, and, after taking into consideration overpayments or underpayments to the State in prior periods, shall certify the amounts so determined to the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon receipt of each such certification for payment, the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Division of Disbursements of the Treasury Department, and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, shall pay to each State the amount so certified.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"Sec. 505. Whenever the Chief of the Children's Bureau finds, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of a plan approved under part 1 of this title, that in the administration of such plan there is failure to comply substantially with any requirement of subsection 503 (a), he shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until he is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

"FEDERAL ADVISORY COUNCILS

"Sec. 506. The Chief of the Children's Bureau is authorized to establish an advisory council or councils, composed of members of the professions and agencies concerned with promotion of maternal and child health, maternity care and care of infants, and other persons informed on the need for, or provision of, such care, to advise the Chief of the Children's Bureau with respect to carrying out the purposes of this part of this title.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"Sec. 507. The Chief of the Children's Bureau, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall make and publish such rules and regulations not inconsistent with this part of this title as may be necessary to the efficient administration of this part of this title.

"PART 2. MEDICAL SERVICES FOR CHILDREN AND SERVICES FOR CRIPPLED AND OTHER PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

"APPROPRIATION

"Sec. 511. For the purpose of enabling each State, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, especially in rural areas and in areas suffering from severe economic distress, to extend and improve services, supplies, and facilities for the medical care of children, and services to crippled children and other physically handicapped children in need of special care, such services and facilities to include medical, surgical, corrective, and other related services and care in the child's home or in institutions, and facilities for diagnosis, hospitalization, or other institutional care, and after care, and to develop more effective measures for carrying out the purposes of this part of this title, including the training of personnel, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $13,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, the sum of $25,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, the sum of $35,000,000; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this part of this title. The sums authorized under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Chief of the Children's Bureau, State plans for extending and improving such services.

"ALLOTMENTS TO STATES

"Sec. 512. (a) The Chief of the Children's Bureau shall allot to the States prior to the beginning of each fiscal year, and at such time or times thereafter as may be necessary, the sums appropriated pursuant to section 511 for such year, and the sums available for allotment under subsection (b) of this section. Out of the sums appropriated pursuant to section 511 the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall allot to the States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $9,000,000 for medical care of children and the sum of $4,000,000 for services to crippled children and other physically handicapped children in need of special care; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, the sum of $20,000,000 for medical care of children and the sum of $5,000,000 for services to crippled children and other physically handicapped children in need of special care; and from the sum appropriated for each year thereafter such amounts as the Chief of the Children's Bureau deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this part of this title. The amounts of the allotments to the States shall be determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Chief of the Children's Bureau with the approval of the Secretary of Labor. In determining the allotments under this section the following factors for the respective States shall be taken into consideration: (1) The child population; (2) the number of children in each State in need of the services; (3) the special problems of medical care of children; and (4) the financial resources.

"(b) The amount of an allotment to any State under subsection (a) of this section for any fiscal year remaining unobligated and unpaid at the end of such fiscal year shall be available for allotment to States under subsection (a) for the succeeding fiscal year, in addition to the amount appropriated for such year.

"APPROVAL OF STATE PLANS

"Sec. 513. (a) State plans to effectuate the purposes of this part of this title shall—

"(1) provide for financial participation by the State;

"(2) provide for State-wide programs or for extension of the programs each year so that they shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State in need of the services not later than the beginning of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945;

"(3) provide for the administration of the plans by the State health agency or for the supervision by the State health agency of any part of a plan administered by another State agency or by a political subdivision of the State: Provided, That in States where some other State agency (or agencies) is already charged by State law with administrative or supervisory responsibility for a State medical-care program, including medical care of children or for a program of services for crippled children, as provided in section 511, and is now carrying out a substantial program of medical care of children or services for crippled children, the State health agency may, through agreement with such agency or agencies, develop and submit a plan under which the State agency or agencies designated by State law shall have the authority to administer services under the State plan for medical care of children or under the plan for services for crippled children: Provided further, That all plans for medical care of children or services for crippled children for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945, and for succeeding years, shall provide for administration by the State health agency;

"(4) provide such methods of administration as are found by the Chief of the Children's Bureau to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan, including: Methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis; and methods of establishing and maintaining standards of medical and institutional care and of remuneration for such care, such methods to be prescribed by the State agency after consultation with such professional advisory committees as the State agency may establish;

"(5) provide for an advisory council or councils, composed of members of the professions and agencies, public and private, that furnish services under the State plans, and other persons informed on the need for, or provision of, medical services for children or services for crippled children;

"(6) provide that the State health agency or other State agencies administering the services under the plans will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Chief of the Children's Bureau may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Chief of the Children's Bureau may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(7) provide for cooperation and, when necessary, for working agreements between the State health agency and any public agency or agencies administering services related to the services furnished under the State plan, including public agencies concerned with welfare, assistance, vocational rehabilitation, social insurance, education, or medical care; and

"(8) provide that the State agency (or agencies) administering the plans or other State agency administering services under the plans shall have authority to make and publish such rules and regulations as are necessary for efficient operation of the services, having special regard for the quality and economy of service.

"(b) The Chief of the Children's Bureau shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a).

"PAYMENTS TO STATES

"Sec. 514. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor under section 511, and the allotments made in accordance with section 512, payments shall be made to each State which has a plan approved under section 513 for each year or part thereof covered by such plan beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, in amounts which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the purposes of section 511. These payments shall be in such proportion to the total amount of public funds expended under the State plan, during each year or part thereof covered by such plan, as is determined in accordance with subsection 1101 (e) upon the basis of the financial resources of the State, not counting so much of such total expenditures by the State and its political subdivisions as are: (1) Expended for the care, in hospitals, institutions and other organized facilities, of cases of mental disease, mental defectiveness, epilepsy and tuberculosis as are not in excess of the average annual expenditures for these purposes in the 3 years prior to the effective date of this part of this title; or (2) included in any other State plan submitted for grants to the State under any other part of this title or any other title of this act or any other act of Congress. In no event shall the total sum paid to the State for any fiscal year or part thereof covered by its plan be in excess of the total sum expended or obligated for amounts planned for expenditure from Federal funds.

"(b) The Chief of the Children's Bureau shall, from time to time but not less often than semiannually, determine the amounts to be paid to each State necessary for carrying out its plan, upon the basis of estimates submitted by the State and, after taking into consideration overpayments or underpayments to the State in prior periods, shall certify the amounts so determined to the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon receipt of each such certification for payment the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Division of Disbursements of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, shall pay to each State the amount so certified.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"Sec. 515. Whenever the Chief of the Children's Bureau finds, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of a plan approved under part 2 of this title, that in the administration of such plan there is failure to comply substantially with any requirement of subsection 513 (a), he shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until he is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

"FEDERAL ADVISORY COUNCILS

"Sec. 516. The Chief of the Children's Bureau is authorized to establish an advisory council or councils, composed of members of the professions and agencies concerned with medical care for children and services for crippled children or otherwise physically handicapped children in need of special care, and other persons informed on the need for, or provision of, such services for children, to advise the Chief of the Children's Bureau with respect to carrying out the purposes of this part of this title.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"Sec. 517. The Chief of the Children's Bureau, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall make and publish such rules and regulations not inconsistent with this part of this title as may be necessary to the efficient administration of this part of this title.

"PART 5—ADMINISTRATION

"Sec. 541. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $2,500,000 for all necessary expenses of the Children's Bureau in administering the provisions of this title (except sec. 531), and in making such studies, investigations, and demonstrations and such provision for the training of personnel as will improve the quality of the services and promote the efficient administration of this title, except section 531; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient for such purposes.

"(b) The Secretary of Labor shall include in his annual report to the Congress a full account of the administration of this title, except section 531."

SEC. 3. Title VI of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE VI. PUBLIC HEALTH WORK AND INVESTIGATIONS"PART 1—PUBLIC HEALTH WORK*"APPROPRIATION

"Sec. 601. For the purpose of enabling each State, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, especially in rural areas and in areas suffering from severe economic distress, to extend and improve public health work, including services, supplies, and facilities for the control of tuberculosis and malaria, for the prevention of mortality from pneumonia and cancer, for mental health, and industrial hygiene activities, and to develop more effective measures for carrying out the purposes of this part of this title, including the training of personnel, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $15,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, the sum of $25,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, the sum of $60,000,000; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this part of this title.

"The sums authorized under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, State plans for extending and improving such services.

"ALLOTMENTS TO STATES

"Sec. 602. (a) The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall allot to the States prior to the beginning of each fiscal year, and at such time or times thereafter as may be necessary, the sums appropriated pursuant to section 601 for such year, and the sums available for allotment under subsection (b) of this section. The amounts of the allotments to the States shall be determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. In determining the allotments under this section, the following factors for the respective States shall be taken into consideration: (1) the population; (2) the number of individuals in need of the services; (3) the special health problems; and (4) the financial resources.

"(b) The amount of an allotment to any State under subsection (a) of this section for any fiscal year remaining unobligated and unpaid at the end of such fiscal year shall be available for allotment to States under subsection (a) for the succeeding fiscal year, in addition to the amount appropriated for such year.

"APPROVAL OF STATE PLANS

"Sec. 603. (a) A State plan to effectuate the purposes of this title shall—

"(1) provide for financial participation by the State;

"(2) provide for a State-wide program or for extension of the program each year so that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State in need of the services not later than the beginning of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945;

"(3) provide for the administration of the plan by the State health agency or for the supervision by the State health agency of any part of the plan administered by another State agency or by a political subdivision of the State;

"(4) provide such methods of administration as are found by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan, including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, and methods of establishing and maintaining standards of medical and institutional care and of remuneration for such care, such methods to be prescribed by the State agency after consultation with such professional advisory committees as the State agency may establish;

"(5) provide for an advisory council or councils, composed of members of the professions and agencies, public and private, that furnish services under the State plan, and other persons informed on the need for, or provision of, public health work;

"(6) provide that the State health agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(7) provide for cooperation and, when necessary, for working agreements between the State health agency and any public agency or agencies administering services related to the services furnished under the State plan, including public agencies concerned with welfare, assistance, social insurance, workmen's compensation, labor, industrial hygiene, education, or medical care; and

"(8) provide that the State health agency (or other State agency administering services under this plan) shall have authority to make and publish such rules and regulations as are necessary for the efficient operation of the services, having special regard for the quality and economy of service.

"(b) The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a).

"PAYMENTS TO STATES

"Sec. 604. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor under section 601, and the allotments made in accordance with section 602, payments shall be made to each State which has a plan approved under section 603 for each year or part thereof covered by such plan beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, in amounts which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the purposes of section 601. These payments shall be in such proportion to the total amount of public funds expended under the State plan, during each year or part thereof covered by such plan, as is determined in accordance with subsection 1101 (e) upon the basis of the financial resources of the State, not counting so much of such total expenditures by the State and its political subdivisions as are: (1) Expended for the care, in hospitals, institutions, and other organized facilities, of cases of mental disease, mental defectiveness, epilepsy and tuberculosis as are not in excess of the average annual expenditures for these purposes in the 3 years prior to the effective date of this part of this title; or (2) included in any other State plan submitted for grants to the State under any other title of this act or any other act of Congress. In no event shall the total sum paid to the State for any fiscal year or part thereof covered by its plan be in excess of the total sum expended or obligated for amounts planned for expenditure from Federal funds.

"(b) The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall, from time to time but not less often than semiannually, determine the amounts to be paid to each State necessary for carrying out its plan, upon the basis of estimates submitted by the State and, after taking into consideration overpayments or underpayments to the State in prior periods, shall certify the amounts so determined to the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon receipt of each such certification for payment the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Division of Disbursements of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, shall pay to each State the amount so certified.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"Sec. 605. Whenever the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service finds, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of a plan approved under part 1 of this title, that in the administration of such plan there is failure to comply substantially with any requirement of subsection 603 (a), he shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until he is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

"FEDERAL ADVISORY COUNCILS

"Sec. 606. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service is authorized to establish an advisory council or councils, composed of members of the professions and agencies concerned with public health work, and other persons informed on the need for, or provision of, public health work, to advise the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service with respect to carrying out the purposes of this part of this title.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"Sec. 607. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make and publish such rules and regulations not inconsistent with this part of this title as may be necessary to the efficient administration of this part of this title.

"ADMINISTRATION"

"Sec. 608. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $1,500,000 for all necessary expenses of the Public Health Service in administering the provisions of part 1 of this title, including the printing of forms and reports; in making such studies and demonstrations and such provision for the training of personnel as will improve the quality of the services and promote the efficient administration of this part of this title; and for the pay, allowances, and travel expenses of commissioned officers (Regular and Reserve) and other personnel of the Public Health Service assigned to duty in carrying out the purposes of this part of this title in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient for such purposes.

"(b) Appointment is hereby authorized of commissioned officers under the provisions of section VII of the act of April 9, 1930, without regard to the limitation as to number and research qualifications as therein provided, including not to exceed four assistants to the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service who shall have the same pay and allowances as are now or hereafter may be provided for the assistants to the Surgeon General of the Army.

"(c) The President, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to change the names and reallocate the functions of the existing administrative divisions of the Public Health Service and is authorized to create such additional administrative divisions as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and other work of the Public Health Service. Each such division shall be under the charge of a commissioned officer of the Public Health Service detailed by the Surgeon General to be Director, with the same compensation as is now received by heads of administrative divisions.

"PART 2—INVESTIGATIONS"

"Sec. 611. (a) For the purpose of enabling the Public Health Service, through the National Institute of Health, to make investigations of health, disease, sanitation, and matters pertaining thereto (including the printing and binding of the findings of such investigations), for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the acts of August 14, 1912, ch. 288, 37 Stat. L. 309; May 26, 1930, 46 Stat. 379, and for the pay, allowances, and travel expenses of commissioned officers (Regular and Reserve) and other personnel of the Public Health Service engaged on such investigations in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $3,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, the sum of $3,500,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, the sum of $4,000,000; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient for such purposes.

"(b) Nothing in this act shall be construed to supersede or limit any other act of Congress prescribing the functions of the Public Health Service or authorizing the expenditure of funds therefor."

Sec. 4. The Social Security Act is amended by adding new titles XII, XIII, and XIV, as follows:

"TITLE XII. GRANTS TO STATES FOR HOSPITALS AND HEALTH CENTERS"

"APPROPRIATION"

"Sec. 1201. For the purpose of enabling each State, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, especially in rural areas and in areas suffering from severe economic distress, to construct and improve needed hospitals, to assist the States for a period of 3 years in defraying the operating cost of added facilities, and to develop more effective measures for carrying out the purposes of this title, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated:

(1) In respect to general hospitals, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $8,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, the sum of $50,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, the sum of $100,000,000; and (2) in respect to mental and tuberculosis hospitals, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, a sum sufficient to carry out, in respect to such hospitals, the purposes of this title; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums authorized under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, State plans for constructing and improving needed hospitals.

"ALLOTMENTS TO STATES"

"Sec. 1202. (a) The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall allot to the States prior to the beginning of each fiscal year, and at such time or times thereafter as may be necessary, the sums appropriated pursuant to section 1201 for such year and the sums available for allotment under subsection (b) of this section. The amounts of the allotments to the States shall be determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. In determining the allotments under this section, the following factors for the respective States shall be taken into consideration: (1) The needed additional hospitals; and (2) the financial resources.

"(b) The amount of an allotment to any State under subsection (a) of this section for any fiscal year remaining unobligated and unpaid at the end of such fiscal year shall be available for allotment to States under subsection (a) for the succeeding fiscal year in addition to the amount appropriated for such year.

"APPROVAL OF STATE PLANS"

"Sec. 1203. (a) A State plan to effectuate the purposes of this title, submitted in respect to either clause (1) or clause (2) of section 1201, or both, shall—

"(1) provide for financial participation by the State;

"(2) provide for the administration of the plan by the State health agency or for the supervision by the State health agency of any part of the plan administered by another State agency or by a political subdivision of the State;

"(3) provide such methods of administration as are found by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan, including: Methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis; and methods of establishing and maintaining standards for institutional management and remuneration for such management, such methods to be prescribed by the State agency after consultation with such professional advisory committees as the State agency may establish;

"(4) provide that ownership of real estate, improvements, and equipment be vested in the State or its political subdivisions;

"(5) provide such safeguards as may be necessary to assure satisfactory title, location, design, construction, and equipment;

"(6) provide a system of financial support which will give reasonable assurance of continuing maintenance of added hospitals and of their potential availability to all groups of the population in the designated area subject only to the suitability of the hospitals for particular diseases and conditions and to the financial arrangement for payment for service;

"(7) provide for an advisory council or councils, composed of members of the professions and agencies, public and private, that furnish services under the State plan, and other persons informed on the need for, or provision of, hospitals;

"(8) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information as the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(9) provide for cooperation and, when necessary, for working agreements between the State health agency and any public agency or agencies administering services related to the services furnished under the State plan, including public agencies concerned with welfare, assistance, social insurance, workmen's compensation, labor, industrial hygiene, education, or medical care;

"(10) provide that the State agency administering the plan, or other State agencies administering part of the plan, shall have authority to make and publish such rules and regulations as are necessary for efficient administration of the plan; and

"(11) provide that the wages paid or to be paid laborers and mechanics employed in the construction of added hospitals are not less than the wages prevailing in the locality for work of a similar nature, as determined or adopted (subsequent to a determination under applicable State or local law) by the Commissioner of Labor Statistics:

"Provided, That a State plan submitted in respect to clause (2) of section 1201 during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, shall provide for administration by a State agency or agencies and shall meet the requirements of clauses (1), (3), (4), (5), (6), (8), (10), and (11) of this subsection.

"(b) The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a).

"(c) The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall have authority to utilize the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, or, upon the termination thereof, another appropriate agency of the United States designated by the President, for the purpose of reviewing title, location, plans and specifications for the construction, alteration and repair of buildings and equipment, and of supervising the awarding and performance of contracts pursuant to plans approved under this title.

"PAYMENTS TO STATES"

"Sec. 1204. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor under section 1201, and the allotments made in accordance with section 1202, payments shall be made to each State which has a plan approved under section 1203 for each year or part thereof covered by such plan beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, in amounts which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the purposes of section 1201. These payments shall be in such proportion to the total amount of public funds expended under the State plan, during each year or part thereof covered by such plan, as is determined in accordance with subsection 1101 (e) upon the basis of the financial resources of the State, not counting so much of such total expenditures by the State and its political subdivisions as are included in any other State plan submitted for grants to the State under any other title of this act or any other act of Congress: Provided, That the funds made available for defraying the operating cost of added facilities will be paid at a rate of $300 per added bed for general and for tuberculosis hospitals and $150 per added bed for mental hospitals during the first year of operation, two-thirds of these amounts, respectively, for the second year of operation, and one-third of these amounts, respectively, for the third year of operation. In no event shall the total sum paid to the State for any fiscal year or part thereof covered by its plan be in excess of the total sum expended or obligated for amounts planned for expenditure from Federal funds.

"(b) The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall, from time to time but not less often than semiannually, determine the amounts to be paid to each State necessary for carrying out its plan, and, after taking into consideration overpayments or underpayments to the State in prior periods, shall certify the amounts so determined to the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon receipt of each such certification for payment the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Division of Disbursements of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, shall pay to each State the amount so certified.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"Sec. 1205. Whenever the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service finds, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of any State plan approved under this title, that in the effectuation or administration of such plan there is failure to comply substantially with any requirement of subsection 1203 (a), he shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until he is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

"FEDERAL ADVISORY COUNCILS

"Sec. 1206. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service is authorized to establish an advisory council or councils, composed of members of the professions and agencies concerned with the construction and operation of hospitals, and other persons informed on the need for, or provision of, such facilities, to advise the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service with respect to carrying out the purposes of this title.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"Sec. 1207. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service (with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury) and the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, respectively, shall make and publish such rules and regulations not inconsistent with this title as may be necessary to the efficient administration of the respective functions vested in them under this title.

"ADMINISTRATION

"Sec. 1208. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $1,000,000 for all necessary expenses of the Public Health Service in administering the provisions of this title, including the printing of forms and reports; in making such studies and demonstrations as will extend and improve the quality of hospital facilities and promote the efficient administration of this title; and for the pay, allowances, and travel expenses of commissioned officers (regular and reserve) and other personnel of the Public Health Service assigned to duty in carrying out the purposes of this title in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient for such purposes.

"(b) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for each fiscal year thereafter, a sum sufficient to carry out such functions as are vested pursuant to section 1203 (c), in the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, or, upon termination thereof, in any other agency designated by the President for that purpose.

"DEFINITION

"Sec. 1209. The term 'hospital,' when used in this title, includes health, diagnostic, and treatment centers, institutions, and related facilities.

"TITLE XIII—GRANTS TO STATES FOR MEDICAL CARE

"APPROPRIATION

"Sec. 1301. For the purpose of enabling each State, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, especially in rural areas and among individuals suffering from severe economic distress, to extend and improve medical care (including all services and supplies necessary for the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of illness and disability), and to develop more effective measures for carrying out the purposes of this title, including the training of personnel, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $35,000,000; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums authorized under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Social Security Board (hereinafter called the 'Board'), State plans for extending and improving medical care.

"ALLOTMENTS TO STATES

"Sec. 1302. If the Board shall find that the sum appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, pursuant to section 1301 would be insufficient to meet payments for that year in accordance with section 1304, it shall allot to the States prior to the beginning of that year, and at such time or times thereafter as may be necessary, the sum appropriated for that year pursuant to section 1301. The allotments to the States shall be determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Board. In determining the allotments under this section, the following factors for the respective States shall be taken into consideration: (1) The population; (2) the number of individuals in need of the services; (3) the special health problems; and (4) the financial resources.

"APPROVAL OF STATE PLANS

"Sec. 1303. (a) A State plan to effectuate the purposes of this title shall—

"(1) provide for financial participation by the State;

"(2) provide for a State-wide program or for extension of the program each year so that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State in need of the services not later than the beginning of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945;

"(3) provide for administration of the plan by the State health agency (or by another State agency) and for supervision by such agency of any part of the plan administered by another State agency or by a political subdivision of the State, and, where a State agency other than the State health agency is charged with administration of the plan, for cooperation and, when necessary, for working agreements between such agency and the State health agency;

"(4) provide such methods of administration as are found by the Board to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan, including: Methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis; and methods of establishing and maintaining standards of medical and institutional care and of remuneration for such care, such methods to be prescribed by the State agency administering the plan after consultation with such professional advisory committees as the State agency may establish;

"(5) provide for an advisory council or councils composed of members of the professions and agencies, public and private, that furnish services under the State plan, and other persons informed on the need for or provision of medical care;

"(6) provide that the State agency administering the plan will make such reports, in such form and containing such information as the Board may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Board may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(7) provide for cooperation and, when necessary, for working agreements between the State agency administering the plan and any public agency or agencies administering services related to the services furnished under the State plan, including public agencies concerned with welfare, assistance, vocational rehabilitation, social insurance, workmen's compensation, labor, industrial hygiene, education, health, or medical care; and

"(8) provide that the State agency administering the plan (or other State agency administering services under this plan) shall have authority to make and publish such rules and regulations as are necessary for the efficient operation of the services, having special regard for the quality and economy of service.

"(b) The Board shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a).

"PAYMENTS TO STATES

"Sec. 1304. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor under section 1301, and (with respect to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940) the allotments made in accordance with section 1302, payments shall be made to each State which has a plan approved under section 1303 for each year or part thereof covered by such plan beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, in amounts which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the purposes of section 1301. These payments shall be in such proportion to the total amount of public funds expended under the State plan during each year or part thereof covered by such plan as is determined in accordance with subsection 1101 (e) upon the basis of the financial resources of the State, not counting so much of such total expenditures by the State and its political subdivisions as are: (1) in excess of $20 annually per individual eligible for medical care under such plan; (2) expended for the care, in hospitals, institutions, and other organized facilities, of cases of mental disease, mental defectiveness, epilepsy, and tuberculosis; or (3) included in any other State plan submitted for grants to the State under any other title of this act or any other act of Congress. In no event shall the total sum paid to the State for any fiscal year or part thereof covered by its plan be in excess of the total sum expended or obligated for amounts planned for expenditure from Federal funds.

"(b) The Board shall from time to time, but not less often than semiannually, determine the amounts to be paid to each State necessary for carrying out its plan, upon the basis of estimates submitted by the State and, after taking into consideration overpayments or underpayments to the State in prior periods, shall certify the amounts so determined to the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon receipt of each such certification for payment the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Division of Disbursements of the Treasury Department, and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, shall pay to each State the amount so certified.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"Sec. 1305. Whenever the Board finds, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of a plan approved under this title, that in the administration of such plan there is failure to comply substantially with any requirement of subsection 1303 (a), it shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until it is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until it is so satisfied it shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

"FEDERAL ADVISORY COUNCILS

"Sec. 1306. The Board is authorized to establish an advisory council or councils, composed of members of the professions and agencies concerned with the furnishing of medical care, and other persons informed on the need for, or provision of, such care, to advise the Board with respect to carrying out the purposes of this title.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS"

"SEC. 1307. The Board shall make and publish such rules and regulations not inconsistent with this title as may be necessary to the efficient administration of this title.

"ADMINISTRATION"

"SEC. 1308. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $1,000,000 for all necessary expenses of the Board in administering the provisions of this title; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient for such purposes.

"TITLE XIV—GRANTS TO STATES FOR TEMPORARY DISABILITY COMPENSATION"

"APPROPRIATION"

"SEC. 1401. For the purpose of assisting the States in the development, maintenance, and administration of plans for temporary disability compensation, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $10,000,000; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums authorized under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Board, State plans for temporary disability compensation.

"STATE TEMPORARY DISABILITY COMPENSATION PLANS"

"SEC. 1402. (a) A State law to effectuate the purposes of this title shall—

"(1) provide for administration and payment of disability compensation through a single State agency, or through more than one State agency if the Board finds provisions therefor to be consistent with efficient administration of the State plan; and

"(2) provide such methods of administration as are found by the Board to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan, including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis; and

"(3) provide for opportunity for a fair hearing before an impartial tribunal for all individuals whose claims for disability compensation are denied; and

"(4) provide for the making of such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Board may from time to time require, and compliance with such provisions as the Board may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports; and

"(5) provide authorization for cooperation and working agreements between the State agency or agencies administering temporary disability compensation and the State agencies administering any law relating to unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, industrial hygiene, or the prevention of disease or the treatment, care, compensation, or vocational rehabilitation of sick or disabled persons; and

"(6) provide that all the rights, privileges, or immunities conferred by the State temporary disability compensation law or acts done pursuant thereto shall exist subject to the power of the legislature to amend or repeal such law at any time.

"(b) The Board shall approve any plan based upon a law which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that it shall not approve the plan of any State which does not have a plan or plans approved under this act under which the Board finds that reasonably adequate medical services, including preventive services, are available to minimize disability among those covered under the State plan for temporary disability compensation.

"(c) Whenever the Board, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency charged with the administration of the State law, finds that in the administration of the plan there is—

"(1) a denial in a substantial number of cases of disability compensation to individuals entitled thereto under such law; or

"(2) a failure to establish working agreements, necessary for the efficient administration of the plan, between the State agency or agencies administering the plan and the State agencies administering any law relating to unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, industrial hygiene, or the prevention of disease or the treatment, care, compensation, or vocational rehabilitation of sick or disabled persons; or

"(3) a failure to comply substantially with any provision specified in subsections (a) and (b), the Board shall notify such State agency that no further payments will be made to the State with respect to any future period beginning on a date fixed by the Board in its findings (which date shall in no case be less than 5 days nor more than 30 days after the date of such notification) and continuing until the Board is satisfied that there is no longer any denial or failure to comply. Until it is so satisfied it shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State, and it shall at no time make any certification with respect to such period.

"PAYMENTS TO STATES"

"SEC. 1403. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for temporary disability compensation, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as temporary disability compensation, equal to one-third of the total of the sums expended as temporary disability compensation under the State plan, during the period with respect to which the Board's certification is made pursuant to subsection

(b) of this section, and (2) an amount, which shall be used exclusively for paying the costs of administering the State plan, equal to one-third of such costs of administration as are found by the Board to be necessary for the proper and efficient administration of such plan during such period.

"(b) The method of computing and paying such amounts shall be as follows: The Board shall, from time to time, but not less often than semiannually, and prior to the period with respect to which certification is made, estimate the amounts to be paid to the State for such period under the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, such estimates to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimates of the sums to be expended in such period in accordance with the provisions of such subsection, and stating the amounts appropriated or made available by the State for such expenditures in such period, and if the total of such amounts is less than two-thirds of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, and (B) such other investigation as the Board may find necessary. The Board shall then certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amounts so estimated by the Board, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which it finds that any estimate for any prior period was greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to the State under clause 1 or 2 of subsection (a) for such period, and reduced further by the total of the sums, if any, paid to such State with respect to the period designated in subsection (c) of section 1402, except to the extent that such sums have been applied to make the amount certified for any prior period greater or less than the amount estimated by the Board for such prior period. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, through the Division of Disbursements of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State, at the time or times fixed by the Board, the amounts so certified.

"ADMINISTRATION"

"SEC. 1404. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $250,000 for all necessary expenses of the Social Security Board in administering the provisions of this title, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient for such purposes.

"DEFINITIONS"

"SEC. 1405. When used in this title—

"(a) The term 'temporary disability compensation' means cash benefits payable to individuals for not more than 52 weeks and with respect to their disability not arising out of or in the course of employment.

"(b) The term 'disability' means inability to work or unfitness for work by reason of injury or illness.

"(c) The term 'employment' means any services, of whatever nature, performed by an employee for his employer, except agricultural labor, domestic service in a private home, and casual labor not in the course of the employer's trade or business. The term 'employee' includes all city and traveling salesmen. The term 'employer' includes any person for whom any individual performs services as a city or traveling salesman."

Sec. 5. (a) Section 1101 (a), subdivisions (1) and (2) of the Social Security Act are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1101. (a) When used in this act—

"(1) The term 'State' (except when used in titles V, VI, XII, XIII, and XIV) includes Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia. When used in titles V, VI, XII, XIII, and XIV (except when used in sec. 531), it includes Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia. When used in section 531 it includes Hawaii.

"(2) The term 'United States,' when used in a geographical sense (except when used in titles V, VI, XII, XIII, and XIV), means the several States, Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia. When used in titles V, VI, XII, XIII, and XIV it means the several States, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia."

(b) Section 1101 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding a new subsection (e), as follows:

"(e) The 'financial resources' of the several States shall be measured by per capita income accruing to the inhabitants thereof, as determined jointly by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Labor, and the Chairman of the Social Security Board, between January 1 and July 1 of each year on the basis of data for the most recent 3-year period for which satisfactory data are available, and shall be expressed in series of matching proportions which shall fix, in a manner appropriate for effectuating the purposes of this act, the proportion by which funds available as grants-in-aid to each State under titles V (pts. 1 and 2), VI, XII, and XIII of this act shall be related to the total amount of public funds expended under the State plan in respect to the provisions of these titles; for titles V (pts. 1 and 2), VI, and XII, the highest proportion (being applicable to the State with the lowest financial resources) to be 66½ percent and the lowest proportion (being applicable to the State with the highest financial resources) 33½ percent, with intermediate ratios; and, for title XIII, the highest proportion to be 50 percent and the lowest proportion 16½ percent, with intermediate ratios."

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. WAGNER is as follows:

STATEMENT UPON INTRODUCTION OF NATIONAL HEALTH BILL

The national health bill which I have just introduced in the Senate is the culmination of 5 years of intensive Federal study and investigation concerning the health problems of the Nation.

HISTORY OF FEDERAL ACTION

Studies looking toward a national health program were first made by the Committee on Economic Security appointed by President Roosevelt in June 1934. As an essential beginning the committee recommended, and Congress adopted, in titles V and VI of the Social Security Act, a Nation-wide preventive health program, including general public-health work, child and maternity care, and personnel training and investigations. In August 1935, promptly after the passage of the act, the President appointed by Executive order an Interdepartmental Committee to Coordinate Health and Welfare Activities, composed of representatives of the departments of the Federal Government concerned with health and welfare problems. In addition to its work in coordinating and adjusting the health functions of the Government under existing law, the committee, beginning in 1937, had available to it the accumulating results of health studies by the Social Security Board and the Children's Bureau, as well as the data compiled in the comprehensive National Health Survey conducted by the Public Health Service.

The results of these studies, together with a suggested program of action, were embodied in the report of the Technical Committee on Medical Care, a subcommittee of the Interdepartmental Committee, and submitted to the National Health Conference called by the President in July of 1938. At this conference, participated in by individuals and organizations representing a cross section of American opinion, lay and professional, overwhelming sentiment was disclosed for the broad-gaged plan laid down by the Technical Committee. In January of this year, the President transmitted a special message to the Congress, submitting for its study and consideration a national-health program recommended by the Interdepartmental Committee, based on the results of the conference and subsequent conferences and deliberations.

PROVISIONS OF THE BILL

The national health bill puts in the form of concrete legislation the recommendations for action which have developed out of this 5-year period of careful and expert inquiry. The bill utilizes the sound procedure of grants-in-aid developed in various titles of the Social Security Act, which gives the greatest latitude to the States in the development of their own plans consistent with the needs of their own people. Grants are made available for the purpose of establishing, expanding, and improving State programs for (1) child and maternal health; (2) general public-health services and investigations; (3) construction of needed hospitals and health centers; (4) general programs of medical care; and (5) insurance against loss of wages during periods of temporary disability. Federal administration is vested in existing agencies—the Children's Bureau, the Public Health Service, and the Social Security Board.

The fullest development of this program would bring the benefits of modern medical science, both preventive and curative, within the reach of all groups of the population, especially in rural areas and areas suffering from economic distress.

Under no circumstances will the Federal Government undertake to furnish medical care. Administration in all cases will be through the States, which will develop their plans only after careful surveys of local needs and conditions, and with a view to supplementing, not displacing, the existing efforts of the professions, the hospitals, the localities, and charitable organizations.

It should be clearly understood that the bill does not establish a system of health insurance or require the States to do so. Specifically, under title XIII of the bill, dealing with general programs of medical care, the States will be free to develop plans of their own choosing, subject to necessary basic standards. Such plans may be limited to those on relief or include others more fortunately situated in the economic scale. The plans may be supported by insurance contributions, by general revenue, or both. The method and scope of medical services are likewise for the States to determine, and may include services rendered through existing private agencies or institutions. Here, as under other titles of the bill, State plans would be projected only after careful surveys of State needs by the duly constituted State agency.

PROFESSIONAL GUIDANCE AND STANDARDS

The bill does not interfere with the States in the licensing of medical or other practitioners. It seeks to maintain and improve the high professional standards of medical and institutional care already achieved in the United States. All State plans under the respective titles must provide methods of administration to this end. At every stage of State and Federal administration, including the formulation as well as the effectuation of State plans, provision is made for consultation with professional advisory councils, composed of members of the professions and agencies, public and private, that furnish the particular services and other persons informed on the need for or provision of such services. In addition, Federal grants are available in the respective titles of the bill for the proper training of administrative and technical personnel, and the States are required to establish and maintain personnel standards on a merit basis. Finally, to develop effective coordination of all phases of the program, State plans must provide for necessary working agreements between the State administrative agency and other agencies administering related services, including such functions as social insurance, public assistance, workmen's compensation, vocational rehabilitation, industrial hygiene, and education.

By these and other methods carefully elaborated in the bill the legislation would insure the highest administrative and technical efficiency ever projected in a program of this kind.

APPROPRIATIONS

The new appropriations authorized in the first year for all phases of the program, including administrative costs, aggregate approximately $80,000,000, exclusive of amounts which may be appropriated in the discretion of Congress for aiding the States in the construction of needed tuberculosis and mental hospitals. This sum will be gradually increased over a 10-year period and will be available to match sums appropriated by the States toward the cost of their respective programs. No new Federal pay-roll taxes are authorized.

In order to make the available funds serve the interest of those localities and States which are in greatest need of the services, the bill authorizes grants on a variable matching basis, depending on the relative financial resources of the several States, as determined by the per capita income of their inhabitants. For the various programs of public-health services and hospital construction the authorized Federal grants will vary from 33½ percent to 66½ percent of the total sums expended by the States; for general programs of medical care the matching ratio varies from 16½ percent to 50 percent of total State expenditures. In this way the bill will raise the general level of health protection throughout the country, while reducing the existing wide variations among the States, and especially as between rural and urban areas.

DISABILITY INSURANCE

In addition to various preventive and curative health services, the bill authorizes grants-in-aid to States in establishing insurance plans, providing cash benefits during periods of temporary disability. These insurance systems would protect the American wage earner against an annual wage loss through disabling illness amounting to over $1,000,000,000 a year. Systematic insurance payments will maintain the worker's income at precisely the times when he needs that income most.

Federal grants for this purpose are authorized on a fixed matching ratio—33½ percent of the total expenditures by the States under approved disability insurance plans. The bill provides, however, that such grants shall not be made unless the State has in operation approved plans affording reasonably adequate medical services to minimize disability among those covered by the cash benefit disability plan.

CONCLUSION

No social legislation projected in our time is more closely related to the general welfare than a national program of health protection. No legislation makes as wide an appeal to the public conscience and to the dictates of sound economy. No legislation was launched with more widespread approval among persons in every walk of life. We must take action now to conquer this last remaining frontier of social security in America.

EDUCATIONAL LEAVES OF ABSENCE IN DISTRICT SCHOOLS

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill, which I request be appropriately referred, and, together with a short explanatory statement be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill of the Senator from Georgia will be received and appropriately referred, and the bill and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1621) to provide educational employees of the public schools of the District of Columbia with leave of absence, with part pay, for purposes of educational improvement, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to provide educational employees of the public schools of the District of Columbia with leave of absence, with part pay, for purposes of educational improvement, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Board of Education, on recommendation of the Superintendent of Schools, may grant leave of absence with part pay to any employee of said Board of Education whose salary is fixed in the Salary Act approved June 4, 1924, who has served in the public schools of the District of Columbia not less than 6 years continuously prior to filing application for leave, for purposes of educational improvement for a period not exceeding 1 year at a time, under conditions not herein otherwise specified as the Board of Education may determine, and the place of said person to be filled by the appointment of a qualified temporary teacher for the period of said leave: Provided, That not more than 2 percent of the total number of the above-mentioned employees may be on leave with part pay at the same time.

SEC. 2. Any employee to whom such leave of absence may be granted shall report in writing to the Superintendent, in such form as the Board of Education may determine, the manner in which said leave of absence is being employed, and for failure to comply with any requirement of the rules of the Board of Education or to pursue in a satisfactory manner the purpose for which said leave of absence was granted, the Board of Education, on recommendation of the Superintendent, may terminate such leave of absence at any time.

SEC. 3. Any teacher whose salary is fixed in article I of the act approved June 4, 1924, who is granted leave of absence for educational purposes under the provisions of this act, shall receive compensation during the period of said leave, paid in the same manner as though on active duty, equal to the difference between the salary which the teacher would have received during the year he is on said leave of absence and the basic annual salary of group A or group C of his salary class, less the amount of his contribution to the retirement fund, in accordance with the provisions of the Retirement Act, as amended and approved June 11, 1926.

Sec. 4. Any administrative or supervisory officer mentioned in section 1 of this act whose salary is fixed in article II of the act approved June 4, 1924, who is granted leave of absence for educational purposes under the provisions of this act, shall receive compensation during the period of said leave, paid in the manner as though on active duty, equal to the largest amount to which any teacher in the group B or group D salary class under his supervision would be entitled if given such education leave, less the amount of his contribution to the retirement fund in accordance with the provisions of the Retirement Act, as amended and approved June 11, 1926: Provided, That during the period of the leave of said officer the board of education on the recommendation of the Superintendent of Schools may authorize the temporary assignment to his position of any teacher or officer who serves under said officer on leave: And provided further, That the position of the teacher or officer so assigned may be filled during the period of such absence by a temporary qualified teacher.

Sec. 5. The teacher or officer who takes leave of absence with part pay for educational purposes under the provisions of this act shall be construed as in active service, and periods of service for salary increment purposes and for retirement purposes, and the pay which the teacher or officer would have received had leave not been taken shall be used in computing retirement annuities.

Sec. 6. Wherever the masculine pronoun occurs in this act it shall be construed to mean both male and female employees.

Sec. 7. This act shall take effect on and after July 1, 1938.

The statement presented by Mr. GEORGE is as follows:

TEACHERS' SABBATICAL LEAVE BILL

Senator WALTER F. GEORGE, of Georgia, today introduced a bill asking that the teachers of the District of Columbia be given leave of absence with part pay, for professional growth, and submitted the following statement:

"The purpose of this bill is to encourage and assist teachers and officers to take time off periodically, for professional growth. It is my belief that the form of such professional growth cannot be formally fixed. Some will wish to attend universities at home or abroad; others will wish to travel; others will wish to grow richer by living in a community entirely different from their usual ones. College courses afford one form of growth and development, but by no means the only form. Travel; time to go to concerts, to art galleries, to read; opportunity to get the viewpoint of persons in no way connected with formal education are ways in which a teacher may grow professionally. More and more our teachers must know the world in which and of which they teach. They must be given time and opportunity to learn of this.

"While I am aware that many cities in the United States are giving sabbatical leave of absence with relatively large salary payments, I feel, that at this time it is perhaps wiser to initiate the program in Washington on a plan which will cost the District of Columbia nothing.

"The bill in the form in which I have introduced it recognizes a vital principle of educational betterment, but at the same time it would cost the community nothing.

"This bill provides that the teacher on leave shall receive his longevity, that is, all his salary above the basic salary, and that the absent teacher's place shall be filled by a temporary teacher who shall receive the basic salary of the teacher on leave.

"This bill, furthermore, safeguards the tenure of the absent teacher, and definitely provides for his return to his former position at the end of his leave of absence.

"I am introducing the bill at the request of the Washington Teachers' Union, to carry out principles of professional growth which are well recognized to be to the best interests of the community."

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT—OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, on January 23 I introduced Senate bill 895, to amend the Social Security Act to standardize the amount to be contributed by the United States for old-age assistance. This bill was referred to the Committee on Finance. In view of the fact that the Special Committee to Investigate Unemployment and Relief is now considering legislation dealing with this subject, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 895 and that the bill be referred to the Special Committee to Investigate Unemployment and Relief.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE—AMENDMENT

Mr. RUSSELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SARAH E. THOMPSON—WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS

On motion by Mr. BONE, it was Ordered, That the papers filed with the bill (S. 3037) for the relief of Sarah E. Thompson, Seventy-fifth Congress, second session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BYRNES

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject of the unemployment problem, delivered by Senator BYRNES on February 27, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

PEACE AND PLENTY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR DAVIS

[Mr. LODGE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject of the unemployment problem, delivered by Senator DAVIS on the subject Peace and Plenty, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE A. A. A. PROGRAM—STATEMENT BY HANS LEUTZ

[Mr. FRAZIER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement by Hans Leutz, of Hebron, N. Dak., entitled "The A. A. A. Program; How Much and Still How Little It Has Done for America," which appears in the Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 494. A bill to name the bridge to be erected over the Anacostia River in the District of Columbia after the late "March King," John Philip Sousa, composer of the Stars and Stripes Forever; and

S. 1294. A bill to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to regulate the hours during which streets, alleys, etc., shall be lighted.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 316) to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to reappoint David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner as members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday evening the question pending before the Senate was the first committee amendment, the Senate already having agreed to consider committee amendments first. The Chair thinks it advisable for the RECORD that the clerk state the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The pending amendment is on page 1, line 8, after the word "exceed", to strike out "5,500" and insert "6,000", so as to read:

Sec. 8. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to equip and maintain the Air Corps with not to exceed 6,000 serviceable airplanes, and such number of airships and free and captive balloons as he may determine to be necessary for training purposes, together with spare parts, equipment, supplies, hangars, and installation necessary for the operation and maintenance thereof. In order to maintain the number specified above, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to replace obsolete or unserviceable aircraft from time to time.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, it is with very considerable diffidence that I rise today to make a few remarks upon the legislation which is now pending and being considered by the Senate of the United States.

I had expected to let this session of the Senate slip quietly by without inflicting my voice or my ideas upon its membership. I was prepared to vote in the routine course for the regular military and naval supply bills, aggregating, I believe, $1,300,000,000. But when this $530,000,000 proposal was made, more or less suddenly, I think more or less hysterically, I felt somewhat justified in making a few observations upon it.

Mr. President, I am opposed to the pending bill. During my 4 years' service in the House of Representatives I voted for every military and naval defense measure that was proposed before that body, and as I have said, I am prepared now to go along with any reasoned, calculated defense measure based first upon a determination of what our future foreign policy shall be.

I do not see how I or anyone else can intelligently pass upon the merits of an emergency measure of this kind without first knowing what these airplanes and other military and naval equipment are to be used for; and that brings directly into question the whole problem of the foreign policy of the United States. I have some very definite views as to that policy; and until those ideas are either rejected or approved by the Congress, the President, and the people of the United States, I cannot consistently support so extensive a measure—and hence I shall vote no.

Mr. President, it has not been long—a few months only—since we had our ears glued to our radios as Europe trembled on the brink of war; and we can all remember the sighs of relief which arose when apparently a peace was achieved. I say "apparently" deliberately, because, in my judgment, that peace is at the most but a temporary truce. The "peace of Munich" can last no longer than did the peace of Versailles; and, in my humble opinion, it is only a matter of months, or at the most a year, when Europe will be plunged into the bloodiest conflict that the world has ever known. During that period every known form of propaganda, every device of diplomacy and trickery that the cunning mind of man can formulate, will be used in the United States to get us into the conflict when it comes; and it is up to us, the Congress of the United States, to do what we can during the few months that remain, to stem that propaganda, and to vitiate it as much as possible.

Mr. President, it has been only twenty-odd years since the World War ended. After 4 years of carnage and slaughter, after 4 years of the roar of cannon and the rattle of the machine gun, after 4 years of a civilization gone mad, the World War ended; and then a weary and haggard human race began to take stock of its losses and of its gains. What did Europe find? She found herself bankrupt and bleeding, with 30,000,000 of her young lives snuffed out. What did the American soldiers returning from Europe find? They left behind them 50,000 of their comrades buried in the blood-drenched soil of France; and they brought with them hundreds of thousands of other comrades crippled and maimed, doomed thenceforth to live only half a life; doomed, if you please, to a living death. When these returning soldiers came to America they found here tens of thousands of young mothers who would never again look into the eyes of the boys they had married, and they found tens of thousands of little children who would never know a father.

How awful, how utterly terrible, was this price. Yet, deluded and gullible fools that we were, we thought at that time that it was worth the cost, because we were told that we had fought "a war to end wars"; "a war," if you please, "to save the world for democracy."

What a travesty, what a hollow mockery are those phrases today—"a war to end wars"; "a war to make the world safe for democracy." Europe is again half at war, and the other half may not be long delayed. Asia is becoming a shambles as the Japanese juggernaut pushes on into a defenseless China; and democracy, far from being safe, is scarcely more today than an empty term.

War is a racket—a cruel, hard, cunning, ruthless racket—devised by racketeers; sometimes, Mr. President, by politicians masquerading as statesmen; sometimes by industrialists and international bankers who would coin their dollars out of human blood; and it has taken these racketeers just 20 years to drum up another war.

But it may be said, "War cannot come to America, because Americans do not want it." I ask whether in November 1916, when they went to the ballot boxes and cast their votes for a President and a Congress on the slogan, "They kept us out of war," Americans wanted war? Yet scarcely had the torches of election night burned out than the war racketeers became busy; and within 5 short months the same President and the same Congress, elected on the platform "They kept us out of war," plunged us into war.

So do not tell me it cannot happen today, when it happened with such devastating rapidity then; and with the new instruments of propaganda that were unknown then, it can happen overnight. I refer to the radio. Only a few months ago a young radio broadcaster had tens of thousands of his audience in hysterics, believing that an army from Mars was invading the United States. With these new instruments of propaganda war can happen in the twinkling of an eye.

War can come to America. A little propaganda, a few songs about the glories of war, a little martial music, and once more the war drums will begin to beat their savage tattoo; once more a brutal hysteria will well up in the hearts of men; and soon a group of peaceful, home-loving American citizens will be transformed into a horde of brutal killers.

What can we do, first with regard to foreign policy, second with regard to defense policy, to prevent that thing happening again? The propaganda vehicles are already in operation, subtly and slowly, and it will not be long until they gather such speed and momentum that they will be hard to overcome.

I have three suggestions, none of them entirely new, which I wish to propose to the Senate, the adoption of which I think will go far in preventing this propaganda influencing America and in saving our country from an imminent war. When I have the answer to those three suggestions, then, and only then, will I be prepared to vote for an emergency defense measure pulled out of thin air and thrust upon us overnight.

First, let me suggest in a very trite phrase, but a very expressive one, that we mind our own business. That phrase has been used frequently in this Chamber and there is very little I can add by way of its elucidation. It means, I think, more than the avoidance of entangling alliances. Such alliances presuppose and imply deliberation, treaties, negotiations. The phrase "mind our own business" implies all that and more; it implies, as the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] has so frequently said, that we keep our nose out of other people's business; that we do not undertake to take sides in the internal affairs of any other nation in the world or distinguish between the various factions or governments or forces within a nation.

Many years ago some very sincere, fine, and idealistic people sought to involve this country in the League of Nations. Personally I do not care to enter upon any controversy or discussion of that question today; but I am firmly convinced that had the United States become a member of the League of Nations at that time we would have been in war today. I am firmly convinced that the League of Nations was nothing but a device by Europe so to enmesh Uncle Sam in its false diplomacy and trickery that when war came we, too, would be enmeshed in it.

I cannot let this opportunity pass without taking time to pay a brief tribute to a great living statesman, whose brilliant ability and whose matchless oratory on the floor of this Chamber many years ago were largely instrumental in preventing our country becoming a member of the League of Nations and probably finding itself in war today. That man is my distinguished colleague the senior Senator from Idaho, WILLIAM E. BORAH. I am glad that we did not become embroiled then. I sincerely hope that we will not now.

Mr. President, today foreign chestnuts are in the fire again precisely as they were in 1917. Europe will make the United States its cat's-paw to pull them out if she can. Americans should let them burn. They are mostly wormy, anyway.

I think I may say, although they are harsh words, that there is no international honor left among the nations of Europe today. We have heard much about the honor of the so-called democracies, France and England, but I have failed to find that honor where their debts to us have been concerned, and I failed to find it only last year, when England recognized Italy's bloody conquest of Ethiopia after just before that having denounced it an international outrage. So far as the honor of the totalitarian states is concerned, I think they know not the meaning of the word "honor." So we could not depend upon them any more than little Czechoslovakia could depend upon them not many months ago, when she saw her country dismembered in the face of a written, solemn, supposed-to-be binding treaty signed by the democracies at the request of the democracies.

I think, therefore, that when we mind our own business, as point No. 1, we will go far toward avoiding another bloody world catastrophe.

Mr. President, my second suggestion and observation is that the President of the United States should proclaim it once and for all as our fixed, firm, determined foreign policy that never again will the life of one American boy be risked to protect an American dollar abroad. For some mysterious and unknown reason, which I will discuss briefly in a few moments, there has grown up in this country, like Topsy, a foreign policy which has inculcated into the American mind the idea that the American Army and Navy and the resources of our country are to be used all over the world to protect foreign investments.

Mr. President, I have the highest regard and respect for Secretary of State Hull. I think he is one of the truly great Secretaries of State the United States has had, and I believe that, by and large, he has handled the incidents with which he has been confronted during the past few years with matchless tact, honor, and integrity, and I do not mean the slightest criticism of him or his policies in anything I now say. But I was distinctly alarmed last summer when I read that Secretary Hull had sent a sharply worded note to Mexico demanding, if you please, on behalf of the people of the United States and its Government, that the Government of Mexico compensate the Standard Oil Co. for several hundred million dollars' worth of property which Mexico had expropriated.

I think neither myself nor any other Member of the Senate will defend any law which allows expropriation of private property. Thank God, we still live under a Constitution and a Bill of Rights which prevent and make abhorrent to us any such doctrine here. But Mexico's laws do permit it, and when the Standard Oil Co. took several hundred million of its American dollars into Mexico, it did so for just one purpose, and that was to make a profit. Having taken their American dollars—dollars which they made in the United States—from under the protection of our Army and our flag, and having removed them to the protection of another army and another flag and another form of government, I say when they did that to make a profit and something went wrong, the Standard Oil Co. should have taken the risk, and it should not have been placed on the shoulders of American boys, who would have to fight a war if one should come.

Mr. President, we almost had war with Japan about a year ago, when we awoke one morning and found the headlines of our papers screaming at us, "Japanese airplanes sink American gunboat Panay." Our blood boiled, and rightly so, that foreign aviators should kill our men and sink our ships. It would not have taken much to have brought on a war; a little propaganda, a little radio agitation, and it would not have been long until once again the ships would have been sailing, sailing, sailing, and the troops marching, marching, marching, and another million stripling American lads would have been sent across the sea to die on foreign soil. But through matchless handling by the Secretary of State the incident was closed. When, however, the official investigation of the Navy Department was concluded and the findings of the court of inquiry were made public, it was disclosed that the Panay, an American gunboat, at the time it was sunk was conveying and protecting on the Yangtze River, in a war zone, three Standard Oil tankers loaded with oil for China.

No one justifies the brutal bombing of that ship, of course. Perhaps it may be explained on any technicality one desires to employ regarding treaty rights, but it is impossible to convince the farmers in the Middle West and the West, who are barely making a living on their farms and paying their taxes; it is impossible to convince the workingman, who is barely hanging on to his job, and the unemployed, who cannot get a job; it is impossible to convince the little-business man, who is paying the taxes, that it is right and proper for their Navy to be five or six thousand miles away from home, in a war zone, protecting ships loaded with material which at least can be used for war, ships owned by a gigantic American corporation risking war by the sinking of that gunboat.

Mr. President, I say that once and for all we must put big business on notice that, while we want them to make profits, and if they desire to make profits abroad, never again will our Navy or our Army or our boys be used to safeguard their profits for them.

We cannot blame President Roosevelt, we cannot blame Secretary Hull for the condition to which I refer. The idea of thus protecting investments abroad has been infiltrated into our whole foreign policy through Republican and Democratic administrations alike for many years.

Over a period of 100 years big business has so directed, guided, and controlled the foreign policy of the United States that even in the textbooks of our schools, by all forms of subsidized press agency, by every other form of propaganda known, in Republican and Democratic administrations alike, they have established the theory that the American Army and the American Navy should be sent abroad to protect the profits that big business hopes to make abroad.

I respectfully suggest that the time has come to change that foreign policy, and to put the shippers of munitions, the shippers of oil, the shippers of all such commodities, on notice that whenever again they take their money abroad they do so at their own risk. Then I think we shall have gone a long way toward eliminating incidents such as that of the Panay, which might well plunge us into a conflict at once. So much for the second suggestion.

Mr. President, the third suggestion may seem a little peculiar. Behind the President pro tempore rests our national emblem, our flag. That flag means more to the emotional make-up of American citizens than the flag of any other country on earth means to its citizens. England has built her emotional tradition around her King. The other nations of the world have built theirs around various factors. But we are the only nation who have built our tradition and our emotions around that banner. No other nation in the world has its national anthem in honor of its flag. In that flag is woven all the blood that has ever been spilled by American patriots since the days of the Revolution. In that flag are woven all the heartaches and sacrifices the pioneers experienced to make this country free and to give us what we now possess.

That flag belongs to no individual. It belongs to and is a part of the fiber of the American people. Insult that flag and you make the blood of every American boil. You plunge us into war.

If I were to put on the uniform of a soldier and go into the streets of Washington, I should likely be arrested. I am not a soldier, and the law prohibits the wearing of a soldier's uniform by those who do not belong to the Army. The uniform is recognized as belonging to the Government; but not so our flag.

Some time ago at a theater I saw a newsreel. In that newsreel was shown a private merchant ship leaving the glorious Golden Gate, in California, loaded with bombs for Japan; bombs with which to kill people; bombs to be dropped on the heads of helpless babies, women, and children. They were sent to Japan by some big munitions maker of the East in order that he might reap an enormous profit. On the hull of that ship was painted a huge American flag; on the deck of that ship in a dozen places was painted your flag and my flag; and strung from the mastheads were numberless American flags. Picture that. A private merchant vessel, loaded with instruments of destruction, being sent to a warring nation 6,000 miles away, the ship being literally covered with America's sacred emblem so as to afford protection, but thereby incurring the risk of an incident which might be considered as an insult to that emblem and hence risking war.

Do Senators all remember the incidents which led up to America's entry into the World War? If so, they will recall that munition ships engaged in their nefarious traffic and plied their courses back and forth loaded with all sorts of war material. Then, when a German submarine, in self-defense, sank one of those ships, what did the propagandists in this country do? I remember a yellow poster which was put out at the time. The propagandists did not picture a munitions ship bearing death, sunk in self-defense. No; the picture portrayed the munitions ship beneath the waves, and all of it that was showing was that little flag, your flag and my flag, flying on the stern of the vessel. Then the poster showed a leering submarine commander making insulting motions at our flag. Of course, our blood boiled, and, of course, we went to war. With one incident after another similar to that, naturally we went to war, and it was because of the emotional background which the American people had built up for that great emblem of ours. I think that when that flag is carried all over the world in order to protect private merchant ships, there is danger of inciting war in every place it goes.

I propose to introduce a bill—I think the American people will be behind it, and I hope it will have the consideration of the Congress—prohibiting the use of our flag, that sacred emblem, on any merchant ship leaving the waters of the United States.

Mr. President and Senators, do you realize that France and this country are the only two nations of any consequence on earth which allow their sacred emblem to be used on their merchant ships?

Do you realize that England, many years ago, prohibited the use of the Union Jack upon any of its merchant shipping? Yet England had more at stake in the protection of its merchant marine than ever the United States has had. The British have a merchant ensign; Germany has a merchant ensign; Italy has a merchant ensign, as have Mexico and Japan; but none of those countries will permit the use of their national ensign by private merchant shipping, and they prohibit it for the very reason that we ought to prohibit it, so as to make almost impossible the desecration of the flag when it is where it should not be—a desecration which might bring about a war. I think that if the United States could create a merchant ensign and prohibit the use of Old Glory, with all its traditions and implications, on its merchant ships, it would go a long way toward the prevention of war.

Therefore, Mr. President, I have suggested three policies.

First, that we mind our own business. That should be easy.

Second, that we announce it as the firm, fixed, foreign policy, once and for all, that never again will an American life be endangered to protect an American dollar abroad.

Third, the prohibition of the use of our national emblem on our merchant ships whenever they leave our waters.

If those three policies were adopted, I think we would be in a position to determine whether the present emergency defense bill is based on pure caprice or is a reasoned military measure.

Returning, then, Mr. President, to the bill before us, I merely wish to reiterate that I shall oppose it. If the airplanes to be provided by the pending bill are to be used under a foreign policy which may make us declare war on Mexico if she will not pay the Standard Oil Co. what she owes it, then we will need them. If they are to be used to go to Japan to protect merchant ships which are carrying oil and contraband of war, then, Mr. President, we will need 10 times the number proposed to be acquired.

But if we are to mind our own business, if we are to refuse to protect the American dollar once it leaves American shores, and if we can take steps to prevent our flag's being taken all over the world and incurring the risk of getting us into trouble, then we may not need any of these airplanes. If the President will promulgate a foreign policy somewhat along the lines I have suggested, and then, if in the light of such a policy, the Army and the Navy experts will come in and testify that we need 20,000 airplanes, I shall be the first to vote for them.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I concur in the three points made by the eloquent Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], but I see no connection whatever between them and the bill before us. I would go farther than the Senator in carrying out a policy to prevent war. I feel that the Senator's objections to the bill have not been expressed; that the Senator has offered no objection to the passage of the bill. I see no reason why the Senator should not believe in the three points he outlined and yet support the bill.

Did Ethiopia violate any of the three points the Senator has advocated? Was it China's trade policy that caused the invasion of China? Was it desecration of the flag of Czechoslovakia that brought about the dismemberment of that little nation? Did any of these three countries which I have cited as examples violate any one of the three points the Senator has just advocated? I think not.

Has America violated any of the points suggested by the Senator? I think not, in spirit at least. If there have been violations of those points under this administration, they have been the exception rather than the rule.

I ask the Senator for one example of any violation of the three points he has mentioned which has led this country into war. I would go further than the Senator has expressed himself as going in removing every possible human incentive to war. General Pershing attested the record that not one American-made airplane ever reached the front. Our program called for 25,000 American-made planes. Twenty thousand were to be at the front by January 1918, yet General Pershing attested the record that not one American-made plane ever reached the front.

What was the result? We had to beg, borrow, and buy from the Allies such planes as we could obtain. The result was that we received the out-of-date, less efficient planes. The casualties among the American flyers were three times greater than the casualties among the other flyers because of those flaming coffins, as Colonel Mitchell called them. They were out of date. Our planes were not available because our factories were not able to supply them on short notice. It was not because our boys were not good flyers. When one of our boys took off, death rode in the cockpit. The casualties were three times greater because of the flaming coffins they had to fly.

The bill before us today is a proposal, not to match plane for plane with any of the other nations, but simply to bring us up, as George Washington said in his Farewell Address, to the point of maintaining "a respectful posture of defense."

I go with the able Senator in his eloquent opposition to war. I will match my efforts for peace in my lifetime with those of any Member of this body. I agree with the Senator that when a man invests his money in a foreign country with the idea of profit he is engaged in a commercial venture, and the flag should not follow it.

This administration has a clear-cut record in that regard. When Mr. Roosevelt came into office there were troops in Haiti. He called them home. They were the last American troops stationed anywhere abroad except those stationed in three places in China, as a result of the agreement following the Boxer uprising, to protect American officials there.

Then war broke out in Cuba, red revolution. The sugar industry, which for years has made millions out of the sugar business in Cuba, began a clamor for military protection for its investments in Cuba. The air was full of it—"Send the marines to Cuba!" "Go down to the revolution in Cuba!" "Send a battleship to Cuba!" But this administration, following the straight course it had laid out of nonintervention in foreign countries, announced by its action that there would be no intervention in Cuba. There was no intervention in Cuba. Cuba settled her own affairs without our staining our hands with the blood of our fellow men.

Then came the Ethiopian trouble. The same Standard Oil Co. which the Senator feels was the cause of some of our other troubles at previous times had a contract with Ethiopia for trade concessions. This administration felt that that contract might be the cause of sucking this administration into that controversy. The Standard Oil Co. was asked to cancel the contract. The Standard Oil Co., feeling that great profits were at stake, was reluctant to cancel the contract. President Roosevelt, through the State Department, said, "You cancel the contract," and the contract was canceled. President Roosevelt then announced that from March 1933 dollar diplomacy was no longer the policy of the American Government.

I cite these examples to the Senator to show that this administration is not violating any of the three points outlined by the Senator. I would go further than the Senator expressed in removing profits from war—not further, I am persuaded, than he would go, but further than he expressed himself in the time he occupied.

I would follow the recommendation of the Senate Munitions Committee as a result of the able work it did in flinging open the closet door of the Bluebeard of war and exposing the unconscionable profits of war. Supported by this body, that exposition was made possible by this administration, which is committed to a policy of peace. The committee exhausted its funds in the work it was doing for peace. Although I was a Member of the House at the time, I came on the floor of the Senate and heard the able chairman of the committee, the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye], when he came before this body and asked for more funds to continue exposing the profits of war. I heard the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark] also ask for more funds to continue the hearings; and this body did not grant that request. However, President Roosevelt made funds available from other departments of government in order that a full and complete investigation of the profits of war might be the result of the committee's work. That action was taken by an administration which is determined to make war so ugly that the world will never again embrace it.

Many things that we did not like happened in the World War. What is our policy? It has been stated time and again. The record is clear on it. I remember something about the World War and the things that led us into it. So far as the ideals are concerned, I still think they are great ideals. I remember when the voices came from across the waters.

Come on, America!—

The allied voices called—

For by your aid no longer stayed
The world may stand or fall.

Then we answered:

The Yanks are coming;
The Yanks are coming;
The drums are drumming everywhere.
Send a word; send a prayer;
The Yanks are coming.

Then we heard the clatter of hobnails on the cobblestones of Paris. They did not stop there. They went on out to Chateau-Thierry, to St. Mihiel, to Cantigny, to Belleau Wood. The little nation of France, which has stopped the Hun at the Marne every time, according to the pages of history, had the enemy at bay. The enemy had on, not his campaign helmet, but his dress helmet. The enemy was marching to Christmas dinner in Paris, he said. But the French, who were good allies, stopped him at the Marne. The taxicab drivers, the old men and women, stopped him. There arose a slogan that day, "Ils ne passeront pas"—"They shall not pass." It was written on the face of the dead, "Ils ne passeront pas." It rattled in the throats of the dying, "Ils ne passeront pas."

They did not pass. The Americans came; and then every cannon from Ostend to Epinal opened its red and angry mouth in the greatest cannonade the world has ever known, a cannonade that shook every monarch in Europe off his throne.

Following that cannonade there arose a long thin line of olive drab, and there arose the Yankee yell that sent terror to the heart of every German soldier. With heads down and bayonets fixed, they charged across no man's land. They did not stop there. They crossed the first-line trench. They did not stop there. They crossed the second-line trench. They did not stop there. They crossed the third-line trench, and they hung that old banner of the stars on the highest castle on the Rhine.

Then came the meeting in the Hall of Mirrors. The five great powers of the earth were represented around the council table. The small nations were not allowed admittance. They waited on the doorstep like beggar children, asking for crumbs that might fall from the council table.

The representative of Japan asked for Shantung. He asked for concessions in the Far East. He had no program for preserving the peace and autonomy of the little democracies of the world. He sat down; and then Clemenceau, the Tiger of France, rose. He had no program for protecting the boundary lines of the little nations. He sat down after asking for Alsace-Lorraine and a guaranty of border protection and concessions. Then Orlando, the representative of Italy, asked for concessions in the Balkan States, and indemnities.

Then rose Lloyd George. He likewise forgot the small nations, the beggar nations that waited at the door asking for the crumbs that might fall from the council table.

He asked for concessions; he asked for indemnities, and he sat down. But America's representative was there representing the spirit that was in the heart and mind of every soldier who went across the sea to make that high ideal a reality. Listen as he speaks what I believe was the greatest program ever announced since the Man of Galilee preached the Sermon on the Mount: "America wants not one dollar of indemnity or one foot of soil; America wants aggression for none and justice for all." That is our policy today, our wishes and our desires; and the present administration has charted a straight course of peace and honor, maintaining, as Washington said, a respectable posture of defense, respectable in the eyes of other nations.

I am going to vote for this appropriation for airplanes. The only defense against air attacks is other planes. Anti-aircraft guns are too feeble a defense. We know that the only language that dictators can understand is written in this bill. No matter what else we say, they can understand that.

President Roosevelt has never swerved from a direct course of peace from the day he was inaugurated when he announced the "good neighbor" policy. Every action and utterance of President Roosevelt have marked a straight course in support of that "good neighbor" policy during the 6 years of his administration. I do not see how anyone could be in the dark as to the policy of the administration unless he be as "those who having eyes see not."

The able Senator from Texas well illustrated yesterday with his cornstalk story the impossibility of one nation getting too far out in front on a disarmament program. When the Boston police struck, were the thugs of that city so honorable that they refused to plunder? No; they plundered all the more when they found people were unarmed. Gangsters get their name because they "gang up" on helpless victims. Gangster nations are no exception to that rule.

What nations have fallen victims of the dictators of today? Are they nations with armaments? Are they nations with national defense? I ask again the able Senator who has just spoken so eloquently for peace, did Czechoslovakia violate any peace treaty? Did Czechoslovakia have a trade policy that was obnoxious to any other country, or was it not that Czechoslovakia was unable to stop the war juggernaut; and Hitler and the other nations knew it. Did Ethiopia meddle in the affairs of any other country? Was China putting her nose into the business of any other country? Is that why she is paying the penalty today for being a defenseless nation?

We can only follow a program of disarmament when that program becomes universal. Today America will meet the nations of the world in a program of disarmament; we will disarm to the bone; but we will not commit the folly of getting too far in front of a disarmament program. Weakness invites attack. There are three glaring examples today of poor nations that were unable to defend themselves. Weakness invites attack; America would not be an exception. I make no predictions, but I know and you know, Mr. President, where the thing would begin. I do not believe that it would begin with an air raid on Washington or New York. It would begin just as it began in the other countries with that sinister snaky policy of "peaceful penetration" that would bring about a gradual taking over, an inching-in policy, a policy of creeping paralysis that gains control and announces it afterward. That would begin in Latin America.

The Roosevelt administration has had charge of the national affairs at a time when the world has been on fire, when every nation has been tense with the expectation of war. Yet this Nation has not been involved in any war.

There happened a rapid succession of events after allowing Hitler to rearm the Reich. Then there came a violation of the Peace Treaty of Versailles, quickly followed by the massacre of Ethiopia by the war eagles of Mussolini. Then came the invasion of the peaceful and harmless nation of China by the Japanese juggernaut. Then Hitler followed with his cruel expulsion of the Jews, his inhuman treatment of a people because of their race and their religion. Then there came his ultimatum and the Czechoslovakian crisis. He announced on a certain hour he would start the great German military machine toward Czechoslovakia, an ultimatum with a deadline limit. The Roosevelt administration began doing everything possible to prevent the execution of that threat. President Roosevelt sent a message to the four countries concerned urging them to use peaceful methods of settling their disputes. Then, at 3 o'clock on the next day, September 27, President Roosevelt, through the State Department, sent a message to American representatives in various countries throughout the world asking each to get in touch with the minister of foreign affairs of the country to which he was assigned and to bring all the pressure possible upon the German Chancellor. That was done. Then, on the morning of September 28, President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull, who had been up most of the night, sent a final message to the Chancellor of the German Reich urging him not to carry out his threat, placing upon him full responsibility for war if it should occur. The nations of the earth held their breath; business was at a standstill; all the roads leading out of Paris and London were jammed with people going out into the country; every ear in America was at the radio; lights burned all night long in homes; fear was upon every face in Europe. In that dark hour but one man stood between the world and war, and that man was Franklin D. Roosevelt, the President of the United States. Gradually, as the full meaning of his message broke upon the Chancellor of the German Reich, Hitler slowly but surely backed away from his ultimatum and the world breathed again. How can any man point to the President of the United States and to the present administration, and by indirection or in any other way indicate that the administration has not plowed a straight course toward world peace?

Now, we come asking for the barest possible increase in our aviation, one that would not put us on a parity with other nations. We are taking full recognition of the natural protection the two seas give us; we are making full allowance for the natural protection that America has by virtue of our location between two oceans; and we are asking for the very leanest possible increase in our military establishment that would mean a reasonable degree of protection for our land for a sufficient length of time to enable us not to prosecute a war but sufficiently long to enable us to whip an army into shape.

I refrain from describing the pitiable condition of our country today in military matters as compared with that of other nations. The War Department has recommended the smallest possible number of planes necessary for our defense. They will be ample only with one provision, and that is that our factories shall be allowed to sell enough planes to foreign countries so that the factories may be placed on a mass-production basis, so that the mistake of 1918 will not be repeated. Obviously, we shall need fewer planes actually in the air if we can get more when we need them, and get them in a hurry. Therefore, when we sell planes to nations that are not at war, we are increasing our own factories' ability to turn them out in a hurry for us.

If we are to believe anything we learn from those who are supposed to know, Germany today is turning out a thousand planes a month. I doubt if we could turn out a thousand planes in a year. Therefore, the program asked for in this bill is sufficient only provided we can put our factories on a mass-production basis that can supply us planes when we need them.

The President wanted to discuss that question with the Military Affairs Committee, and that is when he extended to us an invitation to come to the White House, in order that he might take us into his confidence, in order that we might talk freely and fully on a question of importance to the Nation as a whole. A committee such as the Military Affairs Committee is made up of men from all sections of the United States. They are men elected by the people. They are representatives of the people. They represent the people's interests in the committee. Executive sessions are held by every committee we have, not because we are trying to keep any information from the people, but because we are trying to keep certain information for the people. I cannot see that anyone had reason to suggest or hint that the executive meeting between the President and the full Military Affairs Committee was intended as a means of keeping something from the people. Rather, it showed the President's full intention of dealing openly and fairly with the people and with their duly elected representatives.

No President within my memory has taken the people into his confidence more than has President Roosevelt; and I resent the indirect, insidious suggestions and hints that the President and members of that committee were trying to keep from the people something that they had a right to know.

The people were represented in the committee. The people had full representation. Why, on the committee are some of the most outstanding, outspoken champions of world peace in the United States. Most of them are on the committee by request, because they feel that on that committee they can do more for world peace than anywhere else. The committee had, I believe, a full attendance that day, as we had full attendance at a joint meeting when the ambassadors from France and Great Britain came to give us the benefit of their knowledge.

I do not subscribe to the statement which was made on this floor that "that was an outrageous attempt to stampede the people into war," simply because we had the privilege of the benefiting by ambassadors' knowledge. Why do we have executive meetings? There are many reasons. There is certain business that cannot be transacted in the open. Certain things and statements are inflammatory. We did not want to arouse the feelings of the people any more than was necessary. There are many reasons why we hold executive meetings; and we held an executive meeting on that day in order to discuss this very subject of placing American manufacturers on a mass-production basis, so that if we needed more planes we could get them.

Mr. President, I am supporting this bill. From what I learned on the Military Affairs Committee from experts, I feel that it provides the bare minimum of aircraft with which the United States could, with any degree of expert knowledge, consider itself adequately defended. "Adequate" means in the light of the armaments of other nations. It has been asserted that every time we allow a factory in the United States to sell a plane abroad, we must build an additional one for ourselves.

I submit that that is not true. The more planes we furnish France and Great Britain the less planes we ourselves need actually in the air because we could secure additional ones if our factories were on a mass production.

To sell or not to sell to any nation not at war is a trade policy; but it is not a violation of neutrality by any stretch of the imagination. If we want to sell to certain nations any product that we have in this country, and those nations are not at war, that is a trade policy and is in no sense a violation of our policy of neutrality.

Mr. President, I said I might go further than the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] has gone. I ask unanimous consent out of order at this time to introduce a bill, and have it referred to the Military Affairs Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(The bill (S. 1650) to promote peace and the national defense through a more equal distribution of the burdens of war by drafting the use of money according to ability to lend to the Government, appears on p. 1975 in today's RECORD under its appropriate heading.)

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, the primary purpose of this bill is to provide a means of financing war. It has several purposes. One is to prevent profiteering. One is to supply the necessary sinews of war. Every nation that depends upon the voluntary system of financing a war, if the war lasts long, finds itself confronted with the necessity of issuing paper fiat money, and breaks down its own financial system. Great Britain came nearer financing a war on the pay-as-you-go basis than any other nation has yet done, and Great Britain was able to pay only 36 percent; and by the time the war ended, Great Britain was paying 5-percent interest on her bonds on the voluntary basis. The longer a war goes, the darker the future looks, the more difficult it is to coax enough money out of hiding to finance the war. Therefore, there should be a law that will compel the financial support of a war which is just as strict and just as rigid as the law that compels the manpower of a country to support the war.

That is what is provided by the bill I have introduced. It provides for a draft of capital. There are only two ways in which the Government can get money from the people. One is to borrow it from them, and the other is to take it away from them. If we take it away from them, that is taxes, in which event we do not intend to give it back. There are two kinds of loans. One is voluntary, and the other is mandatory. This bill provides for a mandatory loan in proportion to each individual's ability to pay; and it limits the interest rate to 1 percent, instead of letting it rise with each successive issue of bonds, with the result that the longer the war goes, the higher the interest rate becomes. The bill prevents profiteering in the field of financing war.

We have already paid $12,000,000,000 of interest alone on the bonds of the last war, and we cannot touch any of that money by taxation, because it is tax-exempt. We cannot reach the profits of financing war when it is financed with tax-exempt, voluntary bonds. This bill provides a method of financing war on a basis as mandatory as the law which calls men to the colors.

We cannot pay as we go in case of war. France tried it. France was able to pay only 17 percent, and she broke her economic fabric and ruined her franc. Germany ruined her mark, and broke down inside before she broke down on the Hindenburg line. Therefore, while we are considering methods of national defense that cost money, this is a method of national defense that would not cost us a dime, and I hope it can be brought before this body this year and passed. It would strengthen us. It would have a tremendous psychological effect upon a foreign foe, when they look upon America as a potential victim, to see on the books a statute, a sleeping giant that would rise to strength upon the declaration of war, that would give the Government power to finance a war to the full extent of America's ability to pay. Then it would have a tremendous effect in causing any nation which is too ambitious to pause before declaring war upon the United States. It would mean that the United States could get money without delay or embarrassment. It would mean that there would be no unconscionable profits after the war. It would mean that every soldier who served would feel that the money that paid for his clothes and his ammunition and his food was not a subject for profiteering. It would strengthen America in the eyes of the people, who were so disgusted with the unconscionable profits that resulted from the last war that they swore down in their hearts that they would look twice before they supported any future war if it meant filling the pockets of certain interests as the last war did.

It would strengthen us, in my opinion, more than these airplanes would strengthen us to pass a bill that would say to the financier, "If we have war it is going to cost you. If we have war, it may break you." It would simply put them on notice that if there is war, there will be no profits.

At the time of the last war we borrowed 50-cent dollars and paid back 100-cent dollars, or 136-cent dollars, as my colleague the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] has pointed out. When we borrowed those dollars, due to inflation, a dollar would buy only 50 cents worth of goods. We borrowed 50-cent dollars. We paid back, after things became more normal, 136-cent dollars, with the result that there came the tremendous profits in the financing of the war, which we cannot touch, under any voluntary system of raising money from tax-exempt bonds.

Why have a voluntary system for raising money any more than have a voluntary system for raising an army of men? The War Department, over the signature of Assistant Secretary of War Louis Johnson, says that a war, in order to be successful, must have the support of the people, therefore they do not favor my proposal, because if we have the support of the people, we can get the money. Why would not the same argument apply to the raising of an army, if it applies to the raising of money?

Ex-service men, who know war better than anyone else, have, since the close of the last war, asked for a bill to draft capital. Every ex-service organization has gone on record time and again for a bill which would draft capital in case of war.

The argument is advanced by certain people who do not want such a bill that we do not need it, that we can raise the money. We can raise it, and then we can pay the tremendous profits.

While we were in France serving for a dollar a day and a chance to die, 22,000 millionaires were made in this country, according to the statement of the chairman of the Senate Munitions Committee [Mr. NYE]. That is what is in the minds and craws of the people of this country regarding war. It is not that any red-blooded Americans—and they are all red-blooded—would object to a defense sufficient to protect us from aggression. It is merely that we were so sickened by the story of the profits made during the last war that we are gun-shy when it comes to appropriations of money for war materials or to defend our country against an aggressor.

Mr. President and Senators, I say that if we pass legislation such as the bill I have just introduced, which will prevent profits from war, it will do more to gain the support of the people of the United States behind a program of national defense than any other thing we can do.

We ought to go a step further and pass one of the bills recommended after the Senate Munitions Committee hearings. Several Senators have such bills. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has such a bill, and one was introduced by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. I have joined several Senators in introducing such a bill, a bill which calls for a tax which will recover the profits which result from war. We can reach all the profits in war in that way, except profits which result from financing the war, and we cannot reach them because the bonds representing them are tax exempt and the interest from them is tax exempt. That is why I am arguing today for a measure which will increase our national defense without a dime of cost. Such a bill would tend to equalize the burdens of war.

In the last war we drafted men but we begged for money. We called men to the colors by law: We fed them by grace.

We raised an army of men by force: We supported them by supplication—an outrage to the majesty of the flag itself.

The Constitution provides that "Congress shall have power to declare war," and, skipping some provisions, "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers." And what was provided among the "foregoing powers"? They provided that Congress shall have the power "to raise and support an army," and the supporting of an army is just as much a part of the Constitution as is the raising of an army. There is the constitutional mandate for raising the finances of war by as much force as that employed in raising the manpower. When we do that, people will no longer worry about the unconscionable profits which result from war. Such profits were made in the last war, as they were made in the Civil War, and as will happen in the next war unless we do something now to prevent it.

I thank the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe
Andrews	Davis	King	Reed
Ashurst	Donahey	La Follette	Reynolds
Austin	Downey	Lee	Russell
Bailey	Ellender	Lewis	Schwartz

Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I rather hesitate to offer any contribution to this debate after listening to the very eloquent presentation this morning by the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] who has so adequately portrayed the utter lack of the kind of a foreign policy on which we might build in this hour a national defense. Yet there are some things which I wish to add to the general discussion.

I have before me a lone paragraph appearing in an article written by Maj. George Fielding Elliott on the subject, What Cost National Defense. He says in that paragraph:

The futility of hoping that American intervention ever permanently can settle the quarrels of the Old World should have become apparent since the Great War. But until the voter is able to articulate his preference for a policy of continental defense as against the haphazard policy of racing against scares, our blundering can only end, like all planlessness, in disaster.

I repeat, "Our blundering, like all planlessness, can only end in disaster." It seems to me that Major Elliott has gone very directly to the immediate challenge confronting the Congress and the people of the United States at this time. There is indeed a tremendous uncertainty as to what it is that calls for the madness that is upon us in this country for an exceedingly large increase of our present national-defense provisions.

I have no doubt in my own mind that it is true that we are engaging today in a race against scares, a race which has us responding more particularly to the scare of the moment than to the real defense of the United States. I desire very much to make my own position very clear. Already we have reached an hour when it seems to me one cannot take a position against an issue such as that pending before us at the present time without subjecting himself to the charge of entertaining some "pro" attitude, of entertaining a sympathy for one cause or another prevailing in Europe at the present time. As for myself, I am holding no brief for any of the causes that are represented there. None of those "isms" is preferable to another, so far as I am concerned. It is my candid opinion that if the United States would really serve her purpose to avoid being involved in another European struggle she would cease concerning herself about one "ism" as against another in Europe, and go a step further, and put a stop to the development or the growth of any of those "isms" right here in our own country.

Within the week there has been a demonstration in the city of New York which ought to alarm any sober-minded serious American citizen. There, within the week, we have had a demonstration that in our midst are thousands who are entertaining, in preference to a sympathy for Americanism, a sympathy for some "isms" that are wholly foreign to the United States, yet "isms" that many here in the United States feel to be such as to call for an aggressiveness on the part of the United States.

I also wish to make myself clear of my desire that my country occupy a commanding influential position in this world, which will promote the cause of world peace, which will promote the cause of better understanding the world over. But, however deeply we may want to see peace brought to other sections of the world, I think experience plainly dictates that it is beyond the realm of any possibility for the United States to police the world or to inflict what it desires in the way of government and theories of practice upon other nations.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Who is proposing that we police the world? The Senator says we cannot police the world. Who in this Government, either in this Chamber or the other Chamber, or the executive department, is asking that we police the world?

Mr. NYE. If the Senator will be patient, he will hear me declare myself.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas has been very patient in listening to the Senator from North Dakota for some years now, but he has never heard him answer that question, and he does not expect to hear him answer it satisfactorily to anybody. For one, I am tired of seeing the Senator rise here and talk about policing the world. No one in this Government that I know of proposes to police the world. The Senator from North Dakota is always worried, and putting up scarecrows, and bringing in niggers-in-the-wood-pile, and ghosts-behind-the-bushes in order to make a great speech on neutrality and all that sort of thing, but I defy him now to point out anyone in this Government who is proposing that we police the world.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, before I shall have finished this afternoon I shall have recorded what I believe are substantial reasons to believe that the United States is pursuing a course which, in my opinion, to some extent embodies the notion of policing the world, and I can only plead with the Senator to be patient with me a little longer, and then he shall have his chance to counter any contention that may be mine.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. LEE. The Senator said that he believed the Government should take steps to prevent certain "isms" in this country. I do not find myself in disagreement with the Senator in that respect, but does the Senator have in mind, or will he explain how he recommends that the Government prevent them?

Mr. NYE. Referring to the experience we have encountered within the past week, I should like very much to see enacted into law the bill which I introduced on the opening day of the session, which, were it the law, would forbid parading in foreign uniforms and would forbid the use of foreign flags in such demonstrations as occurred in New York City. That, it seems to me, would be a first step we ought to take.

Mr. LEE. I will say to the Senator that I myself am in hearty accord with that principle.

Mr. NYE. I am glad to hear the Senator respond in that manner. I was sure that would be his attitude.

Mr. President, however much we may desire to inflict our wishes and theories upon other nations, I repeat that we cannot hope to control to so great a degree the resources which would permit us to provide adequately for any such course. More than that, it should not be the American desire, and it certainly is not an American right, to inflict our theories or our wishes respecting government upon other nations.

On one more score would I like to be understood clearly. Like everyone else who raises his voice here in this Chamber, I want my country to be provided with an adequate national defense; I want that defense to be sufficient to repulse any foe or group of foes that might engage in attack upon the United States. Not only that, I want it sufficient so that if and when made, we may be able to repulse attack by forces from foreign lands upon any republic on this hemisphere. But we go a step further, it seems to me, when we talk of providing for free trade for ourselves and for others upon the high seas. Freedom of the seas, it seems, is once again a thing inviting the challenge of the United States. If, in light of past experience, we are going to be foolish enough to believe that we or any other neutral nation, or any nation in the event of another world war, is going to have any rights upon certain parts of the seas, we are going to find ourselves pursuing again a most hopeless course. There is no such thing in time of war as freedom of the seas. We declared that among the purposes which took us into the last war was that of winning the freedom of the seas; and yet we know today that the challenge is the same today as it was then. To the east of us and to the west of us freedom of the seas presents the same challenge that it did when we last went to its support.

I am ready to agree most heartily that an adequate national defense today is calling upon the United States for larger appropriations for air forces. I am not only ready but am eager to provide for that larger appropriation.

As to how great an appropriation is needed in addition to what we already have is another question. I am not inclined to agree that we need what is provided for in the pending bill, or that we need anything resembling as much as is provided for therein. But it may be that enactment of this bill, calling for a total of 6,000 planes in the possession of the Army, would lend a degree of security to some people who seem to feel now that we are in greater jeopardy of attack from abroad.

While I am not in disagreement respecting the needs for a larger defense in the air, I do most heartily object to the methods which have been adopted to accomplish enactment of the kind of program pending before us at this time. Yesterday the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] remarked that there were some parts of some lands that he might want to see saved, but that he was not ready to have this country undertake to save great possessions of those same lands scattered all over the earth, which constitute a never-ending bone of contention. In this connection let me remark that, though the time may come when conditions abroad will challenge the United States to such a degree that we will feel obliged to have a hand again in other people's wars, I hope, with all my heart, that never will we accept that sort of a challenge until at least two things have been brought to pass.

First, before we shall ever do that again, we ought to have just a little reason to believe that another time, in addition to helping to win a war, we shall have a voice in determining the peace that is to follow the war.

Second, we ought never again to permit ourselves to be dragged into war abroad until we can be sure that our going into that war is not for the purpose, exclusive or otherwise, of maintaining the injustices which were left upon the world by reason of the treaty written following the last war. If we should enter into another foreign war simply for the purpose of holding the status which that treaty provided, we should not be deserving of a place of any rank among the civilizations of the world.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I gladly yield.

Mr. MINTON. Is anyone advocating that we go to war anywhere, with anybody, in defense of the status established by the Versailles Treaty?

Mr. NYE. I am wondering what all the present seeming effort to work us into a sweat about the danger confronting so-called democracy elsewhere in the world may have in mind in that respect.

Mr. MINTON. Has the Senator heard Mr. Hitler say that he is opposed to democracy, and that he thinks it has been a failure, and that he intends to do something about it?

Mr. NYE. That Mr. Hitler thinks it is a failure?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

Mr. NYE. Yes; I have read statements by Mr. Hitler declaring the utter fallacy and failure of democracy.

Mr. MINTON. And practicing what he preaches as he goes along in Europe?

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, it seems to me that one of the daily commentators in the press of the country has put his finger precisely upon the danger confronting America today. Gen. Hugh S. Johnson said:

To the precise extent that we stick out our necks to support France and England is there less chance for some peaceful and reasonable settlement of the European mess. France would undoubtedly continue to resist any appeasement, and continue to hold on to all her World War plunder if it took the last dollar in the United States Treasury and she could get it. Surely we want to protect democracy, but it would be a swell idea to know precisely what the threat to democracy is, and just what measures short of war are necessary to protect it. If there are ranking injustices growing out of Versailles that could be righted, if there are legitimate, or at least understandable, national hopes and needs that could be taken care of, it would be a lot better to consider them peacefully than to get into another war over them.

I most heartily concur in the conclusion reached by General Johnson.

This debate, Mr. President, attaches much importance to the sale of airplanes to foreign countries, particularly the sale of planes to France, which has been given such wide publicity during recent weeks. The question arises, Do we object or do we not object to this foreign sale of planes? Directing myself to that question, I must answer "yes," and at the same time "no." There can be no objection to the sale of planes to France in the absence of any law or any declared policy forbidding such sale. That is, there can be no objection to such a sale provided we sell airplanes alike to all countries that are in the market for planes and wanting them; provided further that we sell no plane the sole possession of which is an advantage to the United States and its national defense; provided further that there is no implied alliance accompanying such sale; provided further that the sale of planes abroad does not hinder our own defense and the production of our own requirements of aircraft; and provided further that there is no violation of the Johnson Act in conjunction with the sale of planes abroad.

With the exception of the last proviso I have uttered, I feel that in the sale of planes to France there has been a violation of every proviso I have mentioned.

We are not dealing alike with all nations in the matter of the sale of planes abroad. In the case of sales to France, we are selling a possession which our military authorities considered a distinct, definite advantage to our own national defense. Certainly, as I shall point out a little later, there is an implied alliance growing out of the sale of planes to France.

I am sure there has been adequate testimony that the sale of these planes to France does hinder our own defense and does slow up and threaten our own production of our own requirements in the name of national defense.

So, Mr. President, if I am asked, "Do you object to the sale of planes to France?" on these grounds, and for these reasons I say "yes"; I do object.

I object for the further reason that the manner of sale of these planes involves an issue of secrecy and involves a question of procedure in the United States which certainly invites interest, if not suspicion, on the part of the American people.

Yesterday the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] in answering the splendid address made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], undertook to declare that no element of secrecy was involved in connection with the sale of planes to France. I am amazed that the Senator from Kentucky should so contend; for, according to the testimony taken before the Military Affairs Committee, even Secretary Morgenthau at one time objected to the secrecy involved.

Mr. President, secrecy of the highest degree was involved in connection with the visit to the United States of the French mission to buy aircraft. I doubt that we should have known today of what was going on except for what somebody described as a "message from heaven" in the form of an airplane crash, revealing the existence of the French mission. Even following the crash, an effort was made to keep the entire procedure secret. A member of the French mission involved in the crash was pulled out of the plane and hurried to the hospital and was there given another name than that which was honestly his. Every effort was made to prevent publication of knowledge of the existence of the military mission to the United States from France.

There were other elements of secrecy. There have been many elements of secrecy all through this winter, which one cannot now construe as having been for any purpose other than that of throwing a great veil of secrecy over what was really the call upon us for a mad plunge into large expenditures in the name of national defense.

Two of our own Ambassadors came before a joint meeting of the House and Senate Military Affairs Committees. I cannot understand to this day why such secrecy was maintained around the meeting and what was said there.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I gladly yield.

Mr. MINTON. If there had been no secrecy, as the Senator alleges, would he have objected to the sale of planes to France?

Mr. NYE. I think I should not, provided the conditions I have mentioned had been fulfilled.

Mr. MINTON. Who in the American Government participated in any secrecy surrounding the French mission?

Mr. NYE. Who in the American Government?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

Mr. NYE. The Secretary of the Treasury did so up to a certain point.

Mr. MINTON. I think I heard all the testimony, as did the Senator. I did not gain the impression that anyone in the American Government was being at all secretive about the French mission. Of course, it was not heralded to the world with any sounding of trumpets. No band met the mission at the station when it arrived. Nothing was said about it. There was no advertising about it. On the other hand, no attempt was made to conceal it.

Mr. NYE. Just as vigorously would I insist that the evidence does reveal that there was a large element of secrecy surrounding the visit of the French mission to the United States.

Speaking of the place of the Treasury in the picture involving the visit of the French mission to the United States, I cannot now refrain from asking the question which I previously asked: What in the world was the Treasury Department doing in this particular transaction? Never before, according to the Treasury's own admission, had it been invited to participate in anything of the kind. Here was a French mission operating secretly, bent upon purchasing planes in the United States, coming to the United States, being ushered directly to the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, our Ambassador to France doing his utmost to ease the way for the mission seeking purchase of planes here in the United States. Why should the Treasury be in that picture? The explanation is offered that the Procurement Division of the United States Treasury was most closely associated with producers; but then comes evidence that the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department never has interested itself, as a division of the Treasury, in the purchase of aircraft for the agencies of the United States Government.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I gladly yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Was it not testified by Admiral Peoples that the only position of the Treasury Department and the Procurement Division was to act as a clearing house between the War Department and the Navy Department and the French Government commission?

Mr. NYE. That is correct, and it leads directly to the point I desire to make, namely, that the Treasury came into the picture only when and after the Army and Navy had shown a very definite inclination to oppose the sale of the plane which the French wanted to have. Then the Treasury did come into the picture.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator has the whole thing turned around.

Mr. NYE. I do not think I have.

Mr. MINTON. The Treasury came in first, and then they brought in the Army and the Navy, because they knew that they could not accomplish, even through the State Department, the sale of an airplane to France unless the Army and the Navy agreed to it.

Mr. NYE. Exactly.

Mr. MINTON. So the Treasury was in it first, and then came in the Army and the Navy at the solicitation of the Treasury.

Mr. NYE. No; I deny that the Treasury was in it first. I deny that the Treasury came into it before an ambassador had injected himself into the proceedings and had perhaps pointed out that this would be the smooth way to handle it and get all the factors together. Let it be made very clear that the Army and the Navy were emphatically and definitely opposed to the sale of the Douglas bomber to the French mission. The mission was up against a stone wall to start with; they could not obtain entree to the plant to see the plane except as the Treasury was finally successful in bringing about an order that the Army and Navy permit such entree.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has just said that it ought to be definitely understood that the Army and Navy were both opposed to the sale of the airplane in question to France.

Mr. NYE. I have so stated.

Mr. BORAH. I think that is exceedingly important.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. NYE. If the Senator wishes to counter the contention just made I am glad to yield.

Mr. MINTON. I think the Senator is mistaken when he says to the Senator from Idaho that the Navy Department lodged any complaint. The French were not buying any Navy planes at all; the Navy never lodged any complaint, and the War Department never lodged any serious complaint. They made it only as a matter pro forma for the record in order to protect themselves as to a policy which they always pursue.

Mr. NYE. I stand corrected so far as respects the Navy, which made it clear at the beginning that it had no interest involved in the particular plane. The objection was lodged by the War Department, and that objection was a strenuous one, though the committee never was able to learn in just what language and in just what form the objection was lodged. The objection reached such a point that during the first hearings of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs the military voices of this land were enraged over the course they insisted had been pursued to accomplish the sale of a plane over their objection. I do not think anyone is going to deny that statement.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield if the Senator wishes to direct himself to the question the Senator from Idaho raised.

Mr. MINTON. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator at the moment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what I should like to know is where is the evidence, where are the facts which show unmistakably that the Army was opposed to this sale? I am not on the committee, and hence I am asking these questions which may seem unnecessary to those who are on the committee, but an answer ought to be recorded here in this RECORD.

Mr. NYE. I am not ready to take the record that has been produced to the committee and point to the information the Senator desires. I have not had a chance to go over it all, but I should be very much surprised if any member of the Military Affairs Committee were able to point to anything in the record that reveals satisfaction on the part of the War Department with the transaction that did take place. I should be surprised if any member of the committee insisted that the War Department was not enraged at what had taken place over their protest.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Getting back to the order of things as to when the French mission came into the picture with reference to the Treasury Department, I refer the Senator to the record on page 222 of the hearings before the Military Affairs Committee. Admiral Peoples, who was testifying, said:

Senator MINTON. The first thing that happened was that the mission contacted the Secretary of the Treasury?

Admiral PEOPLES. Yes.

Senator MINTON. The State Department cleared or accredited them?

Admiral PEOPLES. Yes.

Senator MINTON. And then the matter was referred to the Procurement Division?

Admiral PEOPLES. Yes.

Senator MINTON. And you brought in the Army and Navy?

Admiral PEOPLES. Exactly. That was the next logical step.

Mr. NYE. I shall hope before I finish, Mr. President, to have access to the direct testimony, particularly that of General Arnold, respecting the Army's attitude toward this whole transaction.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, since the Senator has been interrupted at this point, will he yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Of course, the matter to which I shall now invite the Senator's attention is not in the record, but the Senator will recall that the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Johnson, testified, off the record, about a matter that cleared up the whole atmosphere as to this particular plane and the objection of the War Department, did he not?

Mr. NYE. No; most emphatically, he did not; and I have definitely in mind the particular testimony to which the Senator is referring. He did not clear up my mind on the question by any manner or means.

Mr. MINTON. I am sorry it is a matter we cannot talk about and is not in the record, as it is something that the War Department considers to be a military secret, and we are not at liberty to discuss upon the floor what the War Department considers vitally important to the Department and believes should not be discussed in public, but the thing that the War Department told us that controlled them in the sale of this plane is in my opinion an entirely different story from what the Senator from North Dakota has now outlined.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Does not the Senator realize what confusion there must be in the minds of those who are not on the committee and did not have an opportunity to hear these matters discussed, and also in the minds of the people of the country by reason of these supposed secret affairs which ought not to be revealed?

LXXXIV—126

Mr. MINTON. I would not hesitate to tell the Senator from Idaho privately, though I would not want to tell him in this open Chamber publicly what the War Department told us they considered a secret of the War Department; but it was the thing, in my judgment, that controlled the whole action of the War Department, the President of the United States, and everyone else in dealing with the French mission in the sale of this airplane.

Mr. BORAH. There is nothing I would prefer to know right now about public affairs from the Senator or someone else, and I should like to have the public know it, though perhaps I would change my mind about the public knowing it if I should hear it. I myself would like to know what it was that came into this consideration and upset the whole situation. It must have been a terrific affair.

Mr. NYE. It must have been, as the Senator from Idaho says, a terrific affair that would cause an effort to build a tent over this particular operation.

I should like to point out, for the information of the Senator from Idaho, the existence of a release policy for aircraft and aircraft equipment promulgated on the 10th day of last August by the War and Navy Departments over the signatures of Acting Secretary of War Johnson and Acting Secretary of the Navy William D. Leahy. There is nothing secret about this release policy which undertakes to lay down the rules that are to be pursued in releasing any aircraft development for foreign or even for the domestic trade. This policy is explicit, it is emphatic, and it is my information that it was 2 or 3 years in the making. There was difficulty in drafting language which would surely encompass the purpose which the War Department and the Navy Department wanted to serve; namely, that of protecting American secrets as they were being developed from day to day in the aircraft industry.

Among other paragraphs found in this release policy is this one:

42. Pilot and passenger flights by foreign representatives for demonstration purposes in aircraft coming within the scope of paragraph 3 above shall not be permitted whether or not such aircraft have been released for foreign sale.

The War and Navy Departments undertook to lay down a release policy that would afford them ample protection against the loss of any advantage which was being developed by the aircraft industry. With respect to the plane which the French wanted and which they ultimately bought, our Army and Navy felt that in that plane they had something that was really advantageous. They were waiting for it to be brought down to the line of competition this spring. They were anticipating from it great advantages. There is not much doubt that had that plane been brought down to the line of competition it would at once have had a market. The Army would have wanted that particular bomber plane. They have said so. They have said that it contained and afforded very definite advantages from the standpoint of America's national defense. They wanted to protect it. They objected to its examination by any foreign mission, particularly—since it was the only approach—the French mission. They protested against it. They wanted to guard that thing for America's own use and advantage. Yet over their head, ultimately, over the head of this written, published release policy, went action one day that made this particular bomber available to the French mission; and the French mission ultimately bought that plane.

It does not mean a thing to me that anyone shall now come and say that the same plant had a better bomber plane in the making. It does not mean a thing to me for men now to say that there was no advantage in this one because there was something better on the way. The truth of the matter is the War Department wanted this bomber plane. They were looking to it as an instrument that would give the American Military Establishment an advantage. I do not think just what happened to make that bomber available to the French mission is a matter of secrecy. The President of the United States, knowing of the War Department's protest, heeding the Secretary of the Treasury, and possibly others, ordered the War Department to make the plane and a demonstration of it, if required, available to the French.

What happened, what was the terrific cause behind it all, as the Senator from Idaho suggests, I am unprepared to say. I only know that the War Department jealously was guarding against making this particular bomber plane available to anyone else; and yet over its protest came the ultimate order to make it available and make its sale possible.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may read into the Record at this time the general policy followed by the War Department in reference to the sale of airplanes?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I am reading from page 31 of the hearings, the testimony of General Craig:

Airplane manufacturers cannot export military airplanes without the authority of the State Department, which does not grant such permission unless approved by the War Department. The War Department does not approve such action except in the case of planes which have been superseded by later and more effective models.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, this particular plane was one which the War Department at that time wanted to preserve for itself. I understand from the able Senator from North Dakota that since that time it is claimed that another plane has been invented or manufactured which is better, more desirable.

Mr. MINTON. All I can say to the Senator from Idaho is that at the time the War Department O. K'd the sale of these planes—and it did O. K. them; 100 of them have been ordered by France—the Department did so under the policy I have just read, as outlined by General Craig when he testified before the committee, that the Department never O. K.'s the sale of planes until they have been superseded by later and more effective models.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me this thing is making a mountain out of a mole hill. Why was it necessary to have secrecy as to this particular plane? After all, what has been developed to show that this plane ought to have been protected, or that it was necessary to protect it? Is the War Department still of the opinion that it ought not to have been made public?

Mr. MINTON. If the Senator is asking me, I will say that there was only one thing on this plane, as I understand, that the War Department wanted to protect, and that was the bomb sight; and the French never saw the bomb sight.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I should have to object to that conclusion.

Mr. MINTON. That is the testimony of General Arnold.

Mr. NYE. There was more than the bomb sight that the War Department wanted to protect. They wanted to protect for themselves the advantage that they knew could be theirs by reason of possession of that particular bomber plane.

Mr. MINTON. If the Senator will yield further, the War Department, under the policy I have just read, as declared by General Craig, did O. K. the sale of these planes to France.

Mr. NYE. After the order had come from the President of the United States to permit it to be done.

Mr. MINTON. No such order as that was issued to the War Department from the President of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Nobody contends that this bomb sight, or whatever it is called, was on this particular plane at the time it was being demonstrated to the French representative.

Mr. NYE. The bomb sight was never involved in the demonstration.

Mr. BARKLEY. And, as I have read the testimony of General Arnold, General Craig, Captain Kraus, and others, there was nothing on this plane that the War Department regarded as a military secret at the time the plane was being used for inspection purposes. The testimony, as I recall it, shows—with some variations, I imagine—that after an airplane is taken out of the factory and rolled out on a runway there is not much more about it that is secret. Any photographer may take a photograph of it, although I suppose a photograph would not necessarily reveal the inside operations of the engine. But the testimony of General Craig himself, I think, shows that after an airplane is once out in the open all the photographers in the Nation may take photographs of it, and no part of it is much longer a secret, although I suppose there are certain minute devices on a bomber plane which would be peculiar to that sort of plane and which would not be public, and there may be others which such a picture or even a casual inspection would not reveal.

It is true, however, as I understand from the Army officers, that after a plane is once out in use, with one or two exceptions, there is not much about it that is any longer secret.

Mr. NYE. But it is also true that after a plane has been brought out and is available for photographing, still the Army has insisted upon retention of its exclusive right to the plane for long periods of time thereafter, because the advantage is not to be had in a photograph. For many months the advantage is to be had only in the possession of that particular plane, in having access to it for use as a model.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. From my rather hasty reading of the hearings, which have been available in printed form for only a day or so, the objection which the War Department originally made to the inspection of this plane was because it violated a general policy which the War Department, in cooperation with the Navy Department, had promulgated before that time. It was not so much an objection to others seeing this particular plane as it was, as they regarded it, a violation of a general policy which had been adopted among the departments, which was a revision of a previous policy which they had.

Mr. NYE. At that time, of course, that objection was very much involved; but it was not by any manner of means the only objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President—

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from North Dakota, of course, will recall the testimony of General Arnold before the Military Affairs Committee that the plane in which this crash occurred was the very latest and best development in the whole airplane field, being prepared at that time for entry into the War Department's competition.

Mr. NYE. I have made that point.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And that, so far as the policy of the War Department was concerned, not deviated from until this time, it had been the rule that no plane was to be sold to a foreign government until 1 year after the second plane under an order had been delivered. The testimony was, as I recall—and I am sure the Senator from North Dakota also will recall it—that it had been the experience of the War Department and the practice of the War Department that when an order was placed the second plane would not be delivered for 6 or 8 months after the first plane had been delivered and accepted by the government; in other words, that that period of 6 or 8 months would be used for the perfection of the plane, for testing the plane in every respect, for working out of any defects which there might be in the plane. After the second plane had been delivered 1 year was still required as the period in which the United States Army would have the opportunity of getting all the planes of that particular model it needed. After that the War Department had no objection to selling the planes to anybody who wanted to buy them, provided the State Department did not object.

Mr. NYE. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Idaho in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. As I understand the Senator's contention, it is that the Army objected to the proceedings, and yielded only after pressure from a higher source.

Mr. NYE. That is correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator is sure of that?

Mr. NYE. The War Department would issue a release which would make the demonstration possible to this French mission only after it had received its orders from higher up.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Then, they had to obey?

Mr. NYE. There was nothing else for them to do but to obey.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have here what I intend a little later, if occasion warrants, inserting in the RECORD, a record of the sales of not only airplanes, but engines, and parts, and all other forms of war materials to all the nations of the world during the last 4 or 5 years, including Germany, Japan, China, England, France, Czechoslovakia, and Brazil. The same policy, I suppose, existed at the time of these sales that was involved in this particular sale to the French mission. What was the procedure in those cases, if the Senator knows?

Mr. NYE. I am afraid I cannot tell the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. For instance, we sold to Germany, beginning back in 1934, over 600 airplane engines, and the Pratt & Whitney branch of the United Aircraft Corporation issued a license to the Bavarian Motor Works in Germany authorizing them to use certain patents which belonged to the Pratt & Whitney factory in Connecticut. What happened with respect to that? What sort of procedure was there, and was there anything different pertaining to those sales from the course that was pursued in particular reference to the French sale?

Mr. NYE. I only know that at that time there was no such thing in existence as the release policy as I understand it now.

Mr. BARKLEY. That release policy was not an act of Congress; it was a memorandum agreement between the Navy and War Departments, as I understand.

Mr. NYE. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, they felt obliged, and properly so, to observe a policy which they had themselves inaugurated. But I am wondering whether there is any mystery about the sale of these planes to France which did not exist in regard to the sale of all other planes to all other nations. I do not recall that when these sales were in progress the nations which were buying the planes were engaged in any publicity as to what they were doing in the United States toward the purchase of war materials. Very naturally they would want to keep such transactions secret from other nations which might, within the range of possibility be their future competitors. No nation deliberately reveals to a possible enemy what it is doing in the way of preparedness, although I think there is much more knowledge current than many of us suppose. When Japan and China and Germany and other nations were coming here and buying airplanes, and engines, and parts, and all sorts of things, were they not at the same time undertaking to keep those transactions secret, just as the French were? They did not have any unfortunate circumstance such as the crash of an airplane.

Mr. NYE. Nor was there any unfortunate circumstance involving the presence of the Treasury Department in the transactions with the other nations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Just how the circumstance was eliminated I do not know. It may be that it was the result of another policy, that in the sale of planes on which the War and Navy Departments had some prior claim, the services of the Procurement Division, which was familiar with costs and procedure, probably was thought advisable. I do not know that there is any law which would require the intervention of the Procurement Division. I am wondering whether, after all, there has been any more effort to keep this particular transaction secret than there was successfully made to keep secret transactions with other nations involving the purchase of war materials.

Mr. NYE. I do not know of any other case where there was the same degree of secrecy involved as there was in this case.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President—

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri, who may be able to contribute an answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Before the Senator from Missouri answers, does any Senator present know of any publicity having been given, from 1934 until 1937, to the purchases which were made by other nations of the same sort of materials, and all other sorts of materials that were intended to prepare them for a possible conflict?

Mr. NYE. I seem to remember very distinctly reading accounts of visits of purchasers from other lands, and of activities by American salesmen in other lands. There was nothing secret about that.

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I can recall to the memory of the Senator from North Dakota, the Senator from Washington, and the Senator from Michigan, whom I see before me, all of whom were members of the Munitions Committee, one instance when there would have been a great deal of publicity given to the purchase of planes and airplane parts except for the active intervention of the Secretary of Commerce and the State Department. That was the instance, which came to the attention of the Munitions Committee and occurred during the time when the Treaty of Versailles was still supposed to be in effect, of the United States selling airplane parts and airplane engines which undoubtedly contributed very materially to the rearmament of Germany and to the repudiation of the limitations of the Versailles Treaty. When it was the intention of the Munitions Committee to make that information public and make an issue of it, the State Department protested very vigorously, and the Secretary of Commerce came personally before the Munitions Committee protesting against the information being made public. When we represented to the Secretary of Commerce that this involved a most important international matter, having to do with the possible rearmament of Germany and the prospect of another war, it was still insisted upon by the State Department and the Department of Commerce that we had received the information in the strictest confidence, and that it would be a violation of that confidence, and a violation of the public policy of the United States, for us to disclose the information to the world.

Mr. President, there was this difference, however, between the situation which existed in regard to the sale of airplane engines and airplane parts to Germany and the situation which exists today, namely that that was not a situation in which either the Army or the Navy had or asserted a prior claim, as happened in the case of the sale of the airplanes to the French. It was a situation in which there were involved ordinary engines and ordinary parts which were not needed by the Army or the Navy of the United States.

So far as the matter of secrecy is concerned, I agree with the Senator from Kentucky that to a great extent the sale of armaments and sale of munitions has been conducted in secrecy, and I regard secrecy in any sale of munitions as being greatly to the detriment of the interests of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator from North Dakota will yield, I shall be very glad to answer if I can.

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. When did we cease selling war materials to Germany?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not think we ever ceased selling war materials to Germany.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield, we did not cease, but the sales were very materially reduced when Germany became more or less self-sufficient by the establishment of her own factories and by producing her own war materials.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in my opinion, from the little knowledge I have of the subject, I think investigation will show that we ceased selling war materials to Germany when the colony question arose between France and England.

Mr. BARKLEY. There may have been a coincidence, but I do not think the German Government was denied the right to purchase because of any law or any policy. Germany continued to purchase right along, but in smaller quantities, and largely because she does not now have to depend on the outside; she is making her own munitions.

If the Senator will yield further—

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with what the Senator from Missouri said about the munitions investigation, as I recall, and as I gather from the Senator, the controversy over publicity to which he refers related to a past act which the committee were about to investigate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; it related to past sales, but sales which were also being currently made. I think sufficient time has elapsed so that there is no seal of secrecy on the matter at this time.

It was represented to us by the Secretary of Commerce that certain reports which had come in a confidential way to the Department of Commerce from the commercial agents of the Department of Commerce in Germany must necessarily be held in the strictest confidence, that the disclosure of the facts would certainly complicate our commercial relations with Germany, and might even involve the lives of some of the people who had made the reports to the Department of Commerce. Under those circumstances the Munitions Committee, being bound, as they were, by the manner in which we received the information, held it confidential.

Mr. BARKLEY. The question I raised had no relation to an investigation carried on by the committee in which the circumstances might be different. The point I made was that in the ordinary course of these sales there was just about as much secrecy with regard to purchases by one government as by another.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think there has been altogether too much secrecy in connection with all the sales of munitions by American manufacturers. I think it would be a fine thing if every such sale could be blazoned from the housetops every morning, so that the American people could know the extent to which we were in the process of being led into war by the transactions of these merchants of death.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri, while he is on his feet, in my time, if he has any recollection of any of these transactions involving the purchase of military equipment in the United States having been negotiated through or engineered by the Treasury Department of the United States?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Certainly not; and it was asserted on the witness stand by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Procurement Division before the Committee on Military Affairs that no such transaction had ever before taken place. While it was testified that the Procurement Division had to do with the purchase of 153,000 separate items, it was freely admitted that among the 153,000 items which the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department had to purchase, military and naval airplanes were not numbered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to call attention to what the Assistant Secretary of War, sitting just across the table from the Secretary of War, testified to, with the clear approval of the Secretary by nodding of the head, respecting the important point in this particular inquiry, namely, what our policy is with respect to sale and exportation of planes to foreign countries. I read from page 227 of that part of the record which I suppose is made public. In fact, I do not know whether there is any part of this record which is now secret.

Senator NYE. So that the rule still stands that pilot or passenger flights by foreign representatives for demonstration purposes of aircraft coming within the scope of paragraph 3 above shall not be permitted whether or not such aircraft has been released for foreign sale?

Assistant Secretary JOHNSON. The entire regulations you have before you, including that paragraph, are still in effect.

Senator NYE. Suppose another foreign purchaser wanted the particular bomber that was involved, and came to America for that purpose, would there be permission given to fly in that plane without going through what was gone through to accomplish that in the matter under discussion?

Assistant Secretary JOHNSON. The practice, whether you call it an exception or not, as to that plane would apply to any other government.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Vermont for calling that language to my attention. I was seeking it and could not lay my finger on it at the moment.

There was an element of unusual secrecy involved in this particular transaction, and the fact that the United States Treasury was in this picture naturally could only increase the desire of men to know what it was all about. Naturally, when the Treasury Department was found in the picture, the question was asked, "Does this mean that the United States Government, through the Treasury, was in any way involved in financing this French purchase in the United States"—perhaps in contravention of the Johnson Act itself?

In all fairness it should be said here and now that the record of testimony fails to reveal that the stabilization fund or any other agency of the Treasury Department was involved in expediting this sale of planes to France. Yet the question continues to live, "What was the Treasury doing in that picture?" I may say, and I shall offer evidence concerning it a little later on, that in the French Chamber of Deputies the same question has arisen with respect to their purchase of planes in the United States. They are wondering if there was any financial involvement, any financial emergency which required the placing by France of orders for planes in the United States.

Mr. President, I believe that providing an adequate national defense is primarily the task of the War Department and Navy Department. I believe that when the War Department and Navy Department undertake to protect the United States against having to share with other lands any advantage it may enjoy in a military way, that effort ought not only to be acknowledged but ought to be appreciated; in other words, I am trying to say that this release policy which the Army and Navy have laid down is good policy from the standpoint of national defense. It was good policy when it was promulgated. It is good policy today; but we find that, however good or however desirable it may be in its present form, it is of virtually no advantage to the United States whatsoever. An order from somewhere higher up can destroy the whole purpose of that release policy. For that reason I introduce Senate bill 1486, under date of February 20, which is only after a fashion an incorporation of this release policy, and which would have the Congress lay down the law which would make the War Department and the Navy Department the determining factors in questions of making available to foreign lands any aircraft or any aircraft appliance. I hope most earnestly that the Congress will be inclined to support that kind of measure, so as to back up those who are building and those who are jealously guarding our national defense, and keep for America those things which might be of great value to our country in another day.

I have said that I have no objection to the sale of planes to France, providing we make our sales available to all countries alike, and providing we pursue certain other rules. But if I could have my way about it, Mr. President, the United States would abandon for all time the sale of any military supplies to any other country upon the face of the earth.

I wonder how long we are going to tolerate a process which finds us, solely for the purpose of getting a little profit, arming the entire world against itself, perchance arming the entire world against us. I wonder how long we are going to continue that sort of policy. A bill is pending in Congress which would forbid the sale of military supplies to other nations of the world. I expect to see the day when that is going to be the law of the land. I wish that day would soon arrive.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HERRING in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Of course, I join with the Senator fully in opposing war profits, but I wish to ask the Senator a question. He just stated that he was opposed to allowing our factories to sell any war material or machinery to other nations. That presents us with a dilemma. How and where would we get our defense material if we needed it? We must, in that case, then, support a Government-owned and Government-operated factory or factories of sufficient size to supply us with the defense necessary, but then we are confronted with a cost which is prohibitive. Therefore the other alternative is to let our factories supply nations with their peacetime needs. Who can say when we are going to have to use them? I cannot; neither can the Senator. But if we are going to allow factories to supply other nations their peacetime needs, then our factories would be operated on a sufficiently large-scale basis so that in the event of war they could supply our needs. If they are not permitted to supply other nations with their peacetime needs, we must have Government-owned and Government-operated factories large enough to fall back upon when we need them.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, before we got into the last war the United States supplied all parts of the world with varying instruments of warfare, instruments which later our own sons and fathers were made to face. But I wish to apply the Senator's argument to the matter of sale of planes abroad.

No one has denied that a primary purpose behind this effort to make planes available to France was a desire for the profit that was available to American industry from that kind of foreign trade. The President himself made clear that this would be good business. A large order, perhaps amounting to $65,000,000, would be fine business for American plane manufacturers, fine business for American laborers seeking employment, and fine business, too, from the standpoint of getting our capacity under way to produce our requirements ultimately.

Does it not come down to this: We establish the policy of selling planes abroad. We will supply what France wants; we will supply what England wants; but if anyone today were to contend for the sale of planes in like numbers to Germany and Japan, for example, there would be a tremendous, most indignant protest on the part of the American people. However, we are proposing to supply England and France. It is good business. It affords employment. It provides a return for American industry. Then we propose to supply, in American plants, our own requirements. Having supplied England, France, and the United States with their immediate requirements, what then? What then of this industry which is speeded up and geared up, affording large employment? How shall we keep it geared up, so that it may continue producing what we need? How shall we continue it in such operation as will afford employment for those who there find employment?

Mr. President, I can see the day coming, and so can the Senator from Oklahoma, when, in order to continue this industry operating full blast, we shall be not only willing but eager to supply Germany and Japan with all they may desire to buy, to the end that we may continue this trade. Remember all the while that every time we sell one plane to England, every time we sell one plane to France, every time we sell one plane to Germany or Japan, the requirement is upon the United States to build one more for itself. What is the end of a mad operation of that kind? I can only repeat that I wish my country would get out of the business of arming all the world.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. LEE. First, I disagree with the Senator when he says that every time we sell a plane to France we must build one for ourselves. Obviously, if France and England had had an air strength even closely approximating that of Germany, there would have been no Munich pact. There would have been no dismemberment of Czechoslovakia if the democracies had been anywhere near the equal of the dictators in planes.

I do not agree with the Senator. Every time we sell a plane to France, standing between the dictators and us, so to speak, we need one less ourselves.

I asked the Senator a question—

Mr. NYE. Just one question at that point. Does not the Senator rather heartily approve the theory that our national defense is one which ought to be shaped without knowledge that we shall ever have allies in another war, a policy which ought to find us counting only on the possibility of the United States as the ally of the United States?

Mr. LEE. And for that reason does not the Senator believe that our factories ought to be able to supply the United States?

Mr. NYE. I do.

Mr. LEE. I asked the Senator a question, and he told me that a dog's hind leg is crooked. That is true; but the Senator does not answer my question. Where would we obtain our material?

Mr. NYE. Where would we obtain our material if we confined ourselves to supplying our own needs?

Mr. LEE. Where would we obtain our material in case of war? A while ago I asked the Senator that question. We could obtain it either from privately operated factories or from Government-operated factories. Obviously, if we do not allow our privately operated factories to have enough outside business to maintain themselves on a sufficiently large basis they could not supply us. Then there would fall on the Government the duty of supporting Government-operated factories large enough to supply us in case of emergency.

Mr. NYE. If that were wholly true, Mr. President, I still believe the United States would be far, far ahead of the game.

Mr. LEE. Does the Senator think China and Ethiopia are ahead? Does not the Senator know that weakness is an invitation to attack?

Mr. NYE. I am not asking for a moment that the United States entertain the same degree of weakness that was entertained by China and Ethiopia, to which he refers. We never shall. What I am insisting is that we can have adequate production to meet our own requirements without continuing the policy of selling our national-defense production to all the world.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does either the Senator from North Dakota or the Senator from Oklahoma believe that we are contributing to the safety of the United States, or to the defense of the United States, or to the preparedness of the United States, by continually giving to every other nation in the world every product of American inventive genius, and every development of American industrial science, so that everybody else will be on the same footing that we are?

Mr. NYE. In that connection, the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], earlier in the day, made reference to the attack made upon the Panay about a year ago. He alluded to the existence of Standard Oil tankers engaged in the transportation, at a profit, of oil to China. He did not say that the same tankers were also engaged in the business of carrying oil to Japan. That is the truth of the matter. The attack which was made that day upon the Panay and the Standard Oil tankers in the Yangtze River was an attack by Japanese bombing planes, more than 90 percent of which were powered by motors manufactured in the United States and sold to Japan, to the profit of some Americans. The gasoline that those motors had to have to operate in the attack was delivered to the Japanese by American corporations, which made a fine profit out of the business. The bombs which were dropped, and which did the damage to the ships and to human life, were bombs loaded with shrapnel which only a few months before was plain, ordinary scrap iron, gathered up in the United States and unloaded in Japan, to the great profit of Americans.

Mr. LEE. I may add that the cotton used was cotton produced in the United States.

Mr. NYE. The thing which sent the shrapnel on its way was an explosion of powder manufactured under a formula sold to Japan in 1932 for $900,000 by an American corporation which could not resist the temptation to obtain some profit out of the business of arming. The thing which our own Military Establishment was rather jealously guarding as an advantage was sold to Japan.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A moment ago the Senator from North Dakota asked a very pertinent question as to what would happen as a result of the tremendous gearing up of airplane production and the production of other munitions in this country after France, Great Britain, and the United States had received their full necessities. It seems to me that the question, What is to happen to that mass production? is a very pertinent one. I think I can answer the question, if the Senator will permit me to trespass upon his time.

Mr. NYE. I hope the Senator will do so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The situation is illustrated by the story of a boy who on Christmas Day was presented with both a diary and a rifle. The account in his diary ran as follows:

December 25. Received this diary and a rifle today for Christmas. Storming outside. Unable to go out. Decided I would keep the diary. Oiled and cleaned my rifle.

December 26. Still storming outside. Unable to hunt. Cleaned and oiled my rifle.

December 27. Storm still raging. Cleaned and oiled my rifle.

December 28. Shot grandma today.

[Laughter.]

Mr. President, the answer to the question of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye] is that when we shall have geared up to such tremendous production of munitions we shall be in the position of a man who is overbalanced and who must keep running to avoid falling on his face. We shall have a war.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I gladly yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. I can go along with the argument of the Senator from North Dakota that we ought to prohibit the shipment of war material of any kind to foreign nations, except to this extent: I think we should ship munitions of war to any nation when it promotes our own national defense, and for no other reason. Therefore, I favor the sale of airplanes to France and Great Britain, because I think it is the most effective way of providing for our national defense. I think every plane we send to France and Great Britain at this critical period will aid our national defense. Regardless of what anybody may say about it, France and Great Britain are our first line of defense in the attack which is being made and is to be made on democracy; and if we, by shipping munitions to them at this time, can enable them to defeat the dictators, then we shall have protected our own Nation. It is for that reason, and that reason alone, that I favor the sale of airplanes to France and Great Britain.

Mr. NYE. Of course, it must follow the Senator's argument that by reason of the sales to France and Great Britain we are now giving ourselves a taste of the profit which is available from the large preparations for war on the part of France and Great Britain. We have reason to believe that our appetite will be further satisfied; in other words, that this foreign trade will grow.

Let us assume that war comes. What, then, shall we do? Shall we abruptly cut off that business and be done with it?

Of course, we shall not. If history repeats itself, and if our appetite is satisfied as consistently in the future as it has been in the past, we shall surrender anything and everything in preference to losing our advantage in the increased foreign trade in war supplies.

Mr. LOGAN. I believe the Senator has given more thought to this particular subject than has any other Senator. If the Senator can devise some plan to take all the private profit out of the sale of munitions of war except when it is for our own national defense, I will follow him to the end and help to enact such legislation if it can be devised.

Mr. NYE. I think such legislation is pending and has been for the last two sessions in the form of a proposed tax bill that was recommended by the Senate Munitions Committee, I think, without a dissent within the membership of the committee itself.

Mr. LOGAN. As I recall, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill favorably to the Senate and then I think it went to the Finance Committee, where it still is.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I merely desire to give the views of General Craig as to the general proposition of selling airplanes abroad, not with reference to any particular transaction.

Mr. NYE. Will the Senator give the page from which he is about to quote?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. From page 127 of the record:

General CRAIG. In reply to the Senator's inquiry—

I think he was referring to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]—

General CRAIG. In reply to the Senator's inquiry regarding the advantage we would derive from selling planes abroad, I think, and have thought before, that it is the soundest kind of a proposition for the United States to seek the placing of its airplane products in foreign markets. It would settle the question that has been brought up about maintaining work on a permanent basis in our factories. It settles the question, which is a terrible bugaboo, of obsolescence of planes. Germany's program of action is based on getting rid of obsolescent and surplus planes. Against that you have to balance the fact that the German workman will work 16 hours a day for a mark a day, day in and day out, while ours is a pretty highly paid man, and he works only a certain number of days a week and a certain number of hours a day, so that the plane which formerly cost about $50,000 has run up to over $200,000; and because this applies to everything concerned with that plane. That is why Germany can sell—I mean foreign nations in general can sell—their obsolete or obsolescent planes at prices with which we cannot compete. This presents a problem that we have not yet solved, but the idea Senator AUSTIN expressed is absolutely sound. That is a part of the President's policy—what he is driving at.

If I may impose on the Senator from North Dakota for a moment more, since Senators are interested in understanding the attitude of the Army with reference to the Douglas bomber plane, we find on page 172 questions and answers between the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye] and General Arnold; and, among other things, General Arnold says in reference to this and similar planes:

Some have since withdrawn, and some never proceeded further than the blueprint stage—

That is, those that might enter into the competition—

We know that the Glenn Martin Co. is building one; that the Stearman branch of the Boeing Co. has built one; that the North American Co. is building one; and that another company, the Douglas Co., had built one.

We find from what he says that what they call the Army specifications constitute a very general statement of what is required, including altitude, speed, and performance.

I should like to quote just a little more, if I may take the time:

Senator NYE. General, during the progress of the building of that particular bomber, did agents of the War Department have access to the construction, so as to make suggestions to be further built into that plane?

General ARNOLD. No. That was supposed to be the outgrowth of the ideas of the manufacturer. The War Department keeps its ideas out, pending the completion of the plane, so the manufacturer cannot say he received more or less help than another.

With two lines more I will stop. I read from page 130:

Senator AUSTIN. There had been no application for a license, therefore the Secretary of State has not been asked to move.

General CRAIG. The Government has no interest whatever in this plane, Senator. It might never have been supplied. The Government did not have one cent in it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I gladly yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to add to what the Senator from Wyoming has read certain testimony appearing on page 64, at which point I was interrogating General Arnold as to the newspaper account of the plane crash, and then I said:

That, General, was a Douglas plane, was it not?

General ARNOLD. Yes, sir; that was a Douglas attack bomber.

Senator CLARK. Which was the very latest word in American airplane construction, being prepared for the spring competition on the line?

General ARNOLD. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, the fact remains that it had never been put in competition. The time for competition had not arrived, and five or six different companies were all bidding on the planes and seeking to meet the general performance specifications. That is what General Craig stated.

Mr. NYE. There is one thing which I wish could be put in the RECORD of the Senate, and that is a picture of the faces of the military leaders at one stage of this proceeding, which so clearly portrayed their great displeasure at what had been done with respect to this Douglas bomber plane to which they were looking in such a large way, as indicated by the testimony which the Senator from Missouri has just read.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NYE. I gladly yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask the Senator the simple question whether or not there is anything in the policy of the Government which prohibits the selling of the same type of plane to either Germany or Italy?

Mr. NYE. No; there is nothing that would prohibit the sale of this type of plane, except that the sale of all planes is finally dependent upon the will of the State Department to release and license sales abroad.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, if the State Department—

Mr. NYE. And the War Department and the Navy Department.

Mr. LUCAS. If they issued the proper release or orders, any nation in the world could buy the same type of plane we are now discussing?

Mr. NYE. That is correct; but the truth of the matter is that with respect to some purchases, including, I understand, the purchase of all kind of aircraft, our State Department has rather thoroughly discouraged any sales to Japan.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NYE. Certainly.

Mr. LUCAS. That brings to my mind a part of the discussion which has been going on lately with respect to the time when this country ceased permitting planes or other war material to be sold to certain countries throughout the world. Can the Senator give me any information as to when, for instance, if this country did do such a thing, it ceased permitting the sale of planes or other war materials to Germany?

Mr. NYE. I cannot advise the Senator with any right of authority as to when, if ever, there was a cessation of the sale of planes to Germany.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I to understand, then, that there has been no prohibitive measure upon the part of the Department of State which prevents any nation of the world from buying war materials at the present time from this country?

Mr. NYE. Except, perchance, Japan.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me say that there is no law with reference to any sales to Japan.

Mr. NYE. No. We have just been discussing the question of cooperative arrangements between the State Department and the aircraft industry itself.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President—

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. In every discussion that I have listened to and heard anywhere in the country, and in every article that has ever appeared of which I am aware, the element of speed in an airplane has been stressed as an element of superior importance, of vital importance. I take it, the Senator agrees with that conclusion?

Mr. NYE. It is a very important element.

Mr. BONE. Therefore, if the United States has developed an airplane that is speedier than any other airplane in the world that is as much a valuable military secret as a bombing device, a sighting device, or any other so-called military secret.

Mr. NYE. That is quite true.

Mr. BONE. Does the Senator regard it as of equal importance to retain within the boundaries of this country a thing so vital as the element of speed as any other so-called and alleged military secret?

Mr. NYE. I think we should jealously guard against the loss of any such advantage as that would be.

Mr. BONE. Then why make fish of one and fowl of another? When the object is to develop the best possible plane for use in wartime, why stress bombing and sighting devices and other arrangements when of equal or greater importance is the element of speed? That is what I am getting at. I think it ought to be clear in our minds when we are discussing airplanes that the element of speed is as vital or possibly more vital than the ability to shoot straight with a machine gun from an airplane.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. Gladly.

Mr. LEE. I wish to pursue further the Senator's attitude with respect to the sale of materials to other nations. I take it the Senator would have no objection to selling cotton, for instance, to Japan, and yet cotton is used in war for making wadding; it is used for making the uniforms of soldiers. I cannot believe that the Senator would object at this time to our selling oil and gasoline to Japan, and yet they are used in war. I do not know whether the Senator would object to selling iron and steel in the rough or in the raw form; but, I take it, the Senator would not; and yet that is very important in the making of war materials. The Senator, then, comes to the question whether or not labor abroad will be employed to make those raw materials into the finished articles, or whether, when both nations, ours and the one to which we are selling are at peace we could employ that labor at home. I should like to have the Senator enlarge on that somewhat, and then in addition to that, the Senator might touch on the question whether, if we refuse to sell these commodities to other countries, does the Senator have the least idea that Japan, for instance, would not get them somewhere else and build up their base factories? I should like to have the Senator discuss further the question of the sale of raw materials to which he referred a while ago.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I am glad to respond in a brief way to the Senator's question.

There are some few supplies which, were the United States to deny their availability to Japan, Japan would have exceeding difficulty in possessing. One such is scrap iron. The United States is pretty nearly the sole source of supply for both Germany and Japan today.

The Senator, however, is asking whether I object to these sales today. I do object to them today.

Mr. LEE. Sales of cotton?

Mr. NYE. Yes; sales of cotton on any such basis as these countries are now buying it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. The existence of the conquest which Japan is making in China today constitutes a state of war. If the policy of neutrality had been invoked, we should not be supplying to Japan the materials of war. The items that do not come within the description or the category of munitions of war Japan would have to come and get, pay cash for and carry away, and take her chance in accomplishing delivery of them. Japan would be somewhat handicapped. It is difficult, however, to know where to draw the line in peacetime in supplying munitions of war.

It is true that cotton enters largely into the manufacture of munitions. I do not know why wheat should not be considered a very essential munition, strictly speaking, in time of war.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. NYE. It is hard to know where to draw the line. Today we rather have to confine ourselves to the line which was drawn in international law, determining what are and what are not, strictly speaking, munitions of war or implements of war.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, wheat and meat are the principal war munitions, or certainly are equal in importance to any other war munitions, because without bread and meat no nation can make war. The question I wanted to add to the questions of the Senator from Oklahoma, for the consideration of the Senator from North Dakota, is this: If we want to stop war, is it not equally important to stop exporting wheat and meat to these other nations, because without wheat and meat no nation can get very far in making war?

If we are going to stop selling various articles of American produce to other nations because they may be used for war purposes, I wonder where we are going to draw the line. Certainly I should not want to draw it at wheat, corn, meat, cotton, or other agricultural products; yet, if we follow the line of reasoning which the Senator has just laid down, in order to stop war more effectually, we must necessarily stop selling meat and corn and wheat.

Mr. NYE. I do not know what the Senator understood me as saying, but I have not professed friendliness to any program which would put a stop to supplies of food to nations at war. I should, however, while they are at war, place upon them the requirement to come and get the supplies.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be so, but if we furnish food, both meat and corn and wheat, to nations which are at war, we are virtually taking part in the war right then and there.

Mr. NYE. There is very definitely, however, this difference, if we are to hew to the line on which we started out. At least, if we sell food to those who engage in war, it is not going to be used to destroy the lives of our sons and the sons of others who may have to go forth some day to engage in war against those lands, as is true in the case in which we are selling them guns and powder and airplanes and what have you, all of which may some day be looking for an American target.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator be kind enough to yield again?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Is the Senator's objection to selling cotton, for instance, to Japan, based on the fact that Japan is now at war with China?

Mr. NYE. No; I have said, or tried to say, that it is very difficult to know where to draw the line as between munitions and raw materials that might enter into more than the manufacture of munitions.

Mr. LEE. Would the Senator sell cotton to France today?

Mr. NYE. Yes; there could be no objection to it in the absence of any law forbidding it, or any policy against it.

Mr. LEE. Why does the Senator object to selling airplanes to France?

Mr. NYE. For the reasons that I have taken pains to enumerate here this afternoon; for the reason that we are not making airplanes available to other nations alike.

Mr. LEE. Is not that a trade policy rather than a war policy?

Mr. NYE. Not at all.

Mr. LEE. We withhold or we sell. We have favorite nations. We sell what we want to, where we want to; do we not? Have we refused to sell airplanes to any other nation?

Mr. NYE. Yes; we have.

Mr. LEE. What nation?

Mr. NYE. Not strictly speaking, but we are denying and discouraging sales of airplanes to other nations.

Mr. LEE. I should like the Senator to give chapter and verse on that subject.

Mr. NYE. We are most definitely discouraging sales of airplanes to Japan today. The State Department has sought and has won the cooperation of practically all the aircraft producers in this country in that kind of a program.

Mr. LEE. But that nation is at war actually, if not technically.

Mr. NYE. No; it has not been acknowledged.

Mr. LEE. I understand that; but the nation is at war. Can the Senator name some nation not at war to which we have refused to sell airplanes?

Mr. NYE. No; I think our restriction upon plane manufacture is exclusively confined to Japan right now.

Mr. LEE. Then I fail to understand the Senator's objection to selling planes to France.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, to be specific, and to go over the same ground very briefly again, I object to the sale of planes to France if we are not selling to all alike, making planes available to all alike. There can be no objection to the sale of planes to France if we are selling no plane the sole possession of which is an advantage to the United States. I cannot object to the sale of planes to France if there is no evidence of alliance going beyond that sale. There can be no objection to the sale of planes to France if the sale does not hinder our own ability to produce our American requirements.

Those points I have made; and, in addition, I have made the further point that these sales abroad of planes are only building for us a monster that we are going to have to support through the years to come, an institution that will be crying for more and ever more of outlet for its supplies; and the more outlet we find for it abroad, the more we shall have to provide for ourselves.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. In view of the Senator's last statement, I should like to ask him whether or not there is in the hearing any evidence which discloses any alliance of America with France or any other country in connection with the sale of these planes?

Mr. NYE. No. A little later on I am going to give expression to my own belief that there is something of an unwritten understanding; at least, there is an alliance to the extent that finds certain foreign powers counting very strongly on our continuing cooperation, come what will in Europe.

Mr. LUCAS. Then, if I correctly understand the Senator, whatever his belief may be upon the question of alliance, it is based purely upon his own opinion and speculation?

Mr. NYE. There is no evidence, there is no testimony which can be pointed to, revealing that there is an alliance between this country and any other involving the possibility of cooperation in time of war.

Mr. President, the question now naturally arises, What is an adequate national defense? What do we need to feel secure in our provision of national defense? At least one voice has been raised in the Senate which would have us believe that on both the east and the west shores we are wide open to attack—a fear which I consider to be most preposterous.

Our worst fears in America seem to assume, first, a dictator victory in Europe, and also a Japanese victory in Asia; and, following that kind of victory, we base our fears upon the possibility of a joint operation against us by those forces to the east and those forces to the west. A terrible nightmare is created for some persons. I have heard some carrying on to such a point that we would be given to believe that tomorrow morning, or the next morning, we might expect a united operation by Japan, Italy, and Germany, against us, one from the west, the other two from the east. It is merely a terrible nightmare, I repeat, which some persons are suffering.

Mr. President, the truth of the matter is that, even though Japan, Germany, and Italy might be successful in what some persons insist they are undertaking to accomplish, it would be a matter of years and years and years before any one of them, or all of them combined, would dare leave their own front yards long enough to so much as threaten any part of America, to say nothing of threatening an attack upon the United States.

What is the danger of attack today? I have before me two articles appearing only this week in the New Republic. The first is an editorial entitled "War This Spring?" The editorial pursues the course which finds it revealing how dangerous is the situation confronting Hitler and Mussolini today, how very shaky is the position in which Japan finds herself today, there being a large question as to whether she will be able to continue her present operations.

The second article, written by Bruce Allen, appearing in the New Republic of March 1, is entitled "Inside Japan." I should like very much to have these two articles appear in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibits 1 and 2.)

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the point is very well made that we in the United States little need to fear an attack from the east or from the west. The problems with which those who are called potential foes are faced at this moment are problems which are going to hold them for years and years to come, if they themselves last through those years. All of them are engaging now in an economy, properly termed an "armament economy," and there must be, there certainly is, an end to the kind of course they are pursuing in their particular sections of the world.

Is there any likelihood of attack upon the United States? Is there any occasion, any need, for the fear that we are inadequately prepared for emergencies which might arise tomorrow, next month, next year, involving an attack upon the United States?

Mr. President, it takes approximately a million tons of shipping to transport an expeditionary force of 200,000 men with full equipment and adequate supplies. Which of all the nations upon this earth is prepared today to move upon us with any such strength as that? Is there danger of attack? There is not a bombing plane in the world today which can proceed, loaded with bombs, beyond 800 miles from its base, reach what it aims to reach, find its target, drop its bombs, and return to its starting point or base. There is no need for stampeding in this hour. There is ample opportunity for the United States to apprise itself of the actual dangers when they really develop and threaten our national defense.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very much inclined to agree with the statement the Senator has just made. I do not think we are in any danger of a war with a foreign country. I think the danger is very remote, certainly at this time it is very remote, and there is no use of our becoming upset about the statements which we read in various publications concerning the danger. However, I differ with the Senator about one matter. It seems to me that at this time our people ought to be permitted to sell all of their products which foreign people want to buy and are willing and able to pay for, probably with the exception of deleterious drugs, and that in like manner it would be to the best interests of the United States to buy such foreign products as we want and are able to pay for.

I believe that trade with foreign countries booming as much as possible all the time means more to our prosperity and happiness than anything else. It means prosperity and happiness to our people, and, instead of trying to cut down the number of articles which we sell abroad, I should like to have increased the quantity of American products which we can sell to our neighbors abroad. As the Senator has argued, I believe that the danger of war at this time is exceedingly remote, and that really it is not necessary for us to pay as much attention to the apprehension as we are paying.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator be kind enough to yield? He has been very patient.

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. LEE. I should like to say in connection with the observations made by the Senator from Tennessee—and I take it I am stating his attitude—that what he advocates in no wise means a contribution on the part of the United States to belligerent nations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Absolutely not.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator. I call to his mind, for example, the attitude and the record of this Government in that regard. When there was war in South America, the Chaco war between two South American countries, President Roosevelt, by Presidential proclamation, announced an embargo on the shipment of war materials to the two warring nations. Factories here were sending munitions to both sides, and the President announced an embargo. Led by this country, 18 nations declared similar embargoes in that case, and that war did not last long.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I am delighted that the Senator from Tennessee concurs in the belief that there is no occasion for fearing an attack upon us from abroad. The truth is, nevertheless, that a degree of fear has been caused to grip this country and its people. There is a feeling abroad on the part of some that we are not prepared for the emergency which is about to arise. Just what it is, just where it is coming from, we do not always seem to know, but there is a reign of fear upon us.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. After giving this whole subject the best consideration I could, my idea is that there is no prospect of our becoming involved in any war at this time. We may never become involved in any war. There is no chance for the nations ruled by dictators to attack us until France and England are destroyed, and there is a doubt whether the dictator countries could win a war with France and England. Even after such a war had been won, if it should be won, then it would be necessary for the totalitarian states, before they could attack us, to have naval bases and air bases somewhere on this continent; and it would take several years to establish such bases. In the meantime we prepare our national defense purely as a guaranty against something which may happen in the next 3 or 4 or 5 or 6 years. I share the Senator's belief that there is no nation on earth which can attack us at this time, or at any time in the near future.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I am most happy that the Senator concurs in that view and opinion. I think very definitely we in the United States are now parting with the fear which did reign supreme to a degree for some weeks. I think it is a healthy sign. We are thinking our way through this thing. We will be providing ultimately an adequate defense against a possible emergency such as that to which the Senator is referring.

In the light of what the Senator has said of the possibility, certainly not the probability but the possibility, of the dictators' success over France and England, if that danger continues to exist, how are we to appraise the weight of the danger today by comparison with the weight of the danger say 3 or 4 or 5 months ago, at the time of the Munich agreement? At that time there was a fear that Germany and Italy were prepared almost completely to wipe out with one swoop the two great cities, Paris and London, and that fear had a tendency to drive the bargain which was written at Munich at that time.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that is true.

Mr. NYE. Why in the world, if Hitler had all that advantage then, is he giving England and France all this time to catch up?

Mr. LOGAN. Let me answer that.

Mr. NYE. I should like to have the Senator answer it.

Mr. LOGAN. I express only my opinion, of course. A few months ago the United States appeared to be pretty thoroughly committed to neutrality by law, which I am against. It was believed, I think, by Hitler, and perhaps by Mussolini, that the United States was not going to prepare for war, and that if the United States did not begin to prepare, England and France would have no place to go to obtain the necessary munitions with which to carry on a war.

As soon as it was known that the United States was going to prepare, I think Hitler and Mussolini began to believe that our policy of neutrality was not as definite as they had been led to believe it was. For that reason there is a lessening of the tension in Europe today. There is not the same high degree of tension that existed even 2 weeks ago. I am very hopeful that the tension may completely pass. It may. I do not think we are in danger of any immediate attack. I am not at all certain now that Germany and Italy are going to attack France and England. It may be that the latter countries will make some more appeasement. Italy is demanding Corsica and some other places. I think France may yield before she will go into war over those questions. A nation can suffer much before it goes to war. In my judgment, a demand for property, or even the loss of a few lives, does not justify a nation to plunge its people into a great war.

Mr. NYE. I should have to disagree with the Senator in his conclusions, for I attribute the present seeming quieting down of things in Europe to quite another cause than our evident preparation in this country.

Mr. LOGAN. It may be due to internal dissensions. I cannot say.

Mr. NYE. I do not think the dictators themselves could for 1 minute afford to have a war today.

Mr. LOGAN. It looked as if there would be one before Munich, and I think there would have been one if England had not yielded.

Mr. NYE. I do not think the dictators themselves would have tolerated war for a minute if they could have found any other way around the situation.

Mr. LOGAN. Is it not true that in the history of the world no dictator has ever been able to continue his position as dictator without ultimately leading his people into war?

Mr. NYE. That has been true of dictators only.

Mr. LOGAN. It has not been true of other rulers.

Mr. NYE. No.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. As I understand the situation, the Senator from North Dakota is speaking of national defense. Was the Senator present in the Chamber yesterday when it was agreed on both sides of the Chamber that in the national-defense picture, or, rather, in our own picture, was the Monroe Doctrine; that it was still the law of the land and the law of America?

Mr. NYE. I was here then.

Mr. WILEY. Does the Senator concur with that agreement?

Mr. NYE. Yes, quite; and I have given voice today to a determination to provide that degree of national defense here in the United States which will place us in a position really to take care of whatever may be our defensive need in this hemisphere.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the question I wanted to ask was in relation to South America. The Senator knows the situation there. Does he think there is any danger in that direction from the dictator-ruled nations of Europe?

Mr. NYE. I think absolutely none, except as we Americans may, as we have so often done in the past, conduct a blind commercial policy there. We have got to begin to demonstrate to South America the real advantages which rest and lie with our form of government as against any other form they may be caused to look upon these days.

Mr. President, until the recent departure from that spirit of fear which gripped the country for so long, coolness and common sense have had anything but a right-of-way in our considerations. We have been fearing that we were unprepared for emergencies which might arise, and now, in light of all the preparing we have done, especially of more recent years, one is wont to ask when in the world we are ever going to be adequately prepared? Senators will remember that during these winter months representatives of the Government were talking, not of 5,500 and 6,000 planes, but of 10,000 planes or 15,000 planes, of 20,000 planes. Were we to have that number of planes today there would still be an element of the people who would be counting our national defense wholly inadequate.

A year or 2 years before we entered the World War, the war that was going to be the last war, it was costing us in the neighborhood of $300,000,000 a year to maintain a national defense. This year the cost will be close to $2,000,000,000; and yet as large a proportion of our people are dissatisfied, fearful about the adequacy of our national defense, as were dissatisfied back in 1913, 1914, and 1915.

I have greater respect today for the American Military Establishment than I have ever entertained before. Except for the manner in which our military leaders stood up last winter against odds and fought against some rather uncertain proposals, only Heaven knows what the Congress would be confronted with at this time. The Army can be said very definitely to have stopped a stampede that was on its way to a very definite goal.

As I have said, there has not been coolness and common sense entertained of late months. There has come through the winter the urge to repeal the neutrality law, or to amend it so as to give more power to someone to determine what the neutrality law ought to be made to operate against, or what it ought to be made to operate for—all of it all the while in the name of neutrality.

Mr. President, before men give themselves to the cause of repeal of the neutrality law, at least there ought to be willingness to afford the law a chance to demonstrate how much of a success it may be, or how much of a failure it may be. The truth of the matter is that it has not been given such a chance. There have been opportunities, there have been chances to invoke the neutrality law where it might have demonstrated itself, but that has not been done. In connection with consideration of any proposal to repeal or amend the neutrality law, I wish that Americans might remember what was the first purpose of that law. Its first purpose was to serve the interests of the United States at peace, and the interests of no foreign nation or nations at war.

Then, too, Mr. President, to demonstrate our uncertainty, the absence of any coolness, or the exercise of common sense, this winter has seen secret session after secret session, secret concealed operations after secret concealed operations, until the United States has been put in a state of jitters over what must be involved.

Calling the Military Affairs Committees of the two Houses together to hear the Ambassadors from London and Paris could not have had any other effect. I do not know what was its purpose, but it could not have had any other effect than to cause an uncertainty of mind, to open up the American mind, and make it ready to receive a terrific program of armament.

We have talked now of militarizing the Civilian Conservation Corps. We spend most madly for a peacetime preparation, when we cannot even hope to pay for such preparation out of the revenues of the Government being raised at this stage. We call every proponent of less hysteria "pro-Nazi." We make it difficult for critics to criticize any direction which might be pursued by our Government. Some people call the critics boobs and liars. When all the activities of this last winter are taken together one is inclined to look around and wonder where George Creel may be concealed somewhere. It is time now to be hearing about some intercepted secret documents passing between dictators and other republics of this hemisphere. It is about time to be hearing that the dictators are cutting the fingers off of children, and mutilating the bodies of mothers, women, and children in other parts of the world. That has been the stage which has been in the making this winter, it seems to me, and I for one am glad to see the American people catching up with it, and to see a breaking away, as we are witnessing a departure from the fear which has been gripping the country for a number of months past.

Mr. President, what is it we are aiming at by this proposal to build 5,500 or 6,000 planes? Why must we have that number of planes? What is it we are preparing for that requires any such national defense as that? One can only conclude that it must be the alleged preparation on the part of the dictatorships to conduct a war from the air. There is vast difference of opinion as to what is, for example, Germany's ability today.

Major Elliott, an authority, declares that it is his belief that Germany's maximum of air strength today is about 3,500 planes. Concurring with him in that opinion is a leading British air authority by the name of C. G. Gray, who also estimates Germany's air force at approximately 3,500 planes.

Recently I read an account of a debate in the French Chamber of Deputies, revealing the belief there that Germany possesses somewhere between 3,000 and 5,000 planes. In the United States we have had an education all this winter to the effect that Germany has at least 9,000 or 10,000 planes. Is that what we are aiming at? Mr. President, if Germany has 10,000 active combat planes, it does not follow that we, from the standpoint of providing an adequate national defense, must needs have 10,000 combat planes. If our home, instead of being the United States, were France or England, I could hardly be as content as I now am with a lesser air force. Yet were I a resident of England or of France, I should not feel that my country had to have 10,000 airplanes to defend itself against a potential enemy that had 10,000 airplanes. That point is conceded by French authorities, who, it seems, have abandoned the thought of trying to match, plane for plane, what Germany, her neighbor, has. The French are bent upon substituting quality for quantity and are quite content in their belief that they will be able successfully to repulse any attack which may come from a neighbor land.

Mr. President, the issue of national defense must of necessity involve primarily the question of foreign policy. It is difficult, if not impossible, for a Congress to provide a national defense if it does not know what the foreign policy is. I insist that this Congress does not know what is the foreign policy of the United States. I insist that from the standpoint of a strict national defense, protecting ourselves against attack, we are not in need of what some authorities are insisting we shall have in the name of national defense, unless those authorities have attached something more than a requirement of national defense to our foreign policy. We say there are no entangling alliances. As I said earlier today, I can point to none that my country has made with a foreign land. Yet I am wondering if there is any difference between entangling ourselves in foreign alliances and leading causes in which we seek to entangle other governments.

We are greatly disturbed about what certain dictatorships are making ready to do. Abroad, on the part of countries for which we are showing a large solicitation, there is comparative calmness; certainly not the same degree of fear that is being expressed in the United States. A few weeks ago the British Prime Minister stood calmly and deliberately before an audience and coolly said, in effect, that it was not Great Britain's ox that was being gored in Europe, but Uncle Sam's. He said that it was not John Bull who had the stakes in the ring, but that it was Uncle Sam whose stakes were involved.

The British Prime Minister said, in effect, that perhaps the time has come for Britain to stand with the United States in the cause of defending democracy the world over. It has one wondering, if there is to be another war, whose war it is to be, whether it is to be Britain's or whether it is to be ours. One would guess, if he listened to leadership abroad, that if there is to be another war for democracy, the war must be led by the United States, with the privilege in the United States, of course, of meeting the entire cost of operation.

I am more and more convinced that there will be no war in Europe this spring, this year, or next year, unless the United States encourages, urges, and eggs Europe on to it. There will be no war in Europe unless the United States shows a definite will to help out when war comes, and an inclination to finance it. There will surely be a war in Europe when the United States gives the word "go" and gives Europe reason to anticipate that the United States will be standing by and ready to go on when the hour comes.

Mr. President, certainly there can be, and certainly there have been, decent motives in criticizing our foreign policy. There has been no good excuse to resort to name calling by those who have been displeased by what critics have seen fit to say of our foreign policy. There has been room, and large room, for criticism. How well ought we to remember another day when the air was filled with assurances that we would not go to war; that war would be our last resort. How well should we be able to remember, as the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] pointed out today, that it was only a matter of days after a people had rallied to those who had kept us out of war before those who had kept us out of war led us into war. The American people have the right, and the American Congress has the duty, to ascertain and determine what our foreign policy shall be.

I have previously spoken of our well-known appetite for the profit which might be available from other people's wars and their preparation for them. I shall not cover that ground again, except to remark that the exchange of official correspondence between officials of the United States Government in the years and the months preceding our entry into the war did not consist of communications gravely concerned with questions of democracy, or ending war, or winning freedom of the seas. Those communications were primarily devoted to the subject of how America could maintain the tremendous prosperity which was hers by reason of the war in progress in Europe. Step by step we let our appetite drag us into that war with which we were swearing we would have nothing to do—a "war to save democracy."

All this winter we have been importuned to become excited again about the thing that confronts democracy the world over. I could not help but be amused and rather pleased by a bit of correspondence which I found in a North Dakota newspaper, in the form of a letter written by one who had a rather keen sense of humor, a veteran of the last war. This correspondent expresses very well what is largely in the public mind on the subject of our not being afraid to fight for worth-while causes, such as democracy. Observing a newspaper dispatch which represented a United States Senator as saying that the American people hated war, but were not afraid to die for Christianity, morality, justice, and liberty, this writer took his pen in hand and wrote as follows:

Bully for you, Senator. I just want to let you know that I and every other red-blooded American is 100 percent behind you when you tell those dictator bullies we aren't afraid to fight.

I can close my eyes now, Senator, and see you and me side by side in the front-line trenches blowing the guts out of those damned Germans and Italians who don't appreciate the blessings of democracy. We'll teach 'em to love liberty if we have to shove it down their throats on the point of a bayonet.

Don't mind if we get our faces shot away, Senator, because you and I will have the happy consolation of knowing we struck a telling blow for international justice and morality. The armless and legless veterans who made the world safe for democracy in 1917 and 1918 will know whereof I speak.

By the way, what are we going to do with Germany after we win the war? She must never again be a menace to us liberty-loving people. We had the right idea at Versailles, but we just didn't carry it far enough. So this time we'll just carve Germany in two. You take half and I'll take half, and democracy will be safe as hell. And think how rich we'll be.

THOUSAND PERCENT AMERICAN.

Mr. President, that is the kind of straight thinking that is running through many American minds these days.

We failed completely 20 some years ago to accomplish those things which we are now saying need salvaging. We failed completely and miserably, and took upon our backs in this land a burden that the present generation is not going to be able to shed. Yet, with all this burden, with all this misery that we are enduring, with all the domestic problems that are awaiting solution, here we are talking ourselves into the belief that the time is fast approaching when we must do all over again the job which we failed so miserably to accomplish in our last effort.

Mr. President, until we can have clear knowledge of what sides are to be drawn in the next war, until we can know what the issue and the causes may be, the people have a right to expect a foreign policy so conducted as to be divorced from anything resembling the easing of the United States into another foreign war.

Some are asking, Why do people doubt our policy? To me the answer is easy to find. If the President's policy is misunderstood or misrepresented perhaps the reason is to be found in its obscurity, in its contradictions, and in a need for clarification. The people have large stakes tied up in whatever may be our foreign policy. We may call our Congress an all-powerful institution when it comes to determining when the United States shall engage in another foreign war, but there can be such conduct of foreign relations as to leave no alternative to the Congress other than that of declaring war. The people of this country have a right to be concerned, and they are concerned today, about the conduct of our foreign policy. They have a right to doubt the wisdom of a policy which causes a foreign nation to feel that we are promoting a world cause and are inviting other nations to join in the fight. We talk of the need of rallying to the side of England and France in defense of democracy; but we are startled to find Premier Chamberlain, in a cool and deliberate manner, telling the House of Commons that England might give consideration to joining the Roosevelt program to defend democracy.

The people naturally wonder about a foreign policy that lets our country be a party with England and France, to a process in Spain, that can only enlarge the power of the dictatorships that we pretend so much to fear and insist must be stopped. What dictatorships is it we do not like? What democracies are there that we do not like? What is it all about?

The most recent public pronouncement of foreign policy produces among others these words:

We are in favor of the maintenance of world trade for everybody, all nations, including ourselves.

Can this mean anything other than that, in the event of war abroad, we are going once again to insist upon that which does not exist in time of war, namely, freedom of the seas? I insist that any such policy is an immediate invitation to war, and there is a right to question any such foreign policy.

Let me read another line from the pronouncement of the President at his press conference some weeks ago, when he declared it to be our policy peacefully to "maintain political, economic, and social independence of all nations in the world." This can mean anything or nothing. Certainly it can mean that we are electing ourselves the world's policeman.

Our foreign policy for some months has been calling upon our Government and some of its agents to "make faces" and call names across the Atlantic. Why wonder that people should concern themselves about what is our foreign policy?

What of the policy adopted by those who ask us now to start fortifying Guam, almost immediately after the very same people have enthusiastically sponsored our separation from the Philippines, where we already have an $80,000,000 fortification and preparation? If our foreign policy is one requiring this action, how many more islands thousands of miles away must we ultimately fortify in order to protect Guam, which is to be fortified for the purpose of protecting the Philippines? People wonder.

A very interesting article on the subject of the fortification of Guam has been prepared, Mr. President, by Admiral Rivers, which I should like to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article may printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit 3.)

Mr. NYE. People are naturally asking why should we, the world power that least needs to fear attack, more happily armed with natural defenses against attacks than any other power upon this earth—why should we be asked to be in the front line of the present armament race, unless, Mr. President, perchance, it is for the purpose of being ready to respond to the need of pulling the chestnuts of other nations out of the fire as those chestnuts may become involved the world over?

Why should not people be anxious, Mr. President, about our foreign policy when they discover that knowledge concerning angles of that policy is dependent upon the crash of a bomber plane from the sky, revealing secret undertakings, secret methods of making what might otherwise appear to be ordinary commercial sales of aircraft to other lands?

Why should not people ask what is our foreign policy when overnight they hear expression of foreign policy so completely changed, as it was something more than a year ago, when one day found the maker of American foreign policy lauding the course of neutrality to the skies and the next evening found him giving utterance to his challenging quarantine speech, which was a complete departure from the purpose and the cause of neutrality? Why should not people wonder about our foreign policy when they discover the seeking after profits and gains now available because of other peoples' wars? Why should not people wonder about our foreign policy when they see backs turned now upon domestic problems and eyes guided only in the direction of what they are caused, or what some want to be caused, to believe is the direct and first challenge from foreign fields?

Why should they not be concerned when there is so much to be dealt with here at home? Why should not the people be concerned about what is our foreign policy when they find a form of economic sanction applied to one party, at least one party, in a general war? Certainly any action such as that is sure to lead ultimately to participation by the United States.

David Darrah, a European correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, sends to his newspaper, under date of February 20, from London a very interesting dispatch revealing what England thinks might be our foreign policy. Mr. Darrah, in his communication, says:

Europe still was mystified about President Roosevelt's announcement that disturbing world news might force him to curtail his cruise with the American fleet. Many explanations were offered. The most favored explanation seemed to connect the announcement with the trans-Atlantic telephone talk Mr. Roosevelt may have had with Ambassador Kennedy after the latter saw Chamberlain on Friday.

Diplomatic observers said they suspected Mr. Roosevelt's thunderings against the dictators were being used by Britain and France in their dealings with Franco. The Anglo-French envoys are believed to have invoked Mr. Roosevelt's threats in an effort to induce Franco to grant mild terms to the republicans [Loyalists].

KENNEDY PRIVILEGED VISITOR

One reads and hears in Europe these days that the British cabinet pays as much attention to America as it does to British public opinion. An afternoon newspaper commented that Kennedy is a privileged character at Chamberlain's official residence at No. 10 Downing Street. It is said he can go there whenever he likes while no other ambassador would seek an interview with the prime minister without a very special reason—that is other ambassadors would call at the foreign office.

Naturally there is some diplomatic speculation as to how much Washington, D. C., is being used as a cat's-paw in all this. The ambassador's son, Joseph, Jr., was reported by a London newspaper to be visiting in Madrid looking for "crises." He went as far as Valencia in a British warship.

Mr. President, I wonder what would have been our reaction if the Ambassador's son in that foreign war vessel had been destroyed in some military encounter on the way to Valencia.

The dispatch goes on:

The opinion is swelling here that not only the resources of the Dominions but of the United States will be behind this country in any war.

I submit that the American people have a right to wonder what is our foreign policy when they get reports like that from abroad.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator tell from what he is reading?

Mr. NYE. I am reading from a dispatch to the Chicago Tribune from London by David Darrah.

Mr. MINTON. I am not a mindreader, but I could tell from sitting over here that that quotation was from the Chicago Tribune. Surely nobody would be much disturbed about the opinions of the Chicago Tribune regarding the foreign policy of this country or anything else.

Mr. NYE. I am not disturbed about the opinions of the Chicago Tribune. I am disturbed about the opinions of those who are abroad and are sending dispatches to the Chicago Tribune or to any other newspaper.

Mr. MINTON. One would not be much disturbed when he knows what the policy of the Chicago Tribune is. One would not worry much about our foreign policy when he views it in the light of the policy of the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the people have a right to take definite alarm about our foreign policy when they observe the matter in which the plane sale to France was negotiated under a veil of secrecy.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator again made reference to the plane sale to France. I understood the Senator earlier in the discussion to say that the sale of planes to France was all right; that he had no objection to it.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I am not going back over that ground again. If the Senator has been here this afternoon, he knows that I said I had no objection to the sale of planes to France if this were true, and that were true, and this were pursued, and that policy were followed, none of which were.

Mr. CONNALLY. I know what the Senator said, and that is why I am asking the question. If the sale of planes to France was not wrong, as the Senator earlier in his speech said it was not wrong, what difference does it make?

Mr. NYE. I do insist that the sale of this particular plane to France was wrong, was in violation of the best spirit of America's military authorities and their desire to safeguard the interests of America.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. A few moments ago the Senator made the statement that war would not come in Europe, either this year or next year—

Mr. NYE. That is my opinion.

Mr. LUCAS. Unless the United States of America in some way, through some one, said the word "go." Sitting here, listening to that statement, I consider it a very serious one; and I think the Senate as well as the country at large would be glad to have the Senator from North Dakota develop that statement.

I hope I did not misunderstand the Senator. If I did, I apologize to him.

Mr. NYE. No; I said it was my opinion that there would be no war in Europe this spring or this year or next year unless Europe had reason to believe that the United States would be ready to assist in the prosecution of a war if it came.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not want to disagree with the Senator's statement; but, as I recall, the able Senator from North Dakota distinctly said that there would be no war in Europe, either this year or next year, unless the United States of America said the word "go." To me that was a rather serious statement; and if the Senator has any information from anyone or from any source as to just how the United States of America or the present administration is going to give the word "go," I, for one, should like to know about it.

Mr. NYE. No, Mr. President; I am not prepared to say that anyone in America has intimated to Europe that the word "go" will be spoken; but I repeat my firm conviction that Europe is not going to have war this year or next year unless and until one side involved in Europe can have assurance that the United States is going to stand ready to assist them in that war.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. NYE. They are not able to finance a war. They are not able to carry it on. I do not believe the dictatorships want war any more than the democracies do; and yet the democracies, having suffered these humiliations of recent months, would be quite apt, if they could have the least bit of encouragement over here, to accept the next challenge and go to war.

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NYE. I yield first to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I think the Senator will agree with me that under no circumstances does the United States of America want to engage in a foreign war with any European power. If that be true, the United States is not going to give the word "go," nor is it going to do anything to encourage Europe in embarking on a war which will involve all the nations of that continent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am interested, as is the Senator from Illinois, in the statement of the Senator from North Dakota that he believes there will be no European war unless encouragement is given by us to one side or the other; and, of course, we all know that if one side or another should receive any encouragement from us in the stimulation of its intestinal fortitude or its backbone in resisting aggression, it would not be the dictators.

I am not advocating any encouragement from us, and I certainly am not advocating that we give the word "go" to anybody in Europe to wage war; but does the Senator mean that in the absence of any sort of encouragement or sympathy from us, or any act, legal though it may be, in making our industrial facilities available to one side in Europe, the so-called democracies, Great Britain and France, would be compelled to continue to retreat at the demand of the aggressors demanding certain things, so that without any war the aggressors would get what they wanted?

Mr. NYE. No; I do not think so.

Mr. BARKLEY. How does the Senator mean, then, that if we offer no encouragement to one side, the other side will not continue to press for advantages?

Mr. NYE. In the first place, I believe that all the gains which have been made by the dictatorships in Europe have been made by pure and simple bluff; that had the democracies stood their ground locally, there would not have been any such humiliation as they have had to face and deal with since that time.

Mr. BARKLEY. That may be true, but the ability of one side to bluff the other grew out of a lack of readiness to meet the bluff, so that if it were called, and the other side really went to war, they would be ready. They were compelled to permit the bluff on one side because they were not able to read the mind of the bluffer to the extent of knowing whether, if they called the bluff, they would actually call it, and there would be no conflict, and they would stand up.

In a similar situation, or one that was even analogous to that situation, if that policy should continue anywhere in the world—and our minds are particularly on Europe and Asia; more so on Europe, I think, because it is closer to us—if that policy should continue indefinitely because of a lack of readiness to meet the bluff, so that those who are out after what they have not got, and what others have, should succeed in getting it, I myself am wondering, and I think it is a legitimate wonder, how long it would be before we should be confronted with the same situation, in which we should have either to stand up and fight or to yield and retreat.

Mr. NYE. If that situation were to come about, it would be a long, long time before it reached us; but I think the democracies in Europe have ceased their moment of fear and readiness and willingness to respond to the demands of the dictatorships, and are ready to stand their ground; that we have heard the last of the matter unless we are ready now to give encouragement to another rush into war in Europe.

Quite naturally, Mr. President, remains the question of the alliances, if any; how much understanding exists between our Government and that of France.

The answer comes at once from every hand, "None, none"; but the French Air Minister, who has been negotiating airplane purchases here, seems to have won a rather definite understanding of American purpose at least. There is conflict in the reports of what he said in the Chamber of Deputies in France the other day.

An early edition of the New York Times of February 1, carrying a dispatch from Paris under the heading "French Chamber Cheers President," quoted the Air Minister of France, speaking before the Chamber, as follows:

I cannot permit this deal in America to be attacked. Our contracts in America are meeting our entire satisfaction. And I take this opportunity of thanking the great American democracy and its leader, President Roosevelt, for the way they have shown that they are thinking of only one thing in this matter—how best to serve France.

Within a space of 2 hours there was a change in that quotation. In a subsequent edition of the New York Times of the same day that paragraph read as follows:

I cannot permit this deal in America to be attacked. Our contracts in America are meeting our entire satisfaction. And I take this opportunity of thanking the great American democracy and its leader, President Roosevelt, who has realized that in serving France he is serving peace.

Mr. President, the existence of that discrepancy, or that change, prompted me to make inquiry of the editor of the New York Times concerning the cause, and under date of February 14 I had a letter from the managing editor, Edwin L. James, clearly depicting what had occurred. I am going to ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD, but, in a word, it developed that the reporter who was reporting the proceedings in the French Chamber had wrongly quoted the Air Minister, and sent this corrective dispatch shortly after having sent his first news concerning the exchange.

I ask that this letter of explanation by the managing editor of the New York Times be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKellar in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NEW YORK TIMES,
Times Square, February 14, 1939.

The Honorable GERALD P. NYE,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR NYE: I must ask you to pardon me for not having answered sooner your letter of February 8, in which you ask why, in a story from Paris printed February 1, we changed between editions a quotation credited to the French Air Minister, M. La Chambre. The reason for the delay was that the copy reader who handled that story and who made the change was not immediately available.

The reason for the change is quite simple:

The first dispatch we received, which reached us at 9:17 p. m. January 31, quoted M. La Chambre in the manner recorded in our first-edition story; namely, "And I take this opportunity of thanking the great American democracy and its leader, President Roosevelt, for the way they have shown that they are thinking of only one thing in this matter—how best to serve France." At 10:43 p. m. on the evening of January 31, we received a correction from our Paris office reading as follows: "Make La Chambre quotation 'great American democracy and its leader, President Roosevelt, who has realized that in serving France he is serving peace.'"

The change was made accordingly.

From long experience in Paris, I am presuming that what happened is that a reporter in the press gallery, which is very badly situated from the point of view of acoustics, understood the speaker as he was quoted in the first dispatch, and that then, when our Paris bureau obtained the stenographic report, it made the correction.

Should it serve your purpose, I am quite ready to send you photostats of these two cables referred to. But they will not add anything to the information herein contained.

Very truly yours,

EDWIN L. JAMES, Managing Editor.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Is it the Senator's idea that if we pass a reasonable defense bill it will lend aid and assistance to any of the peoples of Europe?

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, that depends altogether upon whether there shall be cause anywhere in Europe to believe that our preparation here is for something more than a strictly national defense.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator referred to a discrepancy in this dispatch from a reporter in Paris in an early edition of the Times and a later edition.

Mr. NYE. And I intend to discuss that further.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator was prompted to inquire about it, I suppose, as a result of his curiosity as to whether the correction had been made on suggestion of someone in Washington?

Mr. NYE. Someone in the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Someone in the United States; and the reply the Senator got was that the correction was initiated in Paris by the man who made the mistake?

Mr. NYE. By the correspondent of the newspaper himself. My interest in this matter went beyond that and I asked the Library of Congress to send me, when it received the report of the proceedings of the Chamber of Deputies for that particular day, a translation of that portion of the record devoted to this particular quotation, for my information. The Library went further than that, and translated what appears to be the entire proceedings of that day in the French Chamber of Deputies.

I received this translation only yesterday morning. It proves, to say the least, most interesting to me, for I discover that whereas we here in Congress have been wondering and asking day by day, What was the Treasury of the United States doing in this plane transaction? and asking again and again, Was there any issue of financing; was there any issue of credits involved in this transaction?—while we have been asking those questions, in the French Chamber of Deputies they have been asking, Why this order? There has been involved in France, too, a degree of secrecy. If we read the proceedings we plainly see that they are not permitted to talk freely upon some things.

Armand Pillot, a member of the Chamber, rising on the day referred to—February 1, I believe it was—in the presence of the Minister of the Air Service, said in part as follows:

I am not quite sure that this new request will be carried out before putting into operation a plan of manufacturing them in France.

Meaning the planes for which the Air Minister was calling for appropriations.

This leads me to make two remarks on the matter: First of all, it is evident that in purchasing abroad it is necessary to export currency. The Finance Minister, who has planned to defend the franc, will realize that the franc is not defended by exporting currency. On the other hand, our country has quite a few unemployed. In purchasing material which is manufactured abroad and not allowing the work to be done by our workmen, one condemns them to unemployment.

An order has gone forth to Holland for 70 Kolower.

Which, I take it, is the name of the plane manufactured in Holland.

I wish that these apparatuses had the qualities that one might expect in material construction in France, and that they would do the same service and satisfy the same safety regulations.

That, however, is not the case. The 30 Kolower carried out disastrous tests at Cazaux and they were so bad that the Army pilots refused them.

As regards the American Curtiss planes, Colonel Wesser has criticized certain points.

It is necessary to pursue a stricter policy; which means that our aeronautic industries must not be disorganized.

The whole point of this argument was a criticism of the purchase of planes from abroad because it denied the chance to further develop their own capacity in France to supply their needs, and for the further reason that buying abroad would mean that the French would have a plane without the possibility of ready repairs, such as would be available if the plane were manufactured in France.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. All of which proves that human nature is the same the world over.

Mr. NYE. Quite.

Mr. BARKLEY. The French deputy was making a speech, probably for home consumption, criticizing the purchase of anything abroad, just as we hear speeches on the floor of the Senate criticizing the purchase of anything abroad for the consumption of the American people. I do not suppose the Senator would be able to tell us whether the particular French deputy was a critic of the Government somewhat in the manner the Senator himself is a critic of this administration, whether he was in sympathy with or approved it, or whether he spoke on his own individual responsibility as a member of the Chamber of Deputies. Can the Senator enlighten us about that?

Mr. NYE. I have not had a chance to study the translation sufficiently to enable me to know what the man's relationship to the Government was. I only know that it appears evident, from the proceedings, that he got a response from not only one side of the Chamber but from several sides of the Chamber.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the trend of his remarks is a criticism of his own government for purchasing planes here?

Mr. NYE. That is correct, and we will see a little later on for what reason.

Seventeen billion francs have been assigned to the air budget. Now, we have told the Aeronautics Commission that France could not expect that its industries for aeronautical constructions turn out material worth seventeen billion francs.

Then this remark appears to be directly to the French Ministry of Air:

Has not this demand been made for the purpose that the Finance Minister could carry out a certain financial policy, and is it for this purpose that orders were placed in Holland for airplanes which give no satisfaction to those who are supposed to use them? Was it done for the purpose of making possible the conversion of a loan? I know nothing of it, I merely ask the question.

Is it that the purchases of planes in America constitute merely some sort of exchange money?

I wish that they would give us some explanation on that point.

The Air Minister finally responded to these criticisms from the floor of the Chamber. His answer was anything but explicit, it seems, not satisfying to those who had raised the question of the purchase of planes abroad, those who had asked just what issue was involved, what credit or what financial question might be a part of the consideration.

Then, finishing his explanation, Pierre Beranger, another member of the chamber, rose and said:

Mr. Minister, I regret that you could ever believe that I wanted an exhaustive debate on national defense. You know that this is not possible, for since last year this right is denied us. I only want to ask a question in regard to a technical problem which concerns foreign orders for airplanes. You have answered my remarks in a way which I regret, for we have not fought these foreign orders. You have stated the problem in committee in the following terms: "I must stop a gap at this time. I am compelled to order 100 airplanes abroad."

He stated then that if you could not find any other way we would not oppose this plan of yours. But is it possible right now you are bound by engagement in connection with the equipment which you left in America and that you are obliged to amortize by means of new orders in that country?

Mr. President, I read these excerpts to the end only that there may be knowledge here in the Senate that in the French Chamber of Deputies there is question as to what was behind this placement of orders for air supplies in the United States.

I regret that the interruptions of the afternoon have occasioned my taking as much of the time of the Senate as I have taken. In conclusion I once again wish to voice my desire to see the United States of America afforded an adequate national defense sufficient to repulse any attack by any foreign foe or group of foes, to repulse any attack upon the North American Continent or the South American Continent; but I insist there is no threat inviting the degree of madness which is involved or has been involved this winter in our consideration of the question of providing an adequate national defense.

I am not disposed to believe that America needs 5,000 or 6,000 planes. Where is the threat that is calling for such an outlay, for such a number of planes within the next 2 years? I fail to see it. I wish and I hope that somehow opportunity will be afforded to win rather material amendments to the pending bill that will reduce the number of planes to be built under the present plan for national defense to such a point that we can have consistent output within the next year at least, and then be sure that we are not tying our hands in such a way that a year from now we will find ourselves with a lot of obsolete planes on our hands, when new devices are ready for development which would give us the greatest advantage if only we could possess ourselves of them then.

WAR THIS SPRING?

Alarmist reports from Europe have recently trickled into the news. Sir Willmot Lewis, Washington correspondent of the London Times, said in a radio broadcast that he had heard from usually well-informed sources in London that Germany is beginning a new mobilization, which will be completed early in March. Mr. William Philip Simms, foreign editor of the Scripps-Howard papers, stated in a featured article that German businessmen in this country and Latin America had been warned by their connections in the Reich to be prepared for an international show-down this spring. Italy would press her Mediterranean claims against France, Germany her desired hegemony over Rumania and Hungary in preparation for an advance on the Ukraine, and Japan her demand for the Maritime Provinces of Siberia. While Mr. Simms did not vouch for the rumor, he reported that if this occurred, it would be accompanied by threats of force and another war scare.

President Roosevelt, off for his vacation to watch the Caribbean naval maneuvers, said he might be compelled to return early by the critical international situation. Correspondents from Asia write that Japan is rushing troops to the Manchukuo frontier, and the war party is pressing for immediate action against Russia, while the Japanese Diet adopts a belligerent attitude.

Some light on the prospects may be thrown by our knowledge of the internal situation in the three aggressor nations. The article in this issue of the New Republic, Inside Japan, indicates the discontent resulting from the economic hardships of the people. Japan is having more and more difficulty in mustering the purchasing power abroad necessary to obtain imports of raw materials. Italy is known to be in serious economic straits, and the strain of her war economy is at last beginning to tell on the patience of her people, disappointed in the results of the Ethiopian conquest. For the moment they are being cajoled by the glory of the victory in Spain, but no real alleviation of their burdens is likely to flow from this adventure. But it is in Germany, the leading member of the alliance, that the most significant facts appear. Without Germany's help Italy certainly would not attack France, and Japan would hesitate to attack the Soviet Union.

A letter to the London Economist (January 28, 1939) from Mr. Thomas Balogh, a well-informed authority, provides an illuminating summary of the status of the German economy. Ever since Hitler came to power, Germany has been spurring her output to build a war machine, calling upon reserves of unemployed men and capital to do so. By the middle of 1938 the reserves of labor and equipment came to an end. Schacht's financial miracles could do no more, because the physical plant had reached its peak. Any further increase in armaments must be paid for by more drastic reduction in the standard of living.

Instead of using its additional resources of gold, foreign currency, and materials obtained by the Anschluss with Austria and by the victory of Munich to relieve the strain on the population, Germany has employed them in military purchases—the accumulation of excess stocks of raw materials and foodstuffs from abroad, the expansion of the army and air force, the two mobilizations, and the new fortifications. The conquered reserves are approaching exhaustion, and therefore Germany will have to pay for her imports solely by exports. But her exports have dropped severely in recent months. Greater Germany now has a sizable foreign-trade deficit.

From other sources we learn that, in spite of long hours, labor productivity in Germany has sharply declined. The workers are going stale. After Munich, the population awoke to their narrow escape from a general war, and shuddered. Discontent is prevalent. It does not, of course, have any effective means of expression under the dictatorship, but further hardships, without new psychological compensation, can only spread and deepen it.

Opposite inferences as to future policy may be drawn from these facts. One is that the totalitarian powers, knowing their internal weakness, would not invite a general war in which, if it were long, defeat would be certain. The other is that since their preparation is at its high point and their strength as compared with that of their probable enemies will now begin to decline, they will choose this time to strike.

Mr. Balogh inclines to the pessimistic view. The policy of increasing Germany's military striking power "to the utmost degree in the shortest possible time" even at the risk of serious social tension at home and some loss to the popularity of the regime" is, he says, "sinister, since it suggests a desire to solve external political problems before any attempt is made to solve the domestic economic problems." The government could if it wished, he points out, increase the standard of living considerably by curtailing its armament. The Economist editorially supports this view. "All the evidence," it writes, "suggests that every industrial, financial, and technical reserve is being depleted for one gigantic effort. Germany's striking power is being deliberately raised to a peak which could not be excelled, and could hardly be maintained in time of war itself. For what purpose?"

Prediction is dangerous, but we have a guess to offer. It has never been Hitler's intention to risk everything in a general war, at least not unless and until he was strong enough to be sure of winning it. He may just possibly believe that a general war could be won in a few weeks or months. But in any case he prefers to pick off his objectives one by one, and to deal with one enemy at a time. For this purpose it is useful to make his opponents believe that there is danger of war, and that he will not shrink from it if balked in his purposes. As long as Britain is in the appeasement mood, he will continue to press his advantage by the same methods which have already proved so miraculously successful in foreign policy. Another war scare would serve his purposes well. But it would be employed to gain political concessions rather than in a last and desperate effort to conquer by force of arms while there is still time.

Hitler, shrewd as he is, is no economist. The dismissal of Schacht indicates that quite possibly he believes Germany can go on with arms expansion and raise the standard of living at the same time. In a disordered mind like his, the main purposes are unalterably fixed; the economic and human material with which he has to deal is subordinate and must serve them. It is likely that he will not believe that Germany has reached a peak of internal strength and must hereafter decline. He will instead believe that another political victory will provide the resources necessary for still further advance. Therefore his calculations may not fix Der Tag in the near future. The chances favor, we suspect, another widely advertised war crisis and another surrender by the western democracies rather than a surprise attack. If the democracies unexpectedly stand firm, Hitler may strike. But he would be as likely to bide his time.

If, however, Japan should decide to fight now or never for Siberia, that would be another story. For Stalin is no Chamberlain.

[From the New Republic of March 1, 1939]

INSIDE JAPAN

To the disappointment of the Japanese Army, the capture of Hankow and Canton, after 16 months of war, failed to jack up the nation's flagging war spirit. Despite the efforts of hundreds of newsmen, photographers, special broadcasters, novelists, poets, and painters dispatched to the fronts to record the triumphal entry of the Mikado's forces into the two cities, there was no genuine public jubilation over the "victories." The Japanese people are sick of the war.

Japan badly needs peace. But there is no reason to think that she will get it for some time. China, determined and able to fight on for years, took the fall of Hankow and Canton as the signal for the second phase of the war—a campaign of attrition—which will prove more exhausting to Japan than her last 20 months of conquest. The Japanese Army must continue to fight. From now on there will be few chances for Japanese "victories" which the press can play up at home. Chinese military leaders have officially abandoned positional warfare in favor of nation-wide guerrilla, hit-and-run attacks, the kind of fighting the Japanese soldiers fear most. The war, which the army "sold" to the Japanese people on the assurance that it would be nothing more than a comparatively easy, 3-month romp through China's northern provinces, is now well into its second year and the end is nowhere in sight. Time is on China's side.

Faced with the demand that they make more and more sacrifices, the Japanese people are cautiously attempting to make their real feelings known. The great sufferers are the peasant and fisher folk of the backward northern district of Japan, who get none of the war-boom wages and must pay exorbitant prices for their manufactured articles, many of which are now made of substitute materials. The extreme poverty of these regions has forced thousands of peasants to sell their daughters to the Yoshiwara quarters of the large cities, where an attractive girl-child of 13 or 14 brings 200 to 300 yen ($54 to $81), often enough to keep the whole family supplied with rice for a year. Last year three times the usual number of little girls were sold. Many of them have been organized into "hostess corps" and sent to China where they serve the Japanese troops in areas where Chinese women are not too plentiful.

The underfed, overworked Japanese peasant has always been an easy mark for tuberculosis, but this year, because the largest and best part of the nation's food supply has gone to the army, epidemics of trachoma, cholera, Well's disease (akin to typhoid), and tuberculosis are running through the rural population.

The only workers to get immediate benefit from the war are the munitions workers. Public resentment against the way these workers were spending their money on the geishas and the juju girls recently moved Asahi, Japan's largest newspaper, to conduct a survey of armament workers. Their high wages, Asahi found, were not going to the geishas, but were being invested in government bonds—where they went right out to help pay for the $4,000,000-a-day war. Nevertheless, Japan's Minister of Finance gloomily admitted a few weeks ago that the registered geisha girls, who are paid by the hour, had been employed twice as much in 1938 as in 1937. These amusements and all others the government wants to curtail, for the whole nation must save to make the "spiritual mobilization" campaign effective.

The chief target of most Japanese complaints is the national mobilization law, most sections of which are now in effect, allowing the Government to regiment the production and consumption of the nation to its own desires. Under this law the import of raw materials necessary for commercial production—leather, wool, iron, rubber, etc.—is prohibited in order to save foreign exchange for the purchase of war materials. As a result, the industries engaged in making peacetime products have had to shut down or curtail operations. One of the largest was the Fukusuke Hosiery Manufacturing Co., which had to throw its 5,000 employees out of work. It is estimated that when all the reserve stocks of raw materials for peacetime goods are used up, 1,300,000 workers will be out of jobs. About half of these can be assimilated into munitions and wartime industry, but seven or eight hundred thousand will still be unemployed. With their families, there will be two or three millions without income.

By the end of 1938 over 15,000 people had been arrested for violating the mobilization law. These included not only small shopkeepers and dissatisfied consumers but directors of large industrial concerns and some Government officials, who were convicted of taking bribes from businessmen anxious to avoid the restrictions. The citizens of Tokyo recently determined to buy up all the genuine materials in the stores before the flood of substitute goods was put on the counters, and crowded the stores far into the evening. A section of the act was imposed which required shopkeepers to close for the day at 10 p. m. For a few nights they obeyed. Then, forced by public pressure to continue selling, they devised a means to beat the law. They closed for the day exactly at 10 p. m., but reopened for the next day at 1 minute after midnight. The Government soon clamped on an airtight regulation and Tokyo's late shopping came to an end.

Ever since the arrests of over 1,300 liberal professors, writers, and labor leaders in December 1937 and February 1938, for having spread "antiwar" thoughts, the Japanese people have been careful to keep their "dangerous thoughts" to themselves. But political dissension and antiwar sentiment, driven underground, is increasing in intensity.

Letters from Japan, found on the bodies of Japanese dead and prisoners in China, rail against rising hours and prices, lower wages, and the growing lack of necessities at home. Soldiers' diaries discovered hidden in their blood-stained uniforms reveal the same disgust. The antiwar feeling among the Japanese soldiery has led to frequent desertions. Officers of the One Hundred and First and One Hundred and Third Divisions at Shanghai were court-martialed for their outspoken antiwar sentiments. A wholesale desertion took place not long ago above Nanking. Soldiers of the One Hundred and Eleventh Division revolted and refused to go to the front. Recently, in Suiyuan Province, several groups of Japanese troops made their way to Chinese lines, but one unlucky detachment, headed for Shensi Province to surrender to the Chinese Eighth Route Army (formerly the Red Army), bumped into Mongol cavalry from Mongokuo, another of Japan's puppet states. The deserters were arrested and sent back to the Japanese headquarters for "correction." The most recent desertion took place near Taokow, the rail terminal in north Honan Province, where a unit of Japan's Manchukuan troops (Manchurian conscripts with Japanese officers) mutinied, killed 100 Japanese and set off to join the Chinese guerrillas.

A revealing incident has recently come to light. A lone Chinese, one of a "doomed battalion" who stayed behind when the Japanese swarmed into Tsiyuan in northern Honan, was surrounded by Japanese troops. He spurned a Japanese request to surrender and managed to kill eight of his opponents before he was wounded and captured. Impressed by his bravery, the Japanese offered to make him a prisoner—an unusual boon for Japanese troops to grant. The Chinese soldier refused and requested that he be killed. He was. The Japanese dug a grave for this nameless hero, erected a wooden cross, and wrote on it: "Here lies a Chinese unknown hero. Erected by the Japanese Kanishi Regiment."

Inside Japan the antiwar activities of the laboring groups have taken a more militant form. A widespread series of strikes and protests by the mine workers of the Japanese territory of Formosa was quickly smashed by the police. Word recently sent from Japan is that during the first half of 1938 alone more than 35,000 workers took part in 593 strikes, 120 of which the workers won by gaining concessions regarding working conditions, but most of which were suppressed. All these strikes are directly concerned with wage increases, shorter hours, and better conditions of work, but indirectly they are a criticism of the army campaign in China. The most spectacular and bloodiest outburst against the war took place a year ago on the wharves of Kobe, where dockers and laborers, backed by hundreds of Kobe citizens, took to the streets with placards demanding, "Stop the war with China." Scores of heads were cracked before the police got the situation in hand.

The police have been unable to stamp out increasing sabotage by Japanese factory workers. Militant pacifists have burned scores of valuable gasoline dumps belonging to the Army. Hundreds of liberal-minded Japanese have wormed their way into youth, trade, and labor organizations where they are now secretly preaching opposition to the war. The Government has been forced to ban more than 200 trade-unions during the past year. Kagawa, the Christian labor organizer, is still working in his own quiet way, so far free from overt police interference.

A strict press censorship is maintained, but the papers sometimes get out of hand and slip in items unfavorable to the Government. In the past year 19 papers in Tokyo alone have been suppressed at one time or another. Strict watch is kept on all incoming vessels to prevent antiwar publications from entering Japan. Police ferret out all short-wave radio sets and jail or fine the owners. It is evident that, despite the loud claims of Japan's special "thought" police, all Communist and Socialist activities have not been wiped out, that the whole nation is not marching firmly behind the Army.

The first high official to voice his apprehension on this score was the Minister of Justice. Recently, with only Japanese newsmen as his listeners, he warned: "The entire Japanese Nation, at the front and at home, must recognize its grave responsibilities and resolve to bear up under extreme difficulties. If this is not understood and appreciated properly, internal issues may ensue, bringing grumbling and internal general dissatisfaction. Serious efforts must be taken to guard against this."

GUAM—DEFENSE OR THREAT?

(By William C. Rivers)

In considering fortification proposals put forward by the armed services it is always well to remember Lord Salisbury's message from London to Lord Cromer, who was the British agent in Egypt: "I would not be too much impressed by what the soldiers tell you about the strategic importance of these places. It is their way. If they were allowed full scope, they would insist on the importance of garrisoning the moon in order to protect us from Mars." I am so great an admirer of President Roosevelt's general policies that his policy as to national defense, especially in the Pacific, confuses me greatly. I refer to the plan for a naval base on the island of Guam.

One of the best definitions of our defense policy I have ever seen is to be found in the letter which President Roosevelt sent to the House Naval Committee on January 28, 1938. In that letter he said, "We must keep any potential enemy many hundred miles away from our continental limits." Conditions in the Pacific have not changed since that was written. Hawaii is still 2,300 miles from our continental limits. But now comes this new policy, based on the fortification of Guam, which is 6,000 miles from our west coast.

A THREAT TO JAPAN

Why is there to be such a marked change in our policy in the Pacific? Admiral Leahy, our chief authority on naval matters, said on January 31, 1938: "The defensive line of the American Navy at the present time reaches from the Aleutian Islands to the Hawaiian Islands to Samoa and to the Canal." A naval base at Guam, so near Japan and so far from the United States, would certainly be a provocation to Japan; it would constitute a strategic threat to that empire. We would certainly regard a similar naval base on our own strategic flank and as near our country as a threat to American safety, should some foreign power plan to establish it.

If you will compare Admiral Leahy's statement of January 31, 1938, with his statement of January 25, 1939, you will see at once the change of policy that is involved in the fortification of Guam. This year Admiral Leahy told the House Naval Committee: "A naval base on the island of Guam would be extremely valuable in augmenting the defensive power of the American fleet, because no foreign power would like to project an advance in force across the Pacific without first reducing such a base." A year ago the admiral told the Naval Committee that "the navy which America now has and the navy which it will have when it is increased by the authority contained in this bill (the billion-dollar naval expansion bill of 1938) will be seriously inadequate to the task of sending a naval force to the Philippines. I said it would require at least three times this amount of increase of our present Navy to warrant undertaking such an expedition. I do not say that we could accomplish it with that much increase, and I doubt if we could with three times the increase."

In other words, last year the admiral desired a billion dollars for the increase of the Navy and more than a billion was allowed by Congress for that purpose. Nevertheless, he estimated that it would require at least three times this amount if a naval force were to be sent to the Philippines. But if this is the primary purpose behind the proposed establishment of a base at Guam, it means that if we are to defend a base at Guam the Navy will require, on the basis of Admiral Leahy's own estimates, $4,000,000,000, and the admiral admits his doubt whether even a Navy increased to such an extent could send a successful expedition to the Philippines.

WHAT POLICY ARE WE FOLLOWING?

Why do we appear to be preparing for a war with Japan? It would be a war in which all the advantage of position would be on the side of Japan. Is it for the protection of our vital interests in the Orient? Our most vital interest in the Orient, now that we have granted independence to the Filipinos, is our trade with Japan, which is much more than double our trade with China and the Philippines combined. The three things which would be most likely to happen if we construct a naval base at Guam are: First, the demand for a base at Guam will be followed by a demand for a similar base at Manila; second, the building of great naval bases in the very midst of the defensive territory of the Japanese Fleet will be followed by a war with Japan; third the Filipinos will be crushed between the two fighting powers.

Never has a war been fought over such a distance as that between San Francisco and Manila when both sides had a battle fleet. By way of Hawaii and Guam the distance from the American mainland to the Philippines is 7,000 miles. Never has a blockade been carried out at such a distance. Never have embargoes and blockades resorted to as a means of hampering or punishing a people resulted in anything but war—when a real attempt to make them effective has been made. Reprisals usually precede war in these cases. Japan can with great ease ruin the beautiful cities of Manila and Hong Kong by dropping air bombs on them.

ASIA FOR THE ASIANS

Are the people of the United States trying to change the natural laws which will govern the future of the Far East? It is inevitable that the people who live in eastern Asia will settle the affairs of eastern Asia. It is inevitable that the people who live in Europe will settle the affairs of Europe. We openly acclaim and frequently acknowledge this law as to the people who live in the two Americas settling the affairs of the two Americas.

Why do we need any defense in the Pacific so far to the west and so much greater than has been recommended heretofore? In his book, The Ramparts We Watch, Maj. George Fielding Elliot mentions the Philippines some 15 times. These are typical observations by this leading military critic: "The Philippines constitute our one indefensible outlying possession." "The Philippines make the most dangerous question in the field of American policy." "The Philippines question ought to be settled." "We should give up any idea of interfering in the present or any future struggle in the Far East. These things are not our concern, they do not involve our vital interests, they are Asian affairs in an Asian theater, too far for our military power to reach save at an effort beyond any possible compensatory reward of victory."

Fitted into the northwest corner of a great ocean, with a circling ring of her islands running from the Arctic to the Equator, Japan is practically impregnable to attacks from the sea side. Why not recognize this? Providence made the earth and the oceans as they are. We cannot change these strategic features—they are the face of nature.

AN EXPOSED SALIENT

We are told that a base is to be established at Guam. The word "base" in this connection is a misnomer. The military term for a fortification at Guam is "advanced salient." In this case, the salient is far away and indefensible. Major Elliot feels that in a war a fleet could make its way as far as Guam by a sort of creeping advance from island to island. But he thinks that this process of going from one island to the next, leaving stores and a garrison of American soldiers on each, would take "a year or two." He does not estimate the number of merchant vessels the fleet would require in this hazardous and long journey. I believe that the number of such merchant ships needed would exceed the total number in foreign trade under the American flag. This requirement for a supporting auxiliary fleet larger than we possess, when taken in conjunction with Major Elliot's estimate of a 2-year campaign to reach Guam, is equivalent to saying that we cannot occupy Guam in a war.

The strategy of the north Pacific ocean as it affects the United States and the Philippines is governed by the permanent locations of these two countries with respect to the location of the Japanese Empire. The extent and configuration of the Pacific Ocean and the relative positions of the surrounding and interior land areas fix the strategic domination of the Philippines region by the controlling naval power in the northwest Pacific. This dominant naval power in the northwest Pacific is at present the Empire of Japan. Equilibrium between the Soviet Union and Japan, and a delineation of their contiguous and dividing boundaries may be established within the next few years. It remains to be seen, therefore, which of these two nations will be the dominant power at such a time. But there is no reason to suppose that Japan will annex the Republic of the Philippines after 1946, when the United States is pledged to withdraw from those islands. Such action would interrupt Japanese trade in the Philippines and make necessary a division of the fleet of Japan opposite Russia. In any event, Japan's proximity gives her a great advantage in the trade with the Philippines.

A VICIOUS CIRCLE

The naval strategy of all countries seems at times to be a sort of circular art. Foreign policy may be similar. Thus, we took the Philippines to develop our trade with China; now we are told that we must fight Japan to protect China in order to protect our trade with the Philippines. Or we are told that naval strategy requires that we fortify our home ports to prevent invasion and also to give freedom of movement to the fleet. But then we learn that freedom of movement for the fleet requires that we establish many bases at far-away spots. Each base far out in the Pacific requires a garrison ashore with great guns and soldiers. The nine new bases desired at present in the Pacific, under the terms of the Navy's Hepburn report, will require a considerable number of soldiers to guard the bases. But these numerous bases, we are assured, are needed because the seas happen to be full of sea lanes, and the fleet must control all these sea lanes. The fleet also protects the far-flung bases; the more bases you have the more numerous will be the sea lanes, and the greater will be the number of warships required to protect those bases and control those lanes.

What foreign power desires to project an advance toward the United States across the Pacific? Where is there a foreign power in the western Pacific at all capable of such an advance? I am now convinced that we annexed the Philippines from mixed motives of imperialistic idealism and commercialism. I am now also certain that as applied to the Philippines our enthusiasms were largely illusions. Loaned by the Army to the Philippine government, I worked 10 continuous years in all parts of the archipelago. I believe the act of Congress for Philippine independence in 1946 ought to be carried out. Also, that the defensive line outlined last year by Admiral Leahy is ample for the protection of the west coast of the United States and the Panama Canal.

UNWISE TO PUT NAVAL BASE AT GUAM

My long residence in the Orient and my continued study of the strategic conditions in the Pacific leave me with the conviction that it is unwise to provide for the establishment of a base at Guam. This unnecessary and provocative action would entail a colossal financial burden on the American taxpayers. Nine new bases in the Pacific are recommended by the Hepburn naval board. The provision of underground storage for fuel oils for war vessels and aircraft at such a number of bases would be very costly. Other minimum requirements would include forts with heavy guns for each base and additional personnel for the Navy and for the artillery of the Army. The cost for all of this would amount to at least $4,000,000,000. This sum, together with another $4,000,000,000 which would be needed to increase our fleet, would make a total of about $8,000,000,000 of new expenditure in the Pacific alone. And it is no more required for adequate national defense now than it was when Admiral Leahy was testifying a year ago.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "exceed", to strike out "five thousand and five hundred" and to insert in lieu thereof "six thousand."

GRAPEFRUIT AS A DEFENSE AGAINST GRIPPE AND INFLUENZA

MR. PEPPER. Mr. President, at a time when we are devoting so much of our attention to the question of defense of this Nation against the possibility of danger from abroad, I feel that we should not overlook a very real danger which appears to be arising in many localities within our borders. Nor should we overlook a remedy which is at hand.

At this very moment there are headlines in the newspapers of the Middle West telling of what they describe as epidemics of gripe and influenza. Schools have been forced to suspend classes in many localities. In Chicago, according to the newspapers, between 750 and 800 policemen were ill last week; surveys by the Associated Press and the United Press indicate that the outbreak has been most severe in Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana, and Michigan; while Texas, South Carolina, and Virginia have reported an alarming increase in either severe colds or mild influenza. In Wisconsin, State institutions have been closed to visitors. Right here in Washington we know that our hospitals are virtually filled as a result of mild or severe cases of the common cold, gripe, or worse.

It is not my purpose, however, to point with alarm to conditions which our United States Public Health Service officials feel are not unduly abnormal for this time of year. Rather I would call attention to the contribution to the battle against this distressing spread of infectious disease which is being made—and which can be made to a much greater extent—by the State of Florida. I feel sure that this subject is of utmost importance, and I believe it appropriate to bring it before the Senate and the country at this time, for public-health surveys indicate that the season of colds is not over—that, in fact, it is approaching its peak.

In calling attention to the contribution of the State of Florida to the health of our Nation, I refer specifically to our grapefruit. From information now at the disposal of all medical men who are battling this threat to our Nation's health, it is an established fact that grapefruit juice is one of the most useful providers of those vitamins so necessary to the prevention and cure of influenza and colds.

MR. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

MR. PEPPER. I do not care to yield at this time because I do not want to break the sequence of my thought on this matter.

DR. W. A. MCPHAUL, the State health officer of the State of Florida, recently pointed out that Florida citrus fruits are fully as valuable an asset to health as Florida's famous sunshine, and these fruits are within the reach of everyone wherever medical men require and recommend them.

All citrus juices, Dr. McPhaul has discovered, contain quantities of vitamins B, C, and G. An average glass of grapefruit juice contains a great deal of vitamin C—in fact, citrus is recognized by medical science as being the best food source of the C vitamin.

Another physician, Dr. Emil C. Aurin, has reported recently that of the scores of remedies which were suggested for the prevention and cure of influenza during the epidemic of 1918, grapefruit is one of the few to stand the test of time. Dr. Aurin goes on to report that medical authorities are coming more and more to believe that vitamin C plays an important part in one's resistance to all infections.

In Columbia University, the University of Maryland, and in the National Bureau of Standards of the United States Department of Commerce, studies are now under way further to determine the qualities of health-giving citrus fruits.

The Florida Citrus Commission has sponsored a comprehensive program in this regard. It is to be the citrus industry's contribution to the work of medical science, which for many years has carried much of the burden of scientific research in this field.

The commission's program is under the supervision of such eminent scientists as Prof. H. C. Sherman, head of the department of chemistry of Columbia University; Prof. Arthur W. Thomas, head of the chemistry department of Columbia University's College of Pharmacy; Dr. L. H. James, head of the department of bacteriology at the University of Maryland; and Dr. Solomon Farley Acree, principal chemist and section chief of the National Bureau of Standards.

As a further contribution to the health of the Nation as a whole, the Florida Citrus Commission plans to publish widespread the results of the scientific study which it is sponsoring on so comprehensive a scale. Science, in particular medical science, proceeds slowly and with great care in arriving at its findings; unfortunately the benefits of that study cannot, therefore, be immediate.

In the meantime, however, there is much that individuals can do to safeguard their health; there is much that doctors can do in advising their patients; there is much that can be done to combat this current widespread attack upon the Nation's health; namely, call upon the State of Florida for the grapefruit which science now recognizes as one of the best defenders against this enemy within our gates.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

MR. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

MR. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the Marine Corps.

MR. MCKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKellar in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to read the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Francis Biddle to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

MR. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I move that the President be notified of the confirmation of this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, at the request of the present occupant of the chair, the nominations of postmasters will be confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent that the Army nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Army are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, March 1, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 28 (legislative day of February 27), 1939

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS

Francis Biddle to be a judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE NATIONAL GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

Edgar Carl Erickson to be brigadier general, Adjutant General's Department, National Guard of the United States.

Benjamin Mitchell Smith to be brigadier general, Adjutant General's Department, National Guard of the United States.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Claud Dale La Fors to be second lieutenant, Medical Administrative Corps.

Bernard Korn to be second lieutenant, Medical Administrative Corps.

Ennis Dallas Sandberg to be second lieutenant, Medical Administrative Corps.

James Thomas Richards to be second lieutenant, Medical Administrative Corps.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Maj. Owen Meredith Marshburn to Quartermaster Corps.
First Lt. Ferdinand Marion Humphries to Ordnance Department.

NEW MEXICO

Enrique V. Garcia, Mesa Rica.

Rosalie E. Branch, Mora.

OHIO

William A. Ellsworth, Hudson.

PENNSYLVANIA

John C. Amig, Lewistown.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, Thou art our refuge; hidden in the pavilion of the Most High, Thou wilt never leave or forsake us. Lest there be confusion and humiliating memories, we pray Thee to give depth to feelings, convert opinions into convictions, sentiments into principles, and let our failures be in the melting shadows of the past. In the bustle of commerce, in the conflict of affairs, and in the heated ways of public life, grant that our people may fear God and be saved from the blind allegiance to external things. Oh, make the weak strong and keep the strong from pride and domination; it is before Thee that the rights of the lowliest are most respected. We pray that Thy name may be honored and glorified in the marvelous strength of our country. Let Thy fatherly care and protection be with our President, our Speaker, and the Congress. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 10. An act for the relief of the Fred Harvey Transportation Department;

S. 11. An act for the relief of Hubert H. Clark and Dr. W. C. Copeland;

S. 18. An act authorizing payment to the San Carlos Apache Indians for the lands ceded by them in the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896, and reopening such lands to mineral entry;

S. 539. An act for the relief of Charles E. Naghel, special disbursing agent, Department of the Interior, and Kam-meyer & Medack, contractors, from disallowance of charges for additional work under a construction contract;

S. 643. An act authorizing the payment of necessary expenses incurred by certain Indians allotted on the Quinalt Reservation, State of Washington;

S. 754. An act for the relief of J. G. Mayfield;

S. 794. An act relating to banking, banks, and trust companies in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

S. 875. An act for the relief of Andrew J. Crockett and Walter Crockett;

S. 876. An act to authorize the purchase of certain lands for the Apache Tribe of the Mescalero Reservation, N. Mex.;

S. 877. An act to add certain public-domain land in Montana to the Rocky Boy Indian Reservation;

S. 884. An act for the relief of disbursing officers and other officers and employees of the United States for disallowances and charges on account of airplane travel;

S. 911. An act for the relief of Roscoe C. Prescott, Howard Joslyn, Arthur E. Tuttle, and Robert J. Toulouse;

S. 917. An act authorizing the Library of Congress to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, the whole or any part of the papers of Charles Cotesworth Pinckney and Thomas Pinckney, including therewith a group of documents relating to the Constitutional Convention of 1787, now in the possession of Harry Stone, of New York City;

S. 961. An act for expenditure of funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Wolf Point, Mont., for completing the construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont.;

S. 1036. An act to authorize the purchase of certain lands adjacent to the Turtle Mountain Indian Agency in the State of North Dakota;

S. 1093. An act for the relief of Mike Chetkovich;

S. 1104. An act to provide for conveying to the United States the land, buildings, and improvements comprising the Choctaw and Chickasaw Sanatorium and General Hospital;

S. 1174. An act for the relief of Alex St. Louis and Dr. J. P. Lake;

S. 1253. An act for the relief of John B. Dow;

S. 1476. An act to authorize an appropriation to pay non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, but who have been found entitled to awards under said act as supplemented by the act of May 31, 1933;

S. 1477. An act to repeal section 9 of the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. L. 450), as amended; and

S. 1523. An act to authorize the payment of burial expenses and expenses in connection with last illness and death of native employees who die while serving in offices abroad of executive departments of the United States Government.

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS TO COMMITTEES

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 108

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing committees of the House of Representatives, as follows:

World War Veterans' Legislation: Wilburn Cartwright, Oklahoma; J. Hardin Peterson, Florida.

Civil Service: John M. Coffee, Washington.

Claims: Lansdale G. Sasser, Maryland.

Public Buildings and Grounds, Lansdale G. Sasser, Maryland.

The resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a statement of the duties of the surveyor of the port of New York and a copy of a letter written by Secretary Morgenthau to Mr. Foley.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I would like the Members of the House who voted on my amendment yesterday to read the letter written by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, to Mr. Harry T. Foley, surveyor of the port of New York, congratulating him on the efficient way he handled that office, especially the Members on the Democratic side, who criticized the continuance of the office of the surveyor of the port of New York. I believe if they had had this letter before them yesterday they may have voted differently on my amendment.

The office of the surveyor of customs was established at the founding of the Federal Government.

The duties and functions of the surveyor, as prescribed by existing customs laws and regulations, are substantially those laid down by the Customs Organization Act of 1789. He is correctly designated the outdoor executive officer of the port, concerned principally with the administration and enforcement of the customs laws. His responsibilities have been greatly increased by the activities of the criminal element in their endeavors to smuggle narcotics and other illegal importations into the country.

The authorized force of employees over whom he has jurisdiction consists of 1,585, which are divided into the following groups:

Station inspectors and inspectors.....	513
Staff officers.....	16
Guards' force.....	583
Laborers.....	364
Supervisory officers, clerks, etc.....	109

With this force under his supervision the surveyor boards and takes custody of all vessels and cargoes from foreign ports, with certification of manifests, crew lists, consular certificates, and so forth; the discharge and delivery of all cargo from foreign ports or received in bond, with complete accounting therefor; the discharge, examination, and delivery of all passengers' baggage from foreign ports or arriving in bond; the weighing, gaging, and measuring of imported merchandise and goods exported with benefit of drawback, and returns therefor which form the basis for final computation of duties; the transfer to general-order warehouse of unclaimed merchandise and to seizure room of goods illegally imported; the lading of goods shipped in bond or exported with benefit of drawback and certifications of same; the measuring of vessels for ascertainment of tonnage tax on foreign vessels and for registry, enrollment, or license of American vessels; the examination of steerage passengers' quarters under Passenger Act of 1882, as amended; the searching of vessels for contraband and the sealing of ships' stores; the guard of vessels, piers, and other places to prevent smuggling; aggressive campaigns to prevent and detect the illegal importation of merchandise and narcotics; the counting of passengers on local steamers during the excursion season.

It is therefore quite obvious that with this small army of men under his jurisdiction a great deal of personal supervision is required of the surveyor.

The supervision differs somewhat from that exercised by the comptroller and appraiser, whose forces and activities are mainly concentrated under one roof, while those under the surveyor are spread over the extensive territory of the port of New York.

The port of New York has a water frontage of 771 miles in length, of which 578 miles are in New York and 193 miles in New Jersey. It requires 2 full business days, steaming rapidly about the harbor, merely to view superficially the entire water front. It includes an area of 175 square miles.

Although 58 percent of the total steamship passenger—foreign—traffic of the United States is via the port of New York, this port accounts for approximately 94 percent of the more difficult and complicated transoceanic passenger traffic.

Officers serving under the supervision of the surveyor have made innumerable seizures of undeclared articles and illegal importations. These cases illustrate the difficulties met by officers in the examination of passengers' baggage, supervision of the unloading of vessels, and the search of such vessels. A school of instruction is maintained by the surveyor for the proper training of employees under his supervision and direction in the intricate duties of their position.

The activities of the surveyor are very essential and important for the protection of the revenue. Presidential appointees to this office are usually men of wide business experience. It is submitted that such is an eminently wise policy, as the civil-service employee usually lacks such qualifications because of the restricted nature of his training and career.

The morale of any large organization depends largely upon the quality of its leadership, and it is submitted that the increased efficiency of the surveyor's office at New York is in no small degree due to the time, effort, and example given by its head. In this connection the following congratulatory letter was forwarded to the present surveyor by the Secretary of the Treasury on September 14, 1936:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, September 14, 1936.

DEAR MR. FOLEY: I have had a report of the work done through your office on the piers over the week end of the Labor Day holiday and I was most happy to know that the customs work went forward expeditiously and smoothly during these difficult days.

I want to congratulate you, and through you the men who worked under your office at that time, upon the efficient way in which all performed the work assigned to them.

Sincerely,

H. MORGENTHAU, Jr.

It is further submitted that the great volume of business at the port of New York, with its increasing problems of law enforcement, not only justify, but emphasize, the necessity of the subdivision of supervision of the large force by continuation of the office of surveyor.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two short editorials, one from the New York Times and the other from the Washington Post of today.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not so much interested in the editorials the gentleman is proposing to put in the RECORD, but I want to call the attention of the majority leader to the fact that newspaper editorials are going in the RECORD without objection of any kind on the part of the majority Members of this House or those in authority. They permit the RECORD to be filled up with things that do not transpire or happen in the House of Representatives. Is the RECORD to be a record of things that transpire all over this Nation or are you, Mr. Majority Leader, going to have it a record of the things that transpire here in Congress? I have tried to stop this in committee, but I am unable to do it. So, if the people of this country want the RECORD to contain all newspaper articles and newspaper records, of course, you have the votes over there and can control it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is the same old speech that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made a dozen times in order to get in the RECORD, I presume; but I call his attention to the fact that he is a member of the Committee on Printing; and why does he not function?

Mr. RICH. I have tried to function, Mr. Majority Leader, but I am helpless. With the majority of the members being Democrats, I cannot do a thing with them. I would, if I could. You could, but you do not. Why not?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

STABILIZATION FUND

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of the Treasury made a very interesting statement before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures this morning, and at the same time he released the balance sheet of the exchange stabilization fund as of June 30, 1938, and December 31, 1938.

I ask unanimous consent to place the statement and the balance sheet in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

STATEMENT OF SECRETARY MORGENTHAU BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON COINAGE, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1939

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, on January 19, 1939, the President wrote to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives recommending the extension of the powers conferred by section 10 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 dealing with the stabilization fund and certain powers specified in the act of May 12, 1933, relating to fixing the metallic content of the dollar, which would otherwise expire on June 30, 1939. H. R. 3325, which was introduced on January 26, 1939, by Chairman SOMERS, is in accord with the recommendations of the President, and I am appearing before you in support of this bill.

A discussion of the provisions of H. R. 3325 may be conveniently divided into the provisions dealing with the extension of the stabilization fund powers (sec. 1 of the bill) and the provisions dealing with the extension of certain powers specified in paragraph (b) (2) of section 43 of the act of May 12, 1933, which principally involve (a) the power to alter the weight of the gold dollar and (b) the unlimited coinage of silver. If it is agreeable to you and the other members of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I propose to take up the provisions of H. R. 3325 in that order.

I. CONTINUATION OF THE STABILIZATION FUND POWERS

The stabilization fund of $2,000,000,000 was established by section 10 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, which was enacted on January 30, 1934. The $2,000,000,000 placed in the fund was obtained from the increment accruing to the Treasury from the decrease in the weight of the gold dollar and consequent increase in the value of the gold held by the United States. As originally provided, the stabilization fund had a life of 2 years, and the President was authorized to extend the period for 1 additional year. This he did on January 10, 1936. In January 1937 Congress, in an act similar to the bill now being considered by the committee, extended the life of the stabilization fund until June 30, 1939. The purpose of the legislation now before your committee is to extend the fund until January 15, 1941.

During the 3 years immediately preceding the creation of the fund more than 30 nations had departed from the gold standard and had adopted either floating currencies or exchange controls. Confronted with these monetary developments, Congress, fully appreciating the need for a special fund, with ample reserves and adequate power to cope with this new trend in international monetary matters, created the stabilization fund.

Since the establishment of our stabilization fund other countries have abandoned the pre-1931 gold standard, until now every country except the United States and one other country important commercially has a currency which, in effect, is either a floating currency or is subject to exchange controls.

Whereas before 1931 currencies fixed in terms of gold and stable in terms of exchange rates characterized most of the world monetary systems there now prevail currencies with differing nominal, actual, and even bootleg rates, floating currencies, exchange controls, and exchange clearing agreements. Formerly rigid mint parities and unrestricted gold movements ruled international currency relationships; now dependence has to be placed chiefly upon the day-to-day decisions of governments adapted to the continually shifting economic, political, and monetary conditions.

The purpose of the fund is to stabilize the exchange value of the dollar. In carrying out this purpose the fund undertakes a variety of operations.

Sometimes it is called upon to prevent violent fluctuations in exchange rates induced by acute political developments which cause flights of capital from one country to another. Such, for example, was the situation created in the fall of last year, when as a consequence of the Czechoslovakian crisis a large volume of funds sought to leave Europe for the United States. The outflow of funds was so large that the amount of gold which it was necessary to ship from Europe to provide dollar balances was far greater than could be taken care of through normal commercial channels. If there had been no stabilization fund to cooperate with the other funds the dollar exchange would have fluctuated so violently as to disrupt our trade. International monetary chaos might have ensued.

The occasions which call for operations of the magnitude undertaken by our fund last fall are, however, sporadic. Normally the stabilization fund is concerned with hour-to-hour and day-to-day fluctuations in the dollar exchange rate. When the exchange markets are quiet and there are no unusual disturbances it is not necessary for the fund to take an active part in the market. At such times it operates in relatively small amounts and participates in a relatively small number of transactions each day and may even not enter the market at all.

When, however, for one reason or another the operations in the various exchange markets become speculative or panicky in character with abnormal fluctuations, then the stabilization fund steps into the market and becomes active in buying and selling gold and foreign exchange for the purpose of minimizing fluctuations.

During these operations it is frequently necessary for the stabilization fund to acquire foreign currencies. The fund attempts to carry out all such transactions with a minimum of risk. In the past we have been successful in avoiding risk of exchange loss through special reciprocal arrangements between cooperating treasuries under which foreign exchange is immediately convertible into gold at a price fixed each day. Incidentally, it should be pointed out that because we wish to avoid the possibility of an exchange loss we frequently forego the possibility of an exchange profit.

There are also occasions when the exchange rate between the dollar and the currency of a country with small gold holdings is subjected to pressure because of unfavorable political or economic developments. The fund can be employed, and has occasionally been employed, in such circumstances to help stabilize the dollar exchange.

For example, our arrangement with China was just such an operation. There was strong pressure against the dollar-yuan exchange, and China needed dollars in order to strengthen the dollar-yuan exchange rate, thus avoiding additional obstacles to our trade. To eliminate any risk of exchange loss China agreed to repurchase the yuan at the same rate at which the United States purchased them, and China's promise was backed by adequate gold and silver collateral, which was kept on deposit with Federal Reserve banks.

An arrangement of like character was made with Brazil in 1937, but owing to subsequent developments the arrangement was not utilized.

A similar arrangement was made with Mexico. We purchased Mexican pesos and in exchange made dollars available. Again, as in the case of China, the Mexican Government agreed to repurchase the pesos at the price we paid for them and deposited adequate collateral with the Federal Reserve banks.

There are times when the situation in the foreign exchange and gold markets calls for gold operations by the fund in the London market. If, as a consequence of certain international, economic, or trade developments, pressure should develop against the dollar-sterling rate, the fund might, in order to protect the dollar's position and American commercial and trade interests, engage in gold operations to relieve that pressure. It might, for example, place an order through its fiscal agent, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, for the purchase in London of a specified amount of gold at a specified price. Upon execution of the order our fund acquires gold in London and supplies dollar exchange in payment. This gold is placed on deposit in London and may be disposed of in any of several ways depending upon market developments. Should, for example, pressure against the dollar then occur, the fund could release the gold in London for payment in sterling and then sell sterling for dollars. If, on the other hand, no such pressure develops, the gold can be brought to this country to be held in the stabilization fund or to be sold by it to the United States assay office.

There are numerous other technical ways in which the exchange and gold transactions are consummated, depending upon where the pressure falls, what the reasons for the pressure are, the condition of the various exchange and gold markets, and even the shipping facilities for gold available at the particular time.

From 1934 to the middle of 1936 the stabilization fund acted independently in the purchase of gold and foreign exchange. When in 1936 France was confronted with a monetary crisis, the United Kingdom, France, and the United States realized the necessity of taking steps to safeguard their economies against competitive exchange depreciation which in the long run would benefit none and injure all. Therefore, in pursuance of our policy of promoting stability of the exchange value of the dollar, on September 25, 1936, we joined the Governments of Great Britain and France in the tripartite declaration of policy with respect to international monetary affairs. Soon thereafter the Governments of Belgium, Switzerland, and the Netherlands announced their adherence to this declaration. The machinery for collaboration to attain the common objectives laid down in the tripartite declaration was provided chiefly by the stabilization funds of these countries.

The stabilization fund is, under present conditions, a potent instrument for the protection of our stake in world trade and of every American producer who competes in the American market with foreign producers. The only persons in the United States who can possibly be injured by the operations of the stabilization fund are speculators in foreign exchange. Whereas the businessman needs stability in exchange, the speculator thrives on exchange fluctuations. Any businessman who has had to deal in foreign currency knows that the dollar is the most stable and the soundest currency in the world today. The $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund has been an important and, I believe, essential instrument in maintaining that stability.

The occasions when the stabilization fund has been employed for large-scale operations to avoid disruption of the international monetary market have been few, yet the fund operates regularly to minimize undesirable day-to-day fluctuations in rates. Its very existence constitutes a stabilizing factor in the exchange market. It is a major force in discouraging speculators from undertaking raids on our exchange rates. What is even more important, the presence of a $2,000,000,000 fund set aside to be used for exchange purposes when necessary effectively discourages the initiation of currency depreciation wars which would, of course, be disruptive to world trade.

One of the responsibilities of the stabilization fund is to assume in times of stress in the foreign exchange market the functions normally performed by private operators, who, because of the risk involved, may not be willing to act at the very time when there is the greatest need for exchange facilities. There have, for instance, been several occasions in the last year when the fund was virtually the only source of dollar exchange.

There is still another important function which stabilization funds throughout the world perform—namely, the protection of the domestic money and credit market from the impact of large gold losses or gains. Because of the large amount of gold held by our stabilization fund it is in an excellent position to protect our credit base against heavy withdrawals of gold from this country.

It may be expected that, with the restoration of normal conditions abroad, gold may leave the United States in large volume. In such a situation the gold in the stabilization fund will cushion what might otherwise constitute a severe shock to our economy.

The emergency in the international economic and monetary field still exists and unfortunately there are no grounds for believing that such emergency will end on June 30, 1939. On the contrary, the recurrence of international crises is as probable now as when the stabilization fund was created in 1934.

Regardless of the trend of international developments, the stabilization fund may have even greater usefulness in the future than it has had in the past.

I turn now to another aspect of the fund. When Congress established the fund it provided that an annual audit should be made, and that the Secretary of the Treasury should make a report to the President once a year. There was no provision for any other report. Congress evidently recognized that every precaution should be taken to prevent anyone from attempting, through knowledge of its detailed operation, to gain speculative advantage. It was then known that the British fund was operated with the utmost secrecy, and it was realized that a certain amount of secrecy was essential if our fund was to serve its purpose most effectively.

So far as there is secrecy in the operation of the stabilization fund of the United States, it relates only to the transactions and status of the $200,000,000 portion of the fund. This account has never held more than a relatively unimportant portion of our monetary gold stock. It is with regard to this portion of the fund that the exchange speculators interested in following for their own gain the day-to-day operations of the fund would like to have more detailed information. These speculators cannot now tell whether the operating portion of the fund at any given time consists entirely of gold, or entirely of cash assets, or partly of each. They, or any citizen, of course, can tell from the daily Treasury statement that the stabilization fund contains at least $1,800,000,000 of gold which has never been touched.

Speculators would be the chief beneficiaries from publication of a current record of the day-to-day operations of the fund. Failing to obtain current information, they would like the detailed data on past operations. The past record would enable them better to trace the current activities of the fund.

One of the important ways through which the stabilization fund helps maintain confidence and stability of exchanges is by its psychological effect. The less the speculator knows of the day-to-day operations of the fund, the smaller do those operations have to be.

II. ALTERATION IN THE WEIGHT OF THE DOLLAR

I now come to the second section of the legislation which the committee is considering: Extension of the authority to alter the gold content of the dollar. This power, when originally given to the President in the Thomas amendment passed in May 1933, was subject to no time limitation. However, it did provide that the gold content of the dollar could not be reduced more than 50 percent. In January 1934, when the President recommended the enactment of the Gold Reserve Act, he recommended that the authority to change the gold content of the dollar be limited to fixing the dollar at a gold content of between 50 and 60 percent of its former weight. You may recall that on January 31, 1934, the President exercised the power granted him in this act by fixing the gold content of the dollar at 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ grains of gold nine-tenths fine, which was approximately 59 percent of its former weight.

The Gold Reserve Act placed a time limitation on both the stabilization fund and on the dollar devaluation powers. On January 23, 1937, the dollar devaluation power was renewed by Congress at the same time the stabilization fund was extended.

It is my conviction that this power should be continued.

The dollar now has identically the same gold value it had 5 years ago when the President proclaimed on January 31, 1934, that the gold content of the dollar shall be 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ grains of gold nine-tenths fine. The fact that we have kept the gold value of the dollar stable through the international monetary disturbances and alarms of the past 5 years should be adequate assurance that there is neither desire nor intent on the part of this administration to alter the gold value of the dollar except under circumstances which clearly demand such action.

This power is a weapon in reserve which is needed for the protection of American interests. In the monetary field it is as important as a powerful navy in the field of defense against armed attack.

In the last 5 years, as you know, the currencies of over 50 countries have changed their gold value. Unfortunately, the future is uncertain; the trend of international economic relationships remains subject to constant modification. There is no guaranty that other countries in their search for what is in their best interests will not undertake monetary measures which may operate to the disadvantage of the United States. In this connection, remember that virtually no foreign country has fixed the actual gold value of its currency.

For the United States to surrender any of its instruments for dealing adequately and promptly with international economic and monetary problems as they arise would tie our hands when immediate action might be crucial. The existence of this power to devalue the dollar has been a warning to the world that we stand ready and able to defend the position of this country in world trade and to protect American goods from intensified competition in the American market. Thus stability rather than instability is given to international exchange rates by the existence of the power in the United States to deal promptly and effectively with currency depreciation abroad.

It is my opinion that at this time when the gold content of other leading currencies is permitted to float, and when the international picture is so uncertain, the United States should not permit the power of its Government to deal quickly and effectively with situations that require an alteration in the gold content of the dollar to lapse.

III. NEWLY MINED DOMESTIC SILVER

I wish to call attention to the fact that section 2 of H. R. 3325, in addition to extending the power of the President to alter the weight of the gold dollar, also extends the power of the President, conferred by the act of May 12, 1933, as amended, to provide for the unlimited coinage of silver. As you know, pursuant to such power the President on December 21, 1933, issued a proclamation pursuant to which newly mined domestic silver has been received by the mints for coinage and addition to the monetary stocks at a return to the miner of an amount considerably above the world price of silver. Since December 21, 1933, a number of proclamations have been issued modifying the original proclamation with regard to the amount to be returned to the miner and extending the original proclamation. The Treasury is now receiving newly mined domestic silver under such authority at a return to the miner of approximately 64½ cents per ounce. The original proclamation, as modified, expires on June 30 of this year. Under the provisions of section 2 of H. R. 3325 the President would have authority to extend such proclamation until January 15, 1941.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia when it is his intention, at the present time, to bring up this conference report.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I will state to the gentleman that I am told by the majority leader that we will have the right-of-way tomorrow, and it is my intention to ask for recognition the first thing tomorrow on the independent offices bill.

There will probably be one committee called on tomorrow, which is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. TABER. This will precede the conference report on the deficiency bill tomorrow?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; but we will dispose of both of them tomorrow.

GOVERNMENT PROPAGANDA

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a great deal in the last few years relative to the dissemination of publicity and Government propaganda. In view of which I rise to read a letter I have just mailed to the Attorney General of the United States. I now quote the entire letter:

Hon. FRANK MURPHY,

Attorney General of the United States,

Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MURPHY: On October 22, 1913, the Congress of the United States enacted into law (38 Stat. Law 212) the provision that "No money appropriated * * * shall be used for the compensation of any publicity expert unless specifically appropriated for that purpose." Yet it is definitely apparent from the findings of the Select Committee of the Senate to Investigate Executive Agencies of the Government, appointed pursuant to Senate Resolution 212 (74th Cong.), from my own personal study, and from the investigation of others, that numerous agencies in our Federal Government have not obeyed such mandate of Congress.

And as Government agencies have no more right to disobey Federal statutes than have individuals or private corporations, it would seem to me that a study and investigation of this question by your office is warranted. Will you, therefore, consider such action your immediate responsibility?

I am confident that such an investigation by your office will not only show numerous flagrant violations by existing Government agencies of Statute 38, Law 212, but it will also demonstrate the extent to which Government agencies are annually expending millions of dollars of taxpayers' funds to perpetuate themselves in office on their present enormous scale. It would also show the degree to which certain agencies are resorting to the dissemination of propaganda to sell the public on the theory of Federal bureaucracy and collectivism.

To me the current wave of Government propaganda is an extravagant, unfair, and malicious civil practice. It is a waste of the taxpayers' money, and an impartial portrayal by the Attorney General of its usage should lead to its ultimate curtailment.

Trusting that you will give my suggestion your earnest attention, and assuring you of my hearty cooperation, I remain,

Sincerely,

J. PARNELL THOMAS.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FADDIS. I rise to ask the gentleman from Virginia in what shape this independent offices appropriation bill is coming back.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Oh, I think it is in very good shape.

Mr. FADDIS. I would like to know, and I am sure the House would like to know, if it will be possible to get a vote on any part of this report, or will it have to be voted up or down as a whole?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It will come back under the general rules of the House. The conferees have agreed to certain Senate amendments, but if a majority of the House want to vote on some individual amendment, they can vote down the conference report, and then the matter is wide open.

Mr. RANKIN. In other words, it is in better shape than it was before, when we were denied a roll call. Now we will be able to get one.

TREASURY-POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4492) making appropriations for the Treasury and the Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill, with Mr. BOEHNE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Refunding internal-revenue collections: For refunding internal-revenue collections, as provided by law, including the payment of claims for the fiscal year 1940 and prior years and accounts arising under "Allowance or draw-back (Internal Revenue)", "Redemption of stamps (Internal Revenue)", "Refunding legacy taxes, act of March 30, 1928", and "Repayment of taxes on distilled spirits destroyed by casualty", $38,000,000: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress by internal-revenue districts and alphabetically arranged of all disbursements hereunder in excess of $500 as required by section 8 of the act of May 29, 1928 (26 U. S. C. 1676), including the names of all persons and corporations to whom such payments are made, together with the amount paid to each.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I call attention to the fact that we are appropriating in this bill $1,050,000,000 for interest on the national debt for the next year, an enormous sum of money; also, that the national debt February 23 was $39,846,000,000. We have gone in the red since the 1st of July last to February 23 over $2,166,000,000. You will note that the balance of cash that we carried on February 23 is $3,399,847,220.37. When you think that the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, carries in the banks of this country $3,399,000,000 and over, paying the banks interest on that money; suppose he pays on an average of only 2 percent for all money borrowed, considering all of the bonds that are outstanding against the Government. I think anyone will conclude that he should not carry as a daily balance more than half a billion dollars. No Treasurer of the United States ever carried more than that amount before Mr. Morgenthau came in. Why does he carry that amount? Only as a bait to the bankers. Three billion dollars at 2 percent means $60,000,000 a year that we pay to the bankers of this country as a tribute. Sixty million dollars a year means $5,000,000 a month, and that means $166,000 a day. So that we are paying $166,000 a day for interest on money that is in the banks of the country, when there is no more use of doing that than there is of getting out here and all of the Members going up in a toy balloon. It seems so unbusinesslike I cannot see why the Secretary of the Treasury does it; I cannot think of anything more ridiculous than that, when the country is going in the red so fast. Why do we have men in public office who are not working for the best interests of the country and the American taxpayer? I do not accuse Mr. Morgenthau of trying to do something illogical or dishonorable, but I say that as a business proposition, when he can borrow money in this country today and all of the money he wants, he should not permit a balance of $3,399,000,000 of cash in the Treasury when it is of no more use than the fifth wheel in a wagon. Why does Mr. Morgenthau not do for the Government as he would do for himself, or as any good businessman would do?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman state for the benefit of the House how much this bill carries for interest on the national debt?

Mr. RICH. One billion and fifty million dollars.

Mr. KNUTSON. Why, that is more than it cost to run the Government when I came down here.

Mr. RICH. I admit that the gentleman has been here a good many years. He is right. Our cost of government has increased by leaps and bounds. It should stop. The cost of government today so far exceeds our revenues that there is a wreck ahead unless you stop it. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and all the chairmen of the committees in the House of Representatives who are responsible for the operation of this Government should do everything in every way they can to cut down the governmental expenses. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ought to be here trying to do everything he can to cut down those expenses. Why does he not get up and say that we want to cut down these expenses, and that they should be cut down?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes. I do graciously yield to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is it not true that every one of our appropriation bills have come onto the floor of the House cut under the Budget estimates?

Mr. RICH. Well, we want to get a new Budget officer, or one who will only spend up to our income and not one cent more. Why does not the Budget officer consider that? We want to get a Budget officer who will try to hold these expenses down to the income, not what the Members of Congress want, not what the people want when we know it is not good, sound business for them nor for the country. We ought to have brains enough, we ought to have ability enough, we ought to have intestinal fortitude enough to say to the people back home that we cannot run the Government and give everybody everything they want, because that is not the thing to do. It is not sound business. When will Congress cut down on this ruthless spending of money they do not have to spend?

Mr. Chairman, where are you going to get the money?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL ALCOHOL ADMINISTRATION

Salaries and expenses: For the purpose of administering the provisions of the "Federal Alcohol Administration Act," approved August 29, 1935 (27 U. S. C. 201), as amended, including personal and other services; supplies and materials; equipment; communication service; stationery; travel and subsistence expenses as authorized by law; maintenance, repair, and operation of automobiles; law books, books of reference, magazines, periodicals, and newspapers; contract stenographic reporting service; the securing of evidence of violations of the act; and miscellaneous and contingent expenses, $425,000.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I notice the subcommittee has reduced the amount recommended by the Bureau of the Budget in the sum of $25,000 for the Federal Alcohol Administration. I agree with the position taken by the gentleman from California [Mr. Buck] on yesterday about an amendment not being offered at this stage, but if the amount is restored in the Senate I wish to make a few observations for whatever value they may have to the members of the subcommittee who will constitute the committee of conference as far as the House is concerned.

The Federal Alcohol Administration has done a very fine piece of work. It has a most difficult task. It has the duty of issuing permits in accordance with the law relating to labeling, advertising, and to see that there is proper distribution of the product made in accordance with the fair-trade provisions of existing law. It has a duty to see that the public is properly informed and protected in what they are buying. This particular Administration has issued 15,000 permits to distilleries, rectifiers, wholesalers and importers, and wineries. It plays a very important part in protecting not only legitimate business but in protecting the general public against a recurrence of the conditions which contributed in part to the passage of the vicious eighteenth amendment.

I consider that the Federal Alcohol Administration is performing a very important function and is being very ably conducted under the leadership of the present Administrator, Captain Alexander, and his deputy, Mr. Huntington, and the others who are associated with them in that Administration. The reduction of $25,000 made by the subcommittee was for traveling expenses. I will agree that ordinarily per diem expenses—

Mr. LUDLOW. It is not altogether that.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is true. The chairman's observation is absolutely true, but in the main it affects them in connection with the per diem expenses. This particular department has only 27 inspectors to cover the entire country. The result is they have to send their inspectors on rather far-reaching trips, in consequence of which they have to resort to the per diem expense more than other departments which have sufficient personnel to meet the problems that confront them.

I also understand that the Federal Alcohol Administration recommended to the Bureau of the Budget an amount which would enable them to establish regional offices throughout various parts of the United States. Certainly I would like to see one in California, for instance, which would prevent businessmen coming all the way East. One should be at Chicago, one in the South, one in the Southwest, and one in the Northeast, at least. The Internal Revenue Bureau has recently inaugurated a decentralization system, establishing regional offices so that businessmen and other taxpayers will not have to come to Washington in order to have final action upon tax questions before they can go before the Board of Tax Appeals with their cases. It is a very commendable policy, because it brings not only direct service but greater satisfaction to those living in sections of the country far removed from Washington. I think a similar plan with reference to the Federal Alcohol Administration should be devised in the near future, a plan which is dependent, however, upon the necessary appropriations being made.

My purpose in making these few remarks was to praise the Federal Alcohol Administration and the very fine work it is doing, and to call to the attention of the subcommittee the importance of this $25,000 if the Senate should insert that amount in the bill. I trust the subcommittee constituting the House committee on conference will keep in mind the observations made by myself and by my distinguished friend from California [Mr. Buck], who made some observations on this question yesterday along the same lines.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the authorized work of the Coast Guard, including the expense of maintenance, repair, and operations of vessels forfeited to the United States and delivered to the Treasury Department under the terms of the act approved March 3, 1925 (27 U. S. C. 41), maintenance, repair, exchange, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes at headquarters and in the field, motion-picture equipment (not to exceed $10,000), material for official purposes, and the rental of quarters in the District of Columbia, as follows:

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. LUDLOW: On page 27, line 17, strike out the comma at the end of the line and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

Mr. LUDLOW. This is just an amendment to correct the language.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Coast Guard, exclusive of Office of the Commandant, $24,607,550: Provided, That not more than a total of $2,200,000 out of the appropriations contained in this act under the caption "Coast Guard" except the appropriations "Salaries, Office of the Commandant" and "Additional airplanes" may be expended for aviation.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I had intended to offer the following amendment to construct a Coast Guard station in my district, which is very badly needed and which has been authorized, and which the Coast Guard wants the worst way:

On page 29, after line 11, add a new paragraph to read as follows: "Building of new station: For building and equipping a new Coast Guard station to be located on Madeline Island, which is one of the islands located in Lake Superior, and which group is known as the Apostle Islands, and to be erected upon land recently acquired by the United States Government for such purposes, $250,000."

The only reason I did not do it now is because some of the members of the committee have spoken to me about it, and they feel something will be done soon, and it will probably be better not to offer an amendment, but to call it to their attention so that it will be included in another year. The only reason it was not pressed this year is because of the fact that we were given assurance the money necessary would be taken out of relief funds appropriated in 1937 for the 1938 relief appropriation. This Coast Guard station is to be located on Madeline Island, and, of course, authorization for it was passed in 1935. Admiral Waesche has tried his best to have this included in the appropriation. As I said before, they were assured they would be given this money, and they felt so sure about it that they purchased the necessary site for it last year. It is all ready to go, but, as the admiral writes me, it was finally not included in the amount that was allocated to him from relief funds.

I want to read a letter that I received from him on August 31, 1938.

He wrote me the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES COAST GUARD,
Washington, August 31, 1938.

HON. B. J. GEHRMANN,
Member of Congress, Mellen, Wis.

MY DEAR MR. GEHRMANN: Reference is made to your letter of August 27, 1938, relative to the proposed construction work in connection with a Coast Guard station at the Apostle Islands, Wis., the establishment of which was authorized by Congress in 1935.

This work was included as an item in the projects submitted in the application of the Coast Guard for allotment of funds from the Public Works apportionment of the Works Relief and Public Works Appropriation Act of 1938. However, in making the allotment of funds to the Coast Guard consideration was given only to the present active Coast Guard stations, and no funds were made available for new establishments.

In the circumstances it appears that nothing further can be done in the matter at present.

The need for a station in this vicinity is realized, and every effort has been made to obtain the necessary funds for its construction without avail.

Very truly yours,

R. R. WAESCHE,
Rear Admiral, United States Coast Guard, Commandant.

In the report that was made to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, it was stated:

There is no Coast Guard station on the south shore of Lake Superior between Duluth, Minn., and Portage, Mich., a distance of approximately 167 miles. The territory in this vicinity is generally rugged and very dangerous to navigation. The islands are close to the shipping lanes, and a station in this locality is essential for protection of life and marine property.

The Commander of the Eleventh Coast Guard District, in which district the station would come if it should be established and constructed, after making an examination into the matter, states that in his opinion it is very important that a Coast Guard station be established in the group of the Apostle Islands for the protection of mariners and fishermen in that vicinity. He also states that the amount of shipping into Ashland, Wis., is approximately 3,000,000 tons a year, and that approximately 80 boats are engaged in fishing in this locality. This is in addition to the enormous amount of east and west bound traffic which passes a short distance north of these islands clearing and entering Duluth, Minn., and Superior, Wis.

The Commander of the Chicago division concurs in the views expressed by the Commander of the eleventh district.

This joint harbor of Duluth, Minn., and Superior, Wis., is second only to New York in incoming and outgoing tonnage, and all those vessels have to pass that dangerous stretch known as the Apostle Islands. A great many lives have been lost in that area. Fishermen, for instance, are caught out on ice floes and then help has to be summoned from Duluth or some other station. Oftentimes the help arrives too late. In the last 2 years they have maintained a detail or part of a Coast Guard detachment from some other station, but the personnel of these stations is so small that they have been unable to maintain the number of men necessary. Furthermore, they do not have the necessary equipment of a modern Coast Guard station.

Certainly the amount of tonnage to be benefited warrants this additional Coast Guard station and I hope the committee will listen to Admiral Waesche, who feels that this is one of the most important stations to be built. In fact, there were only three stations on his list recommended last year and this was No. 1. Instead, however, of offering an amendment to the bill at this time I will leave it to the committee with the hope that they will insert this item in next year's bill.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include some letters from the Commandant that bear on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question relative to the proviso found at the bottom of page 28, reading as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for increased pay at a rate in excess of $1,440 per annum to any nonflying commissioned officer or commissioned observer for making aerial flights; which rate shall be the legal maximum rate of such increased pay as to any such officer.

This would appear to be legislation, most definitely, but I will not raise that point. Perhaps I am not permitted to do so, debate having started on the whole Coast Guard title, but I wanted to ask the chairman if the insertion of this proviso will in any way result in destroying the uniformity of pay established under the act of 1922 as between the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard?

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to the gentleman from New York that this is a proviso that has been carried for years. We inherited this provision, so to speak. I am under the impression that it does not have the effect which the gentleman has in mind; certainly there have been no repercussions from it because it is law, and I think he may rest assured that it would not result in the disparity he has in mind. We would certainly have heard something about it if it had.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I assume the committee would have heard of it did it create an inconsistent element in the general pay system of the military services.

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to the gentleman from New York that no intimation has come to us indicating any such thing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the chairman of the committee think it is necessary to include this proviso each year, "which rate shall be the legal maximum rate"? If we pass such language once, is it not permanent? Must it be repeated in every appropriation bill dealing with the subject?

Mr. LUDLOW. I understand it is not permanent because it does not say "hereafter it is to be effective." It is therefore repeated in the annual appropriation bills.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the gentleman will agree with me that if we are to change the pay we would better do it by amending substantive law rather than from year to year inserting a provision of this kind in appropriation bills.

Mr. LUDLOW. I agree with the gentleman in principle; yes.

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioned officers, pay, etc.: For pay, allowance, and commutation of quarters for not to exceed 445 regular active commissioned officers (including the Surgeon General and assistant surgeons general) and for pay of regular commissioned officers on waiting orders, $1,959,800: Provided, That the above limitation on the number of regular active commissioned officers may be exceeded by the number (not in excess of 10) of regular active commissioned officers assigned to Federal penal and correctional institutions.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. LUDLOW: Page 35, line 19, strike out "ten" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Venereal Diseases: For the maintenance and expenses of the Division of Venereal Diseases, established by sections 3 and 4, chapter XV, of the act approved July 9, 1918 (42 U. S. C. 24, 25), and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act of May 24, 1938 (52 Stat. 439-440), including rent and personnel and other services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; items otherwise properly chargeable to the appropriations for printing and binding, stationery, and miscellaneous and contingent expenses for the Treasury Department; purchase of reports, documents, and other material for publication and of reprints from State, city, and private publications; purchase (not to exceed $1,500), maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles for official use in field work; transportation; traveling expenses, including attendance at public meetings when directed by the Surgeon General; and the packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of personal effects of commissioned officers, scientific personnel, pharmacists, administrative assistants, aides, dietitians, and nurses of the Public Health Service upon permanent change of station, $5,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Ohio: Page 41, line 2, after the comma, strike out "$5,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000,000."

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the administration recommended $3,000,000 for the expenses of the so-called Division of Venereal Diseases. The subcommittee raised the amount to $5,000,000. Why was this figure raised, and is it justified?

I have practiced medicine for 30 years. I was one of the first physicians in this country to treat syphilis with 606 and its allied compounds. I have had a reasonably large experience in the treatment of both syphilis and gonorrhea. I was for 3 years chairman of our local board of health.

I do not like the kind of testimony some of the principal witnesses gave before your committee relating to the control and treatment of venereal diseases. I am sorry to say I feel most of it is strongly biased and far from complete. It is not the detached and disinterested testimony that should be had in the consideration of a subject of this kind. It is anything but that. Above all, the testimony given is very superficial.

Taking the testimony at its face value, one is led to believe all we need to do is appropriate huge sums of money and, "ipsi dixit," syphilis and gonorrhea disappear from our fair land.

Well, it just does not work that way. In the first place, we have found no cure yet for gonorrhea. It is altogether too early to tell anything definite about the newer remedies. You know when you get gonorrhea, and God knows when you get rid of it. Some of you know this as well as I do.

Syphilis is curable in a high percentage of cases. Deliberately or otherwise, some of the witnesses gave the committee the impression that this disease is greatly on the increase in this country and that the means for combating it in the several States are failing. There is no evidence whatever that it is on the increase. There is considerable evidence that it is on the decrease and has been since the discovery and use of the nontoxic arsenicals. Dr. Parran certainly must know this. He also certainly knows that the means for combating the disease in the States have been extended and improved enormously in the last 30 years.

No less than half of this appropriation will be wasted. Of course, some good will be accomplished with the remainder. And we grant you Sweden and other countries have accomplished more than we have in controlling venereal diseases. But one important comparison the witnesses forgot to make. Sweden pays cash for curing her venereal diseases. We charge the cost to our grandchildren. How will they fare if they have to pay for their sexual sins, as well as ours, too?

Here, also, again is a double invasion of State rights. Quoting from the hearings:

Mr. LUDLOW. The great State of Ohio is receiving $100,000 from the Federal Government and is raising $79,000 on its own hook.

On whose hook did the Federal Government raise the $100,000 it gives to the great State of Ohio? In what waters did it fish to get the $100,000? In Ohio waters, of course. The Federal Government fishes $200,000 out of Ohio, and then gives back to the people of Ohio $100,000, on condition that the Buckeye State itself fishes out of itself another $100,000.

I am sorry there are so many suckers in my great State of Ohio.

We here in Congress have come to a remarkable pass.

When ten or fifteen million people are thrown out of work we pass a law, and everybody has a job.

When the farmer's income sinks to the ground, we pass a law, and instantan his income rises to the top.

If the purchasing power of the people drops, we pass a law and up comes the said purchasing power.

When people indulge too much in the worship at the feet of Venus, pass a Federal law, tax the people, mortgage our children, and forth comes the abstemious genus Americanus.

Just like that,

Aside entirely from any question of merits or worth of extending this program, we cannot afford it. The President asked for only $3,000,000. I ask that my amendment pass and hold the amount to that sum. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio, whom I respect very highly, says we cannot afford to spend $5,000,000 a year to combat this terrible scourge, syphilis. I contend that when we spend $80,000,000 for a battleship without batting an eye we can afford to spend one-sixteenth part of the cost of a battleship to try to restore human values and to heal the sick and the distressed in this country. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Ohio made the statement that this is more than was requested by the Public Health Service, as I understood his statement, but I think he is mistaken. The Public Health Service is very agreeable to accepting this amount and would like to see it increased over and above $5,000,000. The amount allowed in the pending bill is the amount of the authorization under the La Follette-Bulwinkle Act and is not at all an extravagant amount, in view of the magnitude of the evil to be combated and in view of the arrangements that have been set up by the States to utilize their part of the fund in cooperation with the United States.

Some of the States construed the law incorrectly, but, nevertheless, did construe this authorization as an appropriation; and it was brought out in the hearings that many of these States, most of them, as a matter of fact, have gone ahead with arrangements to operate on the basis of the full authorization. They have set up their programs and have expanded their programs with this purpose in contemplation. If we do not appropriate the full amount, we will have a program that will sag at the very time when it ought to reach its very maximum efficiency.

We had some rather interesting testimony in our hearings on this subject and I wish that everyone here would read the hearings. Representatives from the medical profession from all over the United States, as well as representatives of public welfare organizations appeared before our committee and told us something about this scourge of syphilis. There are 500,000 new cases of syphilis occurring every year in the United States, according to the testimony brought out before us and perhaps 2,000,000 cases of gonorrhea. General Pershing made a statement, which appears in the hearings, that there are 7,000,000 people in the United States affected at this time with syphilis.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in these times when we spend money without limit for national defense and for implements of destruction we ought not begrudge a relatively meager appropriation to combat syphilis, and I may say that I believe in national defense and I have voted for expanding our national defense program.

At one time we had a terrible scourge of yellow fever. At that time there were those who said it could not be overcome, but science has overcome yellow fever and the testimony of the experts who appeared before our subcommittee was to the effect that in time, with the providing of ample funds, they will overcome or at least reduce to an irreducible minimum this awful scourge of syphilis. I believe it is a responsibility that rests upon the House of Representatives and upon the Congress to appropriate sufficient funds at this time to enable this program to continue with an efficiency with which it will no doubt continue and with the effectiveness with which it will continue if we just allow this relatively small amount of $2,000,000 above the amount provided by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations a few questions.

Did the President through his Director of the Budget ask for only $3,000,000?

Mr. LUDLOW. The Budget Bureau sent up an estimate for $3,000,000, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Then the President indicates he wants to curb extravagant, reckless, New Deal expenditures. Why does not the gentleman go along with him? Are you going to spend and spend and spend until our money is about as valuable as the many billions of inflation German marks and Russian rubles which I hold in my hand?

Mr. LUDLOW. I believe in economy as much as the gentleman from Wisconsin or anybody else, but I do not believe in practicing economy at the expense of human misery.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. But we cannot indefinitely continue to spend $2 and take in one tax dollar.

The system of spending borrowed money is but temporary in its nature and must soon explode. It is a system not only ruinous while it lasts but one that must soon fail and leave us destitute. As an individual who undertakes to live by borrowing soon finds his original means devoured by interest, and next no one left to borrow from, so must it be with Government.

It has been well said by Chief Justice Marshall of the Supreme Court that "The power to tax involves the power to destroy; the power to destroy may defeat and render useless the power to create."

It is about time that the Congress and the people of America realize the danger to our institutions if we do not stop the wanton, reckless expenditures of public money while the New Deal Soviet Frankenstein, continues its mad hostility to private industry and dries up sources of taxation while trying to transform our democracy into a collective soviet state, destroy savings, penalize success, discourage thrift, hamper private business enterprise, destroy sacred rights and liberties, and smother vital energies of a free people while shackling them in bonds of political and economic slavery.

We must realize that every dollar spent by government must be raised by taxation, this year or next year, this generation or next generation, and must be created through the labor and toil of someone some time. In the final analysis all taxes are paid by the average man or woman who labors. With the Federal Government debt now more than $40,000,000,000, and many billions more of Government guaranteed obligations, it will not be long before Uncle Sam is plunged into bankruptcy, inflation, and resulting chaos, misery, suffering, and distress such as this generation has not known.

The time is at hand to act as well as talk about reducing expenditures of public moneys.

Let us rise up and cry "Halt!" to the New Deal dreamers, crackpots, and spendthrifts, who use the taxpayers' pocket-books as guinea pigs in the experimental laboratory of communistic state socialism.

The President, through his Director of the Budget, asked for three million, as provided in the pending amendment. I shall stand by the President, even though the members of his own party want to spend millions more than the three million which he asked for. I pledge the President my support and vote when he tries to reduce the cost of Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Cancer Institute: For carrying into effect the provisions of section 7 (b) of the National Cancer Institute Act, approved August 5, 1937, $440,000.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point an amendment to the Cancer Institute bill I have introduced.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair advises the gentlewoman that she must obtain that permission in the House.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wish at this time to congratulate the Members of the House on voting for the Bulwinkle or Cancer Institute bill which passed the House 2 years ago. You all know the provisions of this act. You all know that Dr. Parran and his assistants, in conjunction with the National Advisory Committee for Cancer Con-tol, the Women's Field Army, and very many other organizations, are performing very wonderful service. I understand the Cancer Institute is nearly completed and will be occupied July 1. I believe you all agree with me that Dr. Parran is performing a splendid service for the public health of the people of our country.

I wish to call attention to a book, Civilization Against Cancer, just published, written by Dr. Clarence Cook Little, which gives very valuable and up-to-date information concerning the fight that is being made against cancer. The book tells of the work being done to eradicate cancer by different Federal, State, educational, and other organizations that are co-operating. Dr. Little points out the progress made in the fight up to this time, the great need of additional work, and the need of coordination of the work. He stresses also the great importance of diagnosing the disease in time.

My amendment to the Cancer Institute bill—and I shall ask very shortly for a hearing on it before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—provides that $2,300,000 be appropriated in order to further activities to prevent and cure cancer. It is generally conceded by the cancer experts that nearly half the deaths that have taken place could have been avoided if the existence of the cancer in these cases had been discovered early and treatment given immediately. My amendment would give money to various cancer institutes, both public and private, all over the country, for the prevention of cancer and the treatment of cancer patients. The Federal grants would be matched by equal amounts from the States.

I suppose if you talked with the 435 Members of the House, you would find very few Members have not had some relative in their own families at some time who have had the dread disease of cancer or some related disease. Fortunately, today this disease in many instances is not a dread disease, not an incurable disease, and not a chronic disease. Taken in its early stages it can be cured.

Today the mortality rate of cancer is second of all the diseases of this country. We have done something in the past few years toward the eradication of cancer. We can do very much better, and I believe it is up to the Federal Government to do its part. We are not groping in the dark on this problem. Certain kinds of cancer, to be sure, have proved to be incurable, but by operation, by deep radio therapy, by radium treatments and X-ray, cures are secured. Education and knowledge are essential in the fight against cancer. With a view to the dissemination of information I secured the passage of the following document:

[Public Resolution—No. 82—75th Congress]

[Chapter 56—3d session]

[H. J. Res. 468]

Joint resolution to dedicate the month of April in each year to a voluntary national program for the control of cancer

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to issue annually a proclamation setting apart the month of April of each year as Cancer Control Month and to invite annually the Governors of the several States and Territories and possessions of the United States to issue proclamations for like purposes. It is requested that such proclamations invite the medical profession, the press, and all agencies and individuals interested in a national program for the control of the disease of cancer by education and other cooperative means to unite during the month in a public dedication to such a program and in a concerted effort to impress upon the people of the Nation the necessity of such a program.

Approved, March 28, 1938.

Senator GEORGE, of Georgia, secured its passage in the Senate. The amendment which I introduced today will further spread information and make further care and cures possible.

I sincerely hope the Members of the House will join me in trying to continue the tremendously fine work of the public health and others. We have done well, but we must march forward to achieve our goal. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the bill I have introduced and to which I referred is as follows:

A bill to amend the act approved August 5, 1937, entitled "An act to provide for, foster, and aid in coordinating research relating to cancer; to establish the National Cancer Institute; and for other purposes"

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved August 5, 1937, entitled "An act to provide for, foster, and aid in coordinating research relating to cancer; to establish the National Cancer Institute; and for other purposes," be amended by adding, at the end of section 7 of said act, the following:

Sec. 8. (a) For the purpose of enabling the Public Health Service to assist States, counties, cities, or other political subdivisions of the States to extend and improve measures through public and private institutions and organizations for the diagnosis, treatment, and control of cancer, including the provision of hospital, diagnostic, clinic, and other facilities for the diagnosis and treatment of persons suffering from cancer or suspected of suffering from this disease, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the sum of $2,300,000; and for each fiscal year thereafter, such sum as may be deemed necessary to carry out the purposes of this section. The sums herein authorized to be appropriated shall be available for the pay, allowances, and traveling expenses of commissioned officers and other personnel assigned to duty in carrying out the purposes of this section, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including the training of personnel to carry out the provisions of this section; and for the printing of reports, documents, and other material relating thereto.

(b) Prior to the beginning of each fiscal year and at such time or times thereafter as may be necessary, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall determine, out of appropriations made pursuant to section 8 (a), the sum to be granted to the several States, including the District of Columbia, Hawaii, and Alaska. He shall then grant such sums to the several States, including the District of Columbia, Hawaii, and Alaska, on the basis of (1) population, (2) the death rate from cancer, (3) existing facilities for the diagnosis and treatment of cancer, and (4) the financial needs of the respective States. Upon making such grants he shall certify the amounts thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury. The amount of such allotment to any State for any fiscal year remaining unpaid at the end of such fiscal year shall be available for grant to the States for the succeeding fiscal year in addition to the amount appropriated and available for such fiscal year.

(c) Prior to the beginning of each fiscal year, and at such time or times thereafter as may be necessary, plans for expenditure of the grants made in accordance with section 8 (b) shall be submitted to the Surgeon General by the health authority of the respective States, or, with the approval of the State health authority, by any other State cancer control agency. After such plans have received the approval of the Surgeon General and the National Advisory Cancer Council, the Surgeon General shall determine, prior to the beginning of each quarter of the fiscal year, the amount to be paid to each State, and shall certify the amount so determined to the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon receipt of such certification, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, in accordance with such certification.

The Surgeon General is hereby authorized to appoint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, two additional members of the National Advisory Cancer Council created by section 3 of this act.

(d) With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and after consultation with a conference of State and Territorial health officers and the National Advisory Cancer Council, the Surgeon General is authorized to prescribe the rules and regulations necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

(e) A State plan under the provisions of this section must (1) provide for State or local participation at least equal to the amount of Federal funds; (2) provide for the cooperation in the State plan of the appropriate professional groups; (3) provide for improving and extending the facilities necessary for diagnosis and treatment of cancer in which preference will be given to the treatment of needy persons; (4) provide that the State health agency will make such reports as the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service may from time to time require.

(f) That to the extent that facilities may be available, not to exceed 100 persons suspected of having or known to be suffering from cancer may be cared for in hospitals of the Public Health Service for purposes of diagnosis, treatment, and clinical study.

(g) Section 8 of the National Cancer Institute Act, approved August 5, 1937, shall hereafter be designated as section 9.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses, mints and assay offices: For compensation of officers and employees of the mints at Philadelphia, Pa.; San Francisco, Calif.; Denver, Colo.; and New Orleans, La., the assay offices at New York, N. Y., and Seattle, Wash., and the bullion depositories at Fort Knox, Ky., and West Point, N. Y., including necessary personal services for carrying out the provisions of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 and the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, and any Executive orders, proclamations, and regulations issued thereunder, and for incidental and contingent expenses, including traveling expenses, new machinery and repairs, arms and ammunition, uniforms and accessories for guards, protective devices and their maintenance, training of employees in use of firearms and protective devices, purchase (not exceeding $1,500) of a motor bus, maintenance, repair, and operation of two motor busses for use at the Fort Knox Bullion Depository, cases and enameling for medals manufactured, net wastage in melting and refining and in coining departments, loss on sale of sweeps arising from the treatment of bullion and the manufacture of coins, not to exceed $500 for the expenses of the annual assay commission, not exceeding $1,000, for the acquisition, at the dollar face amount or otherwise of specimen and rare coins, including United States and foreign gold coins and pieces of gold used as, or in lieu of, money, and ores, for addition to the Government's collection of such coins, pieces, and ores, $2,016,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 45, line 5, after the comma, strike out "$2,016,000" and insert "$1,916,000" and the following: "Provided, That none of the funds appropriated in this bill shall be used for carrying out the purchase of any silver, except newly mined silver mined in the United States."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. TABER. Why not make the point of order?

Mr. LUDLOW. My attention was diverted from the reading of the amendment, and I should like to know more about the amendment before making the point of order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this limitation, and it is a pure limitation and clearly in order, to reduce the amount of the appropriation on page 45 by $100,000. This is probably $25,000 less than the amount that should be saved as a result of the operation of the amendment. I have offered the amendment for the purpose of preventing the purchase of any silver by the United States Government under any of the Silver Purchase Acts, with the exception of newly mined silver mined in the United States.

The amount of silver mined in the United States runs somewhere around 60,000,000 ounces. The purchase of old silver and foreign silver in the New York market all through this fiscal year has run approximately five times the volume in ounces and in dollars of the newly mined silver. What possible excuse there can be for the purchase of this foreign silver, frankly, no one can explain. I do not believe those who are really interested in the silver States can object to my amendment. It does not go as far as it should go, in my own personal opinion, but it does go far enough to prevent the purchase of old silver and foreign silver, which is the bulk of the purchases.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Just how does shrinking the appropriation by $100,000 prevent the purchase of the foreign silver?

Mr. TABER. It prevents the use of any of the funds appropriated in this act for the purpose of such purchase. Without the expenditures for the personnel involved in such purchase there can be no purchase. Without the expenditures for carting and handling the silver to the storage warehouse at West Point there can be no purchase of foreign silver.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman's amendment does not affect the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to make such purchases inasmuch as the Silver Purchase Act confers the power on him.

Mr. TABER. My amendment prohibits the expenditure of any of the funds for that purpose. Under this proviso, a limitation, it would be absolutely impossible for the Secretary of the Treasury to spend any of the funds appropriated in this act for the purpose of carrying out the purchase of any silver, with the exception of newly mined silver mined in the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman from New York in his observation. I believe anyone who studies the testimony of the Director of the Mint must necessarily come to the same conclusion. Mrs. Ross testified fully with respect to the great responsibility now resting on the personnel and the enormous expense incurred in the transfer of this silver from one point to another in order to get it in form to be minted.

Mr. TABER. This will divide the amount of silver that is purchased by approximately five.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a suggestion?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Would the gentleman tell the Committee the method of paying for this silver by issuing silver certificates on the basis of $1.29 for 44 cents and 64 cents silver and what this would eventually lead to?

Mr. TABER. Well, it simply leads, eventually, to inflation, of course, but what I want to do at this time is to bring the folks from the silver territory to a realization of the fact that if they are going to expect any consideration along the line of a subsidy for silver—and that is what this is—they have got to get rid of the burden of foreign-mined and foreign-stored silver. As a result of this operation of handling this foreign-mined and foreign-stored silver the United States will be paying for the operation of the Chinese-Japanese war, and before we get through we will be paying for the operation of the Spanish civil war that has been going on. There must be some limitation somewhere upon these expenditures.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota and Mr. WHITE of Idaho rose.

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota for a question.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman has already said that this would prohibit the use of any of this money for foreign-produced silver, and now the gentleman states positively that there is nothing in his amendment that would interfere with the purchase of domestically produced silver under the Silver Purchase Act.

Mr. TABER. It will not interfere with newly mined domestically produced silver mined in the United States. It will interfere with the purchase of stored silver in the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And one should also keep in mind that we have the Thomas amendment and also the Silver Purchase Act and this amendment which the gentleman proposes would not, under the Thomas amendment of the Silver Purchase Act, interfere with the purchase of domestically mined silver.

Mr. TABER. It would not interfere with the purchase of currently and domestically mined and produced silver.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it not a fact that we are exchanging our surplus commodities such as wheat and cotton for this foreign silver?

Mr. TABER. No; it is not.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. And is it not a further fact that the Government makes a 200-percent profit on taking in this silver?

Mr. TABER. That is not the fact. The gentleman does not understand the operations of the Silver Act.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I will demonstrate that when I get the floor in my own time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of a point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, on the question of the point of order—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Utah rise?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. On the question of the point of order to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, and may I propound this parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. As I understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], he reserved all points of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Then, as I understand the rules, the gentleman cannot deprive me, after making that reservation, in the event he does not want to make the point of order, of making a point of order myself against the amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the right to make the point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Then I make the point of order at this time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order until I can be heard on the amendment?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment submitted by the gentleman from New York is in violation of the Holman rule and constitutes legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah has made the point of order and the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOEHNE). The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The chairman of the subcommittee withdrew his reservation of a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] immediately made a point of order, and the Chair is about to rule on that point of order.

The Chair simply desires to call the attention of the Committee to a ruling that has been made in the past on a question very similar to this one, and the Chair reads from a decision of the Honorable Nelson Dingley, of Maine, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, on January 17, 1896, in which he ruled:

The House in Committee of the Whole has the right to refuse to appropriate for any object, either in whole or in part, even though that object may be authorized by law. That principle of limitation has been sustained so repeatedly that it may be regarded as a part of the parliamentary law of the Committee of the Whole.

Because of this decision the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. For the 6 years that I have been a Member of Congress and attending the sessions of the House the eminent Congressman from New York [Mr. TABER] has been preaching economy in season and out of season. He has at every opportunity insisted that we should lighten the tax load on business, and now at last his sincerity is being put to the test. His amendment would strike down the only monetary program of the Treasury on which the Government is making a profit.

He would stop issuing the only money redeemable in coin. He would stop issuing the only interest-free money put out by the Treasury that saves business and the American people almost a hundred million dollars a year in interest. Yes, interest that would be paid monthly, daily, and hourly as the price of keeping his kind of money in circulation.

I listened to the vicious attack on silver yesterday by the eminent gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], which I propose to answer later, as only 5 minutes of time could be had by myself in yesterday's debate.

The eminent gentleman from New York should know the facts concerning silver in our monetary system, as every Congressman receives a copy of the Treasury statement every morning. He should know that as fast as silver is purchased most of it is placed in circulation as money in the form of silver certificates, and that the Government and the American people are making a profit of 100 percent on the purchase of domestically mined silver and 200 percent on the purchase of foreign silver; but best and most important of all from the gentleman's professed solicitude for business, the American people are relieved from the interest charge as the cost of the issuance and circulation of this money.

If the eminent Republican from New York and his Republican colleague from Illinois are successful in their campaign to retire the interest-free silver certificates—legal-tender currency—and replace them with Federal Reserve notes in the amount now outstanding—$1,614,143,513—he will force business to pay the banks an annual interest yield of $48,424,305.39, calculated at 3 percent; but we all know that current rates of interest are more than 3 percent. If we calculate the interest at 6 percent, then the Federal Reserve notes that would replace the silver certificates now in circulation would yield the banks $96,848,610.78.

Now, what are these eminent gentlemen fighting for? Is it not the interest income to the banks of this country to be laid on the backs of the people by retiring the interest-free silver certificates now in circulation and replacing this money with Federal Reserve interest-yielding notes—something for these Republican gentlemen to fight for—money to come right out of the pockets of everyone every time a purchase is made from a business firm that has a note—eligible paper—made to the local bank and rediscounted by the Federal Reserve bank, on which interest must be paid if their kind of money is to remain in circulation?

Speaking of economy and Government assistance to business, these gentlemen move in mysterious ways their miracles to perform. When business is already carrying an interest load of $282,463,796.16, computing the interest at 6 percent on the $4,707,729,936 in Federal Reserve notes, which is the bulk of our currency that is now in circulation, is not there any limit to the interest load that these eminent gentlemen would lay on the backs of the American people, when this country is already $44,000,000,000 in debt as a result of this faulty and unworkable monetary system with which the Government and the business of this country is struggling? And let me remind the eminent gentlemen that are so solicitous of business that all the silver certificates in circulation would hardly pay the interest on the national debt for 1 year. If there ever was a time in the history of America when the people of the United States needed an interest-free currency and a lightening of the interest load, it is now; and I am glad that the sincerity of these gentlemen, these stalwarts of the Republican Party, has been put to the test, that the people of our country, and particularly those of our Western States, may know what the Republican Party would do to them if it was ever returned to power in this country.

Mr. Chairman, I say to the Members of this House that the best possible piece of money ever invented is American—the silver dollar—which I hold in my hand. [Applause.] I remind the Members of this House that as fast as silver is purchased, both foreign and domestic, it is immediately put into circulation, that is, flows out into the channels of trade and business, minus interest, and the main object, the main thing sought to be accomplished here by the amendment is the retirement of interest-free silver certificates, to be replaced by Federal Reserve notes on which business must pay an annual interest—interest to the bank. That is the issue before the American people; that is the issue that this gentleman is so sedulously putting forth here, in trying to retire these interest-free silver certificates.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The silver itself is up at West Point, is it not?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Where is the gold? Silver certificates are the only money redeemable in coin, and the only use that we put gold to is to cover the lendings of the Federal Reserve bank, and the sooner that fact penetrates the mind of the gentleman from Michigan, the better it will be.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why can we not buy wheat at twice its value and issue money on that?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. That is on a par with what we are doing with the silver producers.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And why not buy pig iron, because you can get it cheaper and you can run the printing presses on that. You can just as well put pig iron in the vaults in Kentucky as silver or gold.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman misses the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 45 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do not very often inject politics in my discussions. [Laughter.] And I want the reporter to note the fact that the laughter which just occurred was on the Republican side. There is no laughter for them about this statement, and that is that if silver is going to be killed, I want it to be killed by the Republican Party, because that issue has wiped out the Republican Party two or three times west of the Missouri River, and I think it is capable of wiping it out again. They are always talking about subsidizing this little handful of silver miners in the West, as though this thing was merely throwing a sop to a handful of silver miners, but I say to you that the great force in this country that has kept the silver issue alive for the last 70 years are the farmers of the United States. I believe the farmers of this country are almost unanimously in favor of the remonetization of silver. I know they are favorable to the largest possible use of silver, because that is the only money that they know anything about, and that is the only money that is in circulation in the United States. That is the kind of money that the people have in their pockets in the United States and in the House of Representatives at this moment. The money in circulation is silver certificates or silver dollars.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have not the time. There is nothing new in the amendment of the gentleman from New York except the exemption of domestically mined silver. I congratulate the gentleman on the progress that he has made in the last 4 years. I have a suspicion that some gentlemen on his side have been working him over. I do not think that he is in favor of the change that he has put into his amendment this year exempting domestically mined silver, but some gentleman has advised him it might not be healthy for the Republican Party west of the Mississippi River to go on record in the House as in favor of destroying domestic silver.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have not the time. We are familiar with the gentleman from New York and his astronomical figures as to what the Domestic Silver Purchase Act costs, when the fact of the matter is that it does not cost anything. The little subsidy that is paid to domestically mined silver is only a drop in the bucket compared to the benefits. It is true that we have acquired a vast lot of foreign silver, a lot of it in exchange for our exports, but even this foreign silver has not been a drain on the Treasury of the United States, and does not affect the Budget. Let me quote you what the Director of the Budget and the Secretary of the Treasury said to the Committee on Appropriations when this identical item was before the committee last year. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] asked the Director of the Budget:

What funds do you use to buy silver?

Mr. BELL. We use regular Treasury Department funds to purchase silver in the first instance, but gradually those funds are replaced by silver certificates which go to the Federal Reserve bank and the Government gets credit for them.

Mr. LUDLOW. Is the silver-purchase program affecting the budgetary estimates adversely?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. No.

So much for the purchase of foreign silver.

The world-wide considerations which lead to the adoption of the foreign silver-purchase policy cannot be gone into, cannot even be mentioned, in the few minutes debate which will be given the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Let us turn now to domestic silver, for which the Treasury is now paying 64.64 cents an ounce, while the world market is about 43 cents. This means a subsidy of about 21 cents an ounce. Domestic production has been running about 60,000,000 ounces per year and this would amount to a subsidy of only twelve to thirteen million dollars per year, a trifling sum to preserve a basic and indispensable national industry.

The sugar tax of one-half cent per pound to preserve the domestic sugar industry comes to about $60,000,000 a year. Agriculture for this fiscal year is being subsidized in the sum, in round numbers, of $1,000,000,000. In one form or another we have subsidized the railroads, the banks, the insurance companies, the shipping industry, the farms and homes of the country, and God knows what else. Of them all, the mining subsidy is the smallest and brings in the greatest returns. It has brought free money to the extent of fifteen hundred million dollars, which, as compared with that amount of money based on Government bonds drawing 3-percent interest, amounts to $45,000,000 per year. The cost of the silver against which these certificates are issued is paid for by silver certificates and is redeemable only in silver.

A gentleman has held up a dollar silver certificate here on the floor and has shouted that if he took it to the Treasury and got a silver dollar for it and melted it down and went back to the Treasury with the bullion, he would only get 50 cents for his silver. There is enough silver in the Treasury to give him a dollar in bullion for his silver certificate, but, laying aside that fact, his silver certificate is the only kind of paper currency which he could take to the Treasury and get any metal in redemption.

They get up here on the floor and shout inflation and debased currency in the face of the fact that the American dollar, no matter what it is made out of, is the soundest dollar in the world. When the gold content of the dollar was cut 40 percent in 1933, they said it would destroy the value of the dollar not only in this country but in the world. They said knocking the gold-payment clause out of the $100,000,000 worth of debts, public and private, was an act of national dishonor which would destroy the credit of this country at home and abroad, yet the credit of this country, after 6 years of that policy, is better than any other nation of the world, not even excluding England, supposed to be the master of the world finance. There is even less foundation for any claim that the issuance of two or three billion dollars of currency backed by silver will destroy the money of the United States. They want to destroy this free money and tie up all the money to the chokestring of a mortgage bond in the hands of the banks. That is the Senegambian in the woodpile.

If the time has come to overhaul the foreign silver-purchase policy it ought to be done properly. If there is anything clear about this situation it is that this is not the type of legislation, an amendment to an appropriation bill, and this is not the way in which to overhaul the Silver Purchase Act and the monetary policy of the United States. That ought to be done by duly considered legislation, after hearings. The Secretary of the Treasury is now before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures of the House, going into this whole subject, and we should wait. We ought to know what we are doing. We do not know the effect of this amendment. Nobody knows it. It has not been submitted to the Treasury or the mint for an opinion.

It is a wholly improper and inadequate way to revise the whole monetary policy of the United States, to have some Member walk in here and spring an amendment to cut $100,000 off of an appropriation for the mint. For the mint, mind you, not the Treasury Department, or directly affecting the powers of the Secretary of the Treasury under the Silver Purchase Act, but cutting it off of the mint; and then we sit here for 5 minutes and take his word as to what the effect of it will be on the monetary policy of the United States.

I want you Democrats to line up for silver. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I do not see why my colleague from New York [Mr. TABER] has been taken to task and his motives questioned, because he has about a 100-percent record for economy. He is certainly trying to economize by his amendment.

What is my colleague from New York trying to do? He is trying to stop having the Government of the United States finance other nations. He is trying to stop the Government of the United States giving twice the cost of production for silver mined in other nations. That is all the gentleman proposes to do by his amendment.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No; the gentleman has had his say.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is trying to stop us financing other nations to carry on wars, whether those wars be in China or in Europe or other places in the world. This amendment does not affect one iota the price of newly mined silver in the United States. That subsidy stands in this amendment, whether it is right or wrong. I am willing to support it, but, as a matter of fact, it goes to 25 mines producing silver, owned by some of the largest corporations in America, employing only three or four thousand men. That is where this silver subsidy of fifty or sixty million dollars a year goes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield at that point.

Mr. FISH. No. I am willing to support the amendment as it is. I cannot see why those on the other side are opposing it, when it does not affect newly mined silver.

Now, what is our silver policy? Where did it come from? It came from those financial wand wavers, crystal gazers, and rabbit producers who thought by monkeying around with silver and the price of silver they would increase the prices of agricultural products at home and make the purchasing power higher in Mexico and China. In Mexico and China the purchasing power has collapsed and farm prices have collapsed in America. I do not question the motives of the New Deal magicians if by the Silver Purchase Act they tried to raise farm prices, but everyone must admit that they failed completely. I only question the wisdom of it, and the fact that farm prices collapsed is the answer. What the gentleman from New York is trying to do is to economize with the Government's money, to stop using our money to finance other nations by paying twice what it costs to produce silver in foreign nations.

I only rose because a lot of this silver goes into the ground at West Point, N. Y., which is my district, right opposite where I live. I am not opposed to a subsidy to encourage the production of silver in the United States. The gentleman from Idaho said we are not losing any money. We have already spent about one and one-half billion dollars to purchase silver very largely from abroad. The testimony shows that if we sold that silver now we would lose $600,000,000. It is my belief we would lose over a billion dollars. I believe that if we tried to unload that silver it probably would not be worth more than 10 cents an ounce, and we would lose over a billion dollars. One reason that prompted me to speak was this: It was not so much the silver question, because this whole silver issue is not a flea bite or a half of a flea bite or a quarter of a flea bite compared with the gold program. Of all the follies, fallacies, and fantastic failures of the New Deal, the gold-purchasing program is by far the worst. We have spent $7,000,000,000—not one billion as for silver, but $7,000,000,000 to get gold at twice the cost of production, 70 percent of which comes from the British Empire, to take it out of the ground in South Africa and bring it over to the United States, and bury it again in the ground in Kentucky, where it draws no interest, feeds nobody, clothes nobody, builds no homes, and puts nobody to work. [Applause.]

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

At the outset, I wish to call attention to the fact that, in my opinion, it is highly improper to attempt to profoundly change the entire fiscal policy of the Nation by means of a few lines of wording in an appropriation item for the Mint.

It is emphatically not the way to produce sound legislation for the benefit of the Nation. The arguments in favor of the amendment are somewhat as follows, quoting from the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and the proponent of the amendment, the distinguished ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. TABER.

It is alleged that the acquirement of silver constitutes a tremendous burden on the taxpayers and will reflect greatly increased interest costs. This statement is certainly not supported by the facts. The silver policy relieves the burden on the taxpayer, makes a profit for the Government, and stimulates foreign trade.

I quote from the statement just made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], "The purchase of foreign silver, in effect, is paying for the operations of the Chinese war." This would be delightful news to the Japanese Government, but apparently they do not have available the financial information just imparted by the gentleman from New York. They are foolishly taxing their people to the utmost limit and borrowing money from every conceivable source. It is ridiculous to claim that the Silver Purchase Act is financing the Japanese military operations in China, except as silver purchase is incidental to promotion of the general export trade of the United States.

The reason for the purchase of foreign silver is to establish foreign credit purchasing power, primarily for surplus agricultural products, and incidentally manufactured products of the United States. We have great excess production of cotton, wheat, and manufactured products for sale. A vote for this amendment is a vote to kill employment for the farmer and workingman.

Foreign silver purchase is a credit that promotes the sale of our surplus products. As proof of this I call your attention to a quotation from the hearings of the Special Senate Committee on the Investigation of Silver. The date of the hearing is February 7, 1939. The following question was asked the Secretary of the Treasury, who, I am sure, is competent to answer it:

Would not cessation of silver imports tend to reduce American exports of goods; and, if so, would not that tendency be very harmful to the country?

The answer of Secretary Morgenthau was:

Yes, unless there should be a net outflow of nearly $5,000,000,000 in gold.

I hold in your face the testimony given in this hearing. The actual facts of the effect of silver purchases are clearly and simply stated.

My basic objection to this amendment is that it is not the proper way to initiate or enforce important legislation profoundly affecting the fiscal policies of the country. A vote for this amendment is a vote against foreign trade, against disposition of our surplus commodities, and is a vote to increase our unemployment. Vote the amendment down. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott] for 4 minutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment should be adopted. I think the fallacy of the Silver Purchase Act has been definitely proven. When we were considering the Silver Purchase Act, one of the outstanding authorities on silver, Rene Leon, told us it would create purchasing power in China and enable our farmers to sell into the Chinese market, and would enable our industrialists to sell into the Chinese market. Rene Leon has been completely repudiated by the facts.

The President himself said that the purpose of the Silver Purchase Act was to increase our exports. The President undoubtedly was following the advice of Rene Leon, and is not to be criticized too much for that, because many of us listened very attentively to his testimony before the House Committee on Banking and Currency in respect of the silver-purchase plan, and many went along with him.

What has happened to China and our trade with China because of the silver-purchase plan? We so demoralized the Chinese currency that banks closed, and factories closed in China resulting in a situation comparable to our depression of 1929-32.

The price of silver was bid up to the point where the bank holdings of silver in China were depleted, forcing China off the silver standard. As a consequence, they tied to the British pound sterling. China is a frontier country. It has a vast potential market for American produced goods. For the first time in its history China has a unique nationalism. Instead of being subservient to royal war lords, Chinese citizens today are responsible only to their central government. It has a nationalism comparable to that which we enjoy in America.

Mr. Chairman, with this nationalism comes a demand for occidental goods—radios, automobiles, electrical equipment, kitchen utensils, furniture, and machinery. All of the things which we manufacture in the United States could be sold in that market had we not forced them off the silver standard. As a consequence, that highly desirable market is placed in such a position that almost all of the trade between the United States and China must be transacted through the back door of London, England.

It is not so much a question whether we should subsidize our silver miners, because this amendment, as I understand it, definitely protects the domestic silver miners and continues to subsidize them. Whether that may be a desirable thing to do is not the question before us, because this particular amendment exempts domestically mined silver from the operation of the Silver Purchase Act. Our concern is with the question whether it is advisable to continue it because of the effect it might have on foreign exchange and on our foreign markets. We do not know, but we have every reason to believe that the Silver Purchase Act of the United States has made it possible for the Loyalist Government in Spain to continue operations there. We do know that all of the gold holdings of Spain were depleted over 1½ years ago. I hope that during the hearings before the Coinage, Weights, and Measures Committee on this matter it may be brought out whether the Silver Purchase Act of the United States has been used as the basis for loans to or purchases of armaments for Loyalist Spain.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, in speaking to the Committee this morning may I suggest it is not so much right now a question of the wisdom or unwisdom of the silver policy adopted in 1934. We have rules of the House under which we are supposed to proceed.

There is pending in the Senate today and before a House committee, legislation which has to do with the silver-purchase program in which committees it is being orderly considered as contemplated by our rules. Is it not the course of wisdom to await the action of those legislative committees instead of sniping at a program by striking out an appropriation item? Have we no respect for our rules? Have we no respect for our legislative committees on whom devolves the duty of reporting legislation on this question?

Mr. Chairman, do we want to make the Appropriations Committee of the House an appellate court on the actions of every legislative committee of the House? What difference does it make, so far as economy is concerned, to strike from this bill a little item of $100,000 or so? Is not the principle involved a bigger one than the mere sum of $100,000?

Our distinguished friend from New York is apprehensive about the price we may get for the silver that has accumulated in the Treasury. Mr. Chairman, can anything be as dangerous or as destructive, so far as the price of silver is concerned, as to haphazardly stymie the Treasury Department in carrying out a silver policy which has heretofore been legislated by the Congress?

There has been a lot of talk about the purchase of silver adding to the national debt. The way that silver is purchased under the Silver Purchase Act and under the proclamations of the President of the United States is as follows, and I challenge the gentlemen on the Republican side, who are so subtly trying to destroy the silver program, to deny the fact.

When an ounce of silver is offered to the Treasury, whether under the Silver Purchase Act or under a silver-purchasing proclamation of the President, this is what happens: If it is newly mined domestically produced silver, under the present proclamation of the President, the offerer of the silver is paid 64.64 cents an ounce, and immediately this silver is monetized at its monetary value as fixed by law, which is $1.29 an ounce. We have, therefore, a transaction which has netted the United States Government, under present law, a profit of 100 percent. If the silver offered is foreign silver, the Treasury purchases it, let us say, at 49.8 cents an ounce, which has been the prevailing price during the entire year of 1933 and up to the present time. This silver is immediately monetized at the monetary value of silver, which is $1.29 an ounce. Silver certificates are issued in payment of silver, whether it is domestic or foreign. There is no borrowing of money for the purchase of silver. There is no interest payable to bankers in the purchase of silver. In fact, silver certificates are the only money in circulation in the United States today which is not created out of debt. Silver certificates are the only money in the circulation in the United States today on which the people are not paying interest. Silver certificates are the only money in circulation redeemable in metal.

Referring again to the purchase of foreign silver at 49.8 cents an ounce, the price paid during the entire year of 1933 on every ounce purchased by the United States Treasury, the United States Government has made a profit of better than 110 percent. Now, under what stretch of the imagination can the United States Treasury take a loss under this program? Of course, if this Government is ever foolish enough to deliberately demonetize silver, if it is foolish enough to dump its entire silver holdings onto the world market for the deliberate purpose of destroying the silver market, we could take a loss. But, certainly, even the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and his distinguished colleague on the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], in the event their party ever attains power over the Government of the United States again—God forbid—even they would not be foolish enough to take any such action as this. On the other hand, we find silver certificates circulating under the monetary program of the New Deal at parity with all other types and classes of United States currency. They circulate on the same basis as Federal Reserve notes created out of debt. Not even the Republican opponents of silver would exchange what they consider obnoxious silver certificates for their much-coveted Federal Reserve notes at any discount whatever. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] asserted last Friday in his tirade against silver that silver certificates were crowding Federal Reserve notes out of circulation.

I doubt very much whether or not this statement is true, but what a great boon it would be to the American people if such were actually the case. If we could have silver certificates coming into circulation as the result of American miners working at decent wages, producing the silver that backs silver certificates—coming into circulation in the United States in such volume that they were replacing the interest-bearing Federal Reserve notes created out of debt, and to every one of which attaches an interest payment to bankers—what a godsend it would be to the great mass of American people. I wonder if this, Mr. Chairman, is not the real secret behind the opposition of Republicans to the silver program of the New Deal. I wonder if the fact that silver certificates do not carry interest to the great bankers of the United States is not the very reason why we find the gentleman from New York, the ranking Republican member of the Appropriations Committee, opposed to any silver program whatever. He has tried to cover his subtle efforts today to destroy the silver program by trying to make the domestic-silver industry believe that he is not aiming at them. But if his amendment should carry, it would so demoralize the silver market of the world that, regardless of the efforts of the New Deal to aid the domestic industry, it would not recover in a decade. The gentleman from New York is doing exactly what I prophesied he would do during my last campaign in the State of Utah. The Republicans of Utah are just as dependent on silver as the Democrats of Utah. The leaders of the Republican Party always assure us just prior to election how sympathetic the Republican Party is to the welfare of the silver industry of the West, but just as soon as election is over and Congress convenes we find their sympathy expressed in actions directed to the destruction of the entire silver program.

Now, let us consider for just a moment the redemption feature of silver certificates. All that any holder of a silver certificate can get therefor from the Treasury of the United States in the way of redemption is that for each dollar in silver certificates when presented to the Treasury he will be handed one silver dollar. This redemption can be had and still leave in the Treasury the huge profit it has made by purchasing silver for less than its monetary value and immediately monetizing it at its statutory monetary value. As stated above, silver certificates circulate at par without any question as to their parity with all other types of money and currency issued by the United States. The big round silver dollars that you find circulating in the West constitute the only hard and sound money in circulation in the United States today. In answer to a statement made by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] on Friday last, I read from a letter received from the Treasury Department addressed to me, dated February 27, 1939, signed by Herbert E. Gaston, assistant to the Secretary, as follows:

The procedure which has been followed in the purchase of silver has been to issue silver certificates to the cost of the silver acquired. The purchase of silver thus does not reduce Treasury cash balances nor cause an increase in the public debt.

This certainly should be a sufficient answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] as to how silver is purchased under the present program, and it should assure him and every Member of this distinguished body that the purchase of silver does not reduce Treasury cash balances nor cause any increase in the public debt.

The gentleman from New York, and other opponents of the silver program, refer to it as a subsidy to the silver mines of the West. But instead of a subsidy this program has resulted in the greatest profits to the Treasury of any monetary program ever adopted. For the sake of argument, I care not how long a silver certificate remains in existence, I care not how low the price of silver may go, under the present program the United States Treasury can never take a loss. Under the program the Treasury is only obliged to deliver to the holder of silver certificates a dollar in silver, which is fixed by statute, for a dollar outstanding in silver certificates. The price of silver cannot have any bearing on this obligation; and the Treasury, under the present program, can retire every certificate in existence and still have a vast amount of silver representing the profits from this program.

The use of silver in the arts and sciences since the adoption of the silver program of the New Deal has increased more than 120 percent, so the future outlook from this standpoint should dispel any fears of a great fall in the price of silver unless this Government willfully contributes to it. On the questions of imports and exports we find that, notwithstanding the great wailing of the Republican Members as to the vast amount of foreign silver that has come in under our program, since 1873 until the present date our exports of silver are vastly greater than our imports, indicating again that the balance of trade in this commodity, if we wish to consider silver as a commodity, is still in favor of the United States.

In conclusion, I desire to say that it has been indeed a pleasure to me to witness the unanimity of the Democratic side in support of the silver program, contrasted with the unanimity on the Republican side against it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. For a question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it the gentleman's understanding that under the Silver Purchase Act the Treasury of the United States can issue debt obligations in order to secure the dollar exchange with which to pay for the silver?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I presume that is one way it can be done. My understanding is that silver certificates are issued.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to support this amendment because I believe it is for the best interests of the silver industry of the country. I am afraid a continuation of the present policy will throw such a burden of proof upon the silver-mining interests of the West that if we do not take the step proposed in this amendment we are going to lose the entire benefits of the Silver Purchase Act so far as domestic producers are concerned.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Briefly.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Does the gentleman believe this is the proper procedure to enact legislation, or would it not be better to hold public hearings and let the mining men of the West come in and appear before the committee and tell their story?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of course, I think that would be preferable. I recognize this is a method of indirection. At the same time, what we are doing by the purchase of foreign silver is to seek, by indirection, to help the exportation of cotton, wheat, or whatever the commodity may be. It may be a desirable thing to aid the exportation of these commodities from this country, but to do it by the purchase of foreign silver is also doing something by indirection.

Even though it may be an indirect method of accomplishing the result, I am convinced the step proposed by this amendment is necessary if we are going to protect the present benefit to domestic silver under the present Silver Act.

GOLD PRICE IS SELF-DEFENSE

I am sorry that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] brought into the discussion the question of the gold purchases, because that confuses the issue. However, because the gentleman has brought it into the discussion I wish to make one or two references to it.

The gentleman from New York and many other Members of the House in discussing the Gold Reserve Act at various times have assumed that by fiat or by legislation or by some decree of this country the price of gold was automatically raised from $20.67 to $35. As a matter of fact, no act of this Congress or no proclamation by any President is fundamentally responsible for the increase in the price of gold. What increased the price of gold above $20.67 per ounce was the demand for gold.

In 1933, before we ever had any purchasing of gold in this country at $35, the price of gold on the open market in London was bouncing far above $20.67. It was up to $26 and $29, and for some time was between $32 and $34 per ounce. Because gold was going out of this country we had a proclamation establishing an embargo upon gold in this country to protect this country from losing its supply of gold. Finally, in self-defense, we passed the Gold Act, which authorized the purchase of gold at $35 an ounce. Prior to that time gold was selling in London for over $32 an ounce. Since we have purchased gold at $35, gold has sold on the open market in London at more than $35 an ounce.

The establishment of the $35 price in America was only in self-defense. Various steps were taken. At one time after the embargo was first established, when the domestic producers of gold said "it is unfair to force us to sell gold for $20.67 at the mint here when if you would let us send it to London we could get $29 or $32 an ounce for it," the Government for a time said, "We will pay you the world price of the gold, but you cannot ship it out of this country."

The Gold Act was the result of definite conditions calling for self-defense. Anyone who has studied the history of gold ought to realize that gold does have a real value, regardless of what you say about the price. In the case of a national emergency, in case of war, if you have gold, you can go to some other country, whether or not it is on the gold standard, and you can get the war supplies you need. If you have the gold, you can get what you need in the world markets. This is why it is important to have a good reserve of gold. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

May I respectfully suggest to the Members from the mining States that they would render a great service to their country as well as the silver interests in their own districts if they would support and vote for this amendment? When the rank and file of our American people find out what a liberal Santa Claus Uncle Sam has been for foreign people under your New Deal silver and gold programs you will be mighty lucky if you retain any subsidy for your domestically produced silver and gold.

Who was the daddy of this gold and silver legislation? Was he a monetary expert? No. He was a college professor, an agricultural college professor—Warren. Professor Warren wrote a book and revealed that he was a great inventor. He admitted that he tried to perfect a device which would light up the chicken houses and make the chickens think that night was day, so they would lay two eggs a day instead of one. Professor Warren admitted that his device was imperfect; that it sent the chickens to their death instead of to the nest to lay an egg at night as well as in the day.

This New Deal professor, however, did perfect an invention to light up the home of the blue goose that laid the gold and silver eggs. The Warren invention was the New Deal silver and gold program under which the blue goose did lay two silver and two golden eggs instead of one. The record shows, however, that the New Deal let the people in foreign lands have most of the benefit from the Warren invention. Under the New Deal gold and silver programs foreign gold and silver producers and owners had most of the blue geese which laid two silver and two golden eggs instead of one, and Uncle Sam and the American people have been forced to contribute many billions of dollars to feed these geese in foreign lands.

Our New Deal administration forced Americans to turn in all of their gold to the Government for $20.67 an ounce or else go to the jailhouse for 5 years. They then imported from foreign lands from 1934 to 1938, inclusive, according to Treasury statistics, $7,676,858,307 worth of gold and paid $35 an ounce for it. Most of these imports came from England and France, who owe the American taxpayers' Treasury more than $10,000,000,000 which was handed to them by the World War Democratic administration.

What did you do under your New Deal silver legislation? According to these Treasury statistics, we imported $955,398,319 worth of silver from foreign lands during the years 1934 to 1938, inclusive. A great deal of this silver was purchased at more than two times the price of silver before the enactment of Professor Warren's New Deal silver legislation. This amendment does not reduce the subsidy for American silver producers. It merely protects America from being exploited by producers, owners, and importers of foreign silver. Let us pass this amendment and stop Uncle Sam from playing Santa Claus in a big way to these foreign interests.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself particularly to the majority side of the House. My message should be of particular interest to you.

I hold in my hand a paper dollar bill. It is a silver certificate. I understand it is redeemable in silver. That is, I can redeem it at the United States Treasury for one silver dollar. Many of us have been wondering about the silver certificates that are being issued. We hear it said there is something wrong with them. Indeed, there is something wrong with them and it should not be difficult for us to find out what that is.

Suppose I should take this dollar bill to the United States Treasury and ask them for a silver dollar for it. The clerk at the window graciously hands me the silver dollar. Suppose I take the silver dollar home and melt it down into a small silver bar. Suppose then I take this little bar of silver back to the office of the United States Treasury and ask them how much they will give me for it. What will be the reply of the clerk at the window? He will say, "I will give you 50 cents for your bar of silver," and that is all he will give me for it.

Suppose, however, I take my bar of silver that I got from melting my silver dollar down to the world silver market and put it up for sale there. There I will be offered only 32 or 33 cents for it.

The real worth of the silver contained in the bar, therefore, is only 32 or 33 cents. The dollar bill I gave the Treasury for it was only a warehouse receipt for the silver contained in the silver dollar. Therefore this dollar bill which I hold in my hand is actually only worth about one-third of its face value. What is the other two-thirds? The other two-thirds is fiat money pure and simple.

Two-thirds of it is inflation. This means that the silver certificates now in use as money are inflated to the amount of two-thirds of their face value, which is 200 percent. The President now has the power to double this inflation.

And still people ask what is the matter with America.

It so happens my middle name is Cleveland. I was named after Grover Cleveland. My father was a gold Cleveland Democrat. Grover Cleveland was one of our greatest money Presidents. If he knew what is being done now to our money he would be turning over in his grave.

Cleveland called a special session of Congress in 1893 to consider the repeal of the Sherman Silver Purchase Act. The country was in a panic at that time. Cleveland blamed the distress of the country on the money debasement involved in the Silver Purchase Act. Between 1878 and 1891 the Treasury spent $308,000,000 in buying 291,000,000 ounces of silver at an average price of $1.06 an ounce. The Treasury then coined out of the 291,000,000 ounces $378,000,000. It then allocated to itself a "profit" of $70,000,000 as seigniorage.

That meant a 20-percent inflation of the silver money. When the Congress was discussing the repeal of the Silver Purchase Act they took the matter very seriously. They debated the question on this floor for 15 days and nights. The result was the act was repealed. The repeal of the Sherman Silver Act immediately brought the country out of its depression.

Now, if a debasement of the silver money at that time to the amount of only 18 percent could bring on a depression such as was experienced then, is it any wonder our country is in its present deplorable condition when we have an inflation of 200 percent, which can be doubled at the will of the Chief Executive? This is to say nothing about the pathologic condition of the other part of our monetary problem.

It is important to point out that Grover Cleveland especially understood the importance of a sound and honest money system. He knew that the solution of the unemployment problem depended upon reestablishing confidence in money. He pointed this out in one of his messages to Congress. For full employment he said we need "contented capital."

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What is the purchasing power of that dollar today as compared with the dollar in 1928 and 1929?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The purchasing power of this dollar can be measured in fairly precise terms. In 1929 the United States dollar bought about $6,500,000,000 of brand new capital, which gave millions of workmen employment. In the year 1938 our dollar bought about $850,000,000 worth of new capital and left millions in the bread lines. That is what our present dollar is worth as compared with 1929.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But what is its purchasing power in clothing and groceries today? It is worth 20 percent more today than in 1928 or 1929?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. For those who have full employment, yes; but for the millions who have not any jobs, who have no dollars with which to buy groceries and clothing, the dollar is not worth a cent.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, some recent American political history has just been paraded before us, and I should like to call your attention to the fact that Grover Cleveland was not the only great and distinguished Democrat we have had on the American scene. Right now I am thinking of another Democrat and of his words, and as we discuss this measure I see the dividing line as it was in 1896.

If they dare to come out in the open and defend the gold standard as a good thing, we will fight them to the uttermost, having behind us the agricultural interests and all the toiling masses. * * * The big business interests have made too limited their definition of a businessman.

This great Democrat thought that farmers, small merchants, and miners are businessmen.

Today we have the same issue. We on this right side of the central line have behind us in this struggle the laboring classes, the farming classes, and the multitude of small-business men, while you on that side of the aisle have behind you the banking interests and some big-business men.

What do you want in this simple amendment that you propose in the guise of economy? You are striking deep at the fundamental financial policy of our country. You want a money, sound money, you say, but a money for the businessmen, not a Government currency but a bank currency based on an interest-bearing indebtedness, whether it be national bank notes or Federal Reserve notes. It is a money that is based on a bonded indebtedness or an interest-bearing debt. As my colleague from Idaho has pointed out to you, we favor the money of the masses. It is the money of the laboring people, the farming people. I am not in favor of unrestricted fiat money. I certainly am not in favor of rank inflation, such as you hold before us as a scarecrow. I am not fearing that the United States is going the way of Germany at the close of the World War, but I am saying to you that that which has been regarded as money since the world began, gold and silver, is our money, and I want to assure you that although some silver purchased may be put in a hole at West Point, it is not buried. It furnishes us a representative money which I am very glad to possess.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Briefly.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. If the United States Government or the United States could get entirely out of debt and all business go on a cash basis, could any Federal Reserve notes circulate, or could we have any currency under the Federal Reserve System at all?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. No; in such an event we could not have either Federal Reserve bank notes or Federal Reserve notes. I say this because Federal Reserve bank notes have been based on the Government's obligation, just as the old national bank notes were, and Federal Reserve notes are based upon private obligations arising in the course of business. Although I can see some logic in this latter class of notes—Federal Reserve notes—it does seem a shame that business must pay an interest rate in order to bring it into circulation.

The Federal Reserve System uses gold as a basis so far as any metal is used. I insist that if we confine our basis for a monetary system to gold alone as we have for many years past, it puts too great power in the hands of the few holders of gold. We must use both gold and silver as the basis for our monetary system from now on. It seems to me that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is sniping at this whole silver policy. Perhaps there ought to be a modification of our dealing in foreign silver, but as the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] and the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] pointed out, this is not the place to do it. Let us go about it in a legislative fashion, and we may agree to it, but the purpose of this amendment is bad, and I am opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to discuss the merits or the demerits of the Silver Purchase Act. That has been done by others. At one time a distinguished Member of this House, in a moment of conviviality, rose and said, "Where am I at?" I think it may be well for us at this juncture to pause and ask ourselves where we are "at" in connection with this amendment now pending before the House. The Secretary of the Treasury, by a specific statute, is under a mandate to purchase silver. It is a mandate from which he cannot escape until silver attains the position of one-fourth of the entire monetary stock of the country, or until it reaches the price of $1.29 an ounce. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has said his amendment would cut off absolutely the purchases of all foreign silver, which amount to more than three-fourths of all the purchases of silver. It seems to me that you will then have the Secretary of the Treasury tied up in a very hard knot. He is under a mandate to purchase silver, and yet if this amendment should prevail, he could not purchase anything but newly mined domestic silver, and if he purchased that to meet the requirements of the statute, it is obvious that he would be piling up a subsidy to these domestic producers of silver that would be out of all reason. The point I make is, without taking issue for that matter with the general objective of the gentleman from New York, with which I have much sympathy, nevertheless this is a matter which certainly should have the attention of a legislative committee and should have long and serious and constructive consideration with hearings, and an opportunity for everyone concerned and every section of the country to be heard. So I plead with the House to defer favorable action on the amendment and to allow this matter to be considered in a legislative way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUDLOW) there were—ayes 130, noes 128.

Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. TABER and Mr. LUDLOW to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 135, noes 155.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction of public buildings outside of the District of Columbia: For continuation of construction of, and acquisition of sites for, public buildings outside of the District of Columbia, including the purposes and objects, and subject to the limitations, specified under this head in the Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937, and also including those increases in the limits of cost of certain authorized projects, 25 in number, as specified in House Document No. 177, Seventy-sixth Congress, $30,000,000: Provided, That the provisions of section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), shall not apply with respect to the rental of temporary quarters for housing Federal activities during the replacement or remodeling of buildings authorized under this or previous acts.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 51, line 8, strike out "$30,000,000" and insert "$60,000,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Montana desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would like to be heard briefly. In the act of 1937, which is the basis for this appropriation, Congress authorized the sum of $70,000,000 for expenditure over a period of 3 years. The Chair will note that there was no particular quota of that amount directed by Congress to be used during any particular year. In 1938 Congress again authorized a further appropriation of $60,000,000, making a total of $130,000,000. Of the $130,000,000, $59,000,000 have been appropriated, and this bill now seeks to appropriate $30,000,000 more, making a total of $89,000,000. My point is this. This bill is subject to amendment in this respect for the reason that the additional amount sought to be appropriated by the amendment makes a total of $119,000,000, or $11,000,000 under the authorization of the acts of 1937-38. Inasmuch as Congress did not direct any particular amount of the $130,000,000 to be used or appropriated in any 1 year, my contention is the amendment is in order so long as we retain part of the $130,000,000 authorized to use for post-office buildings during the third year.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] offers an amendment on page 51, line 8, seeking to increase the appropriation there stated, $30,000,000, to the figure of $60,000,000, to which amendment the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] makes a point of order on the ground that the increase in the item sought to be made is not authorized by law.

The Chair invites attention to Public Resolution 122, Seventy-fifth Congress, title III, Federal Public Buildings, and quotes in part as follows:

* * * is hereby increased from $70,000,000 to $130,000,000.

There is a balance remaining of that authorization of $71,000,000. The pending bill carries an appropriation of $30,000,000, which would leave $41,000,000 unappropriated. The amendment of the gentleman from Montana seeks to increase the $30,000,000 appropriation to $60,000,000, or seeks to appropriate $30,000,000 of the remaining $41,000,000 authorized by law. Therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

The gentleman from Montana is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, on page 1873 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON], in answer to an inquiry, stated as follows:

I have just explained that it takes about $60,000,000 to construct a post-office building in each district each year. The $30,000,000 carried in the bill is just to carry on the 3-year program of two buildings for each congressional district for the 3-year period.

So you will see that the appropriation contained in this bill would not provide in each congressional district one post-office building. The least we can do, in the light of the information as disclosed by House Document 177, is to provide for the construction of a post-office building in each congressional district each year; and, according to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON], and I think he is correct, it would require $60,000,000 to do that.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAHON. Does not the gentleman understand that if his amendment were adopted it would not mean an additional Federal building for the congressional districts? It would simply mean an appropriation which the Procurement Division is not in a position to utilize, and therefore would be an idle gesture.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have heard it said that the Procurement Division was without sufficient help to carry out this program if we appropriated the additional $30,000,000. In reply to that, I want to say we are feeding and taking care of millions of people throughout the country who are unemployed. Why not put some of those unemployed people to work? The Procurement Division can hire them just the same as anybody else. You get more for your money in the construction of a Federal post-office building than you get for your money in the construction of other Government buildings built by relief labor throughout the United States. There is not a congressional district in the West or in the East that should not have an additional post-office building. Let us put this money to work. The authorization was made in 1937 and 1938. Let us appropriate this $30,000,000 and give them $60,000,000 to work with, and if the Procurement Division does not have sufficient help, let them employ some of the people who are now upon relief in the United States.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true also that it will be a saving in the end, because it will save rental expense?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Exactly. In addition to that, the post offices are needed. In my district there are 17 cities eligible for post offices now. None of them is authorized to date.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield for a question.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. For a suggestion. If the cities in your district would contact Mr. "Chip" Robert, of Georgia, no doubt you would get some post offices. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think the gentleman is out of order.

Now, getting down to business, let us put to work this money. Let us put to work the people throughout the United States in the construction of Federal post-office buildings which are needed. They are needed in Montana, in California, in New York, and in many other States. Some of the States are well provided for, but the States I have pointed out, including Iowa and Nebraska as well as many others, need post-office buildings. So let us hurry this program. The expenditure of the $130,000,000 is provided for in the act of 1937 and the act of 1938. When next year comes around make additional appropriations to supply the country with needed post offices.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. Does the gentleman think if his amendment were agreed to, that would mean there would be any additional post offices built throughout the United States?

Mr. O'CONNOR. By the adoption of my amendment you would sharply advance the construction of post offices for which there has been an authorization, and no doubt in the near future additional post-office buildings would be built as a result of the amendment.

Mr. NICHOLS. It does not mean any new building.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Perhaps not immediately.

Mr. O'NEAL. What is the gentleman's recommendation as to a post-office building program for the next 10 years?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have not that in mind. All I have in mind now is that we have the authorization for these buildings, we need these post offices, and we need to put people to work. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure everybody knows that even if this amendment were adopted not one congressional district in the United States would get a single additional building, it would not add one building to the $130,000,000 program authorized, for that has been entirely allocated, the amount to be appropriated for each district has been determined, and the amount carried in this item is the amount necessary to carry the program through the coming fiscal year.

The Department came to us with a proposal that we appropriate $30,000,000, which they said was all they needed, that it met all of the requirements of the program.

The gentleman from Montana spoke about using people on relief to do this work on these buildings, but I would point out to him that you do not find on the relief rolls men capable of drawing the plans, specifications, and blueprints necessary for great public buildings. A certain degree of architectural skill and art is required. Furthermore, there is a certain maximum of production possible, and this is provided for by this $30,000,000. We want to sustain that organization in an efficient operating condition. The $30,000,000 carried in this item represents every cent they can use. Why, therefore, do we want to double the appropriation when they can not use it?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Could not that force be increased? Are there not other qualified people who can be added to that force, architects who can draw these plans?

Mr. LUDLOW. To add another $30,000,000 to this item would not speed the program. The program adopted meets all of the expectations of Congress. The organization handling this work carries it on in an efficient, progressive manner. Thirty million dollars is all the money they need, is all the money they can use. Such an organization as this cannot be built up overnight; it is not a mushroom proposition; this work has to be done by a skilled organization that has been built up over a long period of years.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. When is the program to begin in the districts, this year or next year?

Mr. LUDLOW. The original program, as I understood it, was to cover every congressional district in the United States, placing one building in each district.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. But nothing in this year 1939; is that right?

Mr. LUDLOW. In some districts; yes. Some of these buildings are in progress now. I cannot tell the gentleman when a building will be built in any particular district. This is a 3-year program, as a result of which a public building will be built in each district of the United States that can qualify. A certain number of districts have not so far met the qualifications, because the postal receipts have not been sufficient. As I understand, however, reservations have been set up for 56 such projects, covering over $4,000,000, which is held in reserve pending the time these districts do qualify.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact that this $130,000,000 program will provide two buildings for each district instead of one? Two building programs were adopted, one for $70,000,000, the original one, and a second one last year of $60,000,000.

Mr. LUDLOW. I stand corrected; the gentleman states the facts correctly. The $130,000,000 program will furnish two buildings in every district.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that under the $130,000,000 program the two post-office buildings per district ought to be built in the 3-year period with the present set-up and with this appropriation as it is written in the pending bill?

Mr. LUDLOW. That is the way the plan will work out, and this $30,000,000 is the amount needed for this year's work under the program. To make a haphazard appropriation and throw another $30,000,000 into this activity would disrupt progress and make for confusion.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Increase the appropriation, increase the force. The country needs the post offices.

Mr. LUDLOW. What is the use of appropriating money that cannot be used?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The people need the work.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The idea we hear expressed that we are going to save money by building these post offices certainly is erroneous because in most instances interest on the cost of the new building is greater than the cost of rental of like quarters.

Mr. LUDLOW. I think the gentleman is making a good argument, but the fact is the Congress has authorized this program and I think the gentleman's argument comes a little too late.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take 5 minutes but, as a member of this subcommittee on appropriations, I want to again call the attention of the Members of the House, and particularly the attention of the Members on this side of the aisle, to the word "economy." The committee worked on this bill for a month in an endeavor to try to save the taxpayers a little money in the operation of these various Departments. [Applause.]

We went into every individual item and did the best we could and in spite of all the efforts we put into the work, the total involved in the pending bill is $1,780,000,000. I think we have done a very good job in cutting off $27,000,000. We knew there would be complaints. We knew that the people who might be injured a little bit by the cuts would be here demanding that the money be put back. This always happens and that has been the case here.

Mr. Chairman, I want to urge the Members of the Committee to remember that in voting on this amendment, if you agree to it you will increase by $30,000,000 the total amount given you a moment ago, which is $3,000,000 more than our months of work was able to effect in the way of savings. I do not care what excuse we make as to how much we would like to see a beautiful building go up in our various districts, our country cannot afford it. Of course, it is a nice thing to go back home and say that we got another post office for our district, or that we got six or seven more.

Mr. Chairman, let us begin to stand pat on the proposition that when a committee has studied a thing for months and has endeavored to effect every possible saving we will try to support it. Let us endeavor to consider very carefully before we do anything to raise the amount that the committee brings in. There is extravagance enough now and to agree to an amendment of this sort at the present time, in my opinion, would be almost criminal waste. I ask the members of the Committee to vote against the pending amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF CHIEF INSPECTOR

Salaries of inspectors: For salaries of 15 inspectors in charge of divisions and 600 inspectors, $2,336,000.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOSER: Page 61, line 3, after "$2,336,000," insert "Provided, That none of the funds appropriated herein shall be used to increase the salaries of post-office inspectors."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment just offered.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday afternoon I addressed the Committee of the Whole and mentioned what had occurred with respect to appropriations heretofore made for increased personnel under the Chief Post Office Inspector. Under the Classification Act of 1935 some comfort was taken by Mr. Mague, superintendent of post-office inspectors in the Post Office Department, in that appropriations have not been made and a reallocation of funds has been rendered necessary in order to meet the requirements of this particular classification act.

As I stated yesterday, it must be really offensive to a person to be under the compulsion of an act that requires an increase of the salaries of the personnel under that particular individual's direction. In my experience as a post-office inspector in the field I know that a field inspector is not promoted or increased unless his inspector in charge comes to Washington and goes to bat for him and puts up a battle. However, the people who are in the chief inspector's office and who have their friends at court are the ones who are favored.

Since I have been a Member of the Congress I have had before the chief inspector the name of a constituent who has been desirous of qualifying by taking a competitive examination for post-office inspector in order to prove his merit and ability to serve in this capacity, and since that time he has not been favored even with an examination. I have not asked that he be reassigned or that he be appointed, but only that he be permitted to take the same examination I was permitted to take a good many years ago.

A ruling was made by the Chair about an hour and a half ago in which the Chair made reference to the fact that a previous Chairman of the Committee of the Whole [Mr. Dingley] had stated that the House had a right to appropriate or not to appropriate.

Under the act of 1935, which provides for the increase of these salaries, there has been no appropriation made, and, as Mr. Mague testified before the committee, it was passed. He meant "passed up." It has not been a popular thing for anybody in the Government service to come forward and ask for appropriations to increase salaries. However, there has been a great disposition on the part of the Congress and the Government of the United States to find employment for people everywhere.

If there were to be increases in the Post Office inspection force for the very purpose they advocated when they came before the Appropriations Committee, may I say, if they concluded the investigation of cases uninvestigated and others to be undertaken, it would exact appointments to the personnel of the Inspection Service, which would deplete the ranks among the letter carriers, railway postal clerks, and others, and accomplish extra appointments to fill them, as contrasted to salary increases for those having jobs. The Congress has not appropriated money to increase salaries under the Classification Act of 1935, and Mr. Mague, as superintendent of the Post Office inspection force, has seen fit under the guise of reallocation of funds to take that which was appropriated for an increase in the personnel and divert it to increasing salaries, which was not publicized until it came before this committee in the hearings. That is a practice I feel every Member of Congress who votes for an appropriation for increase in personnel has a perfect right to resent.

That is my purpose in offering this amendment. I trust the Committee may adopt it, that it may be binding on those who are charged with the administration of this appropriation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana withdraw his reservation of a point of order?

Mr. LUDLOW. I do, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not occupy 5 minutes. I am sure the House understands the bent of mind of the Subcommittee on Appropriations against unwarranted increases in salaries. We have a good deal of sympathy for the philosophy expressed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his remarks, but just to write into the statute that under no circumstances shall there be any increase in the salaries of inspectors no matter what the conditions or the circumstances may be would seem to be hamstringing the Office of Inspectors in an unreasonable way. We do not believe this would be conducive to sound administration. I do feel, however, that these increases should be made only in exceptional cases.

With these observations I shall conclude. This is a matter entirely for the House to decide.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moser].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Moser) there were—ayes 56, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Compensation to assistant postmasters: For compensation to assistant postmasters at first- and second-class post offices, $6,950,000.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SWEENEY: On page 62, after the word "offices" in line 26, strike out "$6,950,000" and insert "$7,000,000."

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, there probably is no group of Government employees more appreciative of the efforts of Congress to better their conditions than the great Postal Service. This amendment has merit. Many of you will recall that last year the able chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, now the junior Senator from New York [Mr. Mead], made a plea on the floor of the House for a million dollars for clerk hire and a million dollars for carrier hire in excess of the Budget estimate, and that fight was successful. Had it failed, the service probably would have been demoralized. In this case the Budget has placed the amount at $7,000,000. We are asking the Committee to raise the amount carried in the bill only $50,000 to take care of an emergency affecting 2,700 postmasters of the first- and second-class throughout the country. Every district in the country will benefit.

These men were compelled to work in December 1933 for three successive Saturdays in order to get the mail out during the holiday season. They operate, as all postal employees do, under the 40-hour week. They were not compelled to do this extra work, but it was a service to the Nation for which they ought to be compensated.

Mr. Donaldson, of the Post Office Department, said while appearing before the committee:

Mr. DONALDSON. I might say that in this appropriation item estimate this year, we have had to disallow overtime compensation to assistant postmasters for the last three Saturdays in the month of December, which is provided for by law, due to the fact that the annual cost runs to approximately $40,000 a year. We have nothing in the appropriation this year for it. Last year our appropriation was reduced by $50,000 in this committee under the Budget estimates. In other words, we got $50,000 less than the Budget approved.

Quoting Mr. Donaldson further, and I think the Committee ought to take notice of this, although they did not in the hearings—

We can allow for overtime or grant compensatory time. We would prefer to allow overtime. We should allow the overtime, because they do not have the time or opportunity to take the compensatory time.

In other words, if a carrier or a clerk works on a Saturday he gets compensatory time. If the postmaster works overtime he can get compensatory time, but the Department has said he is too valuable a man and must remain there. So I say, you will have to meet this obligation sometime and you might as well meet it now.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McGRANERY. Is it not true that if this committee does not put back in the bill the $50,000 cut by the Appropriations Committee it will mean these assistant postmasters will have been required to work several days without pay?

Mr. SWEENEY. There is no question about that at all.

I ask the Committee to go along with the amendment. The amount is small. You have to face this problem some day, so why not do it now? Give the Department a chance to meet this obligation. The committee has never shown a hostile attitude, as I read the hearings. The amount is very small, and you will be doing a service to the men in every one of your districts.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the amount carried in the bill provides an increase of almost $18,000 over the amount the Department is using now. It is absolutely ridiculous for us in times like these to be raising the salaries of the higher salaried employees of the Post Office Department. I hope we will not provide any more money for the assistant postmasters than the law has allowed. The committee has been exceedingly liberal.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SWEENEY. Does the gentleman construe this to be a salary increase?

Mr. TABER. It must be if more money is appropriated.

Mr. SWEENEY. This is to pay for 3 Saturdays these men worked during December, outside of their 40-hour week.

Mr. TABER. We should not pay overtime to these high-salaried employees. It is absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. SWEENEY. It is not overtime at all.

Mr. TABER. Paying overtime to people who draw low salaries might be something to talk about, but when you offer overtime to these fellows who draw $3,000 a year and over you are going pretty far in these days when people are struggling to get enough to eat.

Mr. SWEENEY. If the gentleman will yield further, can the gentleman inform the House where it is overtime and how it is overtime?

Mr. TABER. How can it be anything else but overtime if you are going to hand these men money for working on Saturdays?

Mr. SWEENEY. These men came down there to get the mail out for the Christmas holidays, to do what they always do.

Mr. TABER. That is what they are there for and that is what the situation always has been. They are paid high salaries because they are supervisory employees. We should not increase the salaries of these highly paid employees. I hope the House will vote down this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In 1938 the actual expenditures under this item were $6,882,000. The sum we allow in this bill is approximately $68,000 more than the actual expenditures last year, and it should be sufficient to care for promotions in salary of assistant postmasters as a result of any pick-up in postal business with a consequent increase in postal receipts. So far as overtime is concerned, of course, we have that in many of the different establishments and it is inescapable. I do not believe the situation here is any worse than it is in many other places and not nearly as acute as it is in some instances.

After most ample consideration we believe this appropriation is sufficient, and even generous, to meet the purposes, and we ask you to vote down the amendment.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. McGRANERY. Is it not true that unless this $50,000 is provided, these assistant postmasters will not be paid for the extra time they are required to work?

Mr. LUDLOW. I do not know a thing about the situation the gentleman is referring to. Of course, temporary employees were employed all over the United States.

Mr. McGRANERY. My question had reference to the assistant postmasters who will not be paid for the time they were required to put in as extra time.

Mr. LUDLOW. I have no information about that.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. MAHON. Is not the purport of the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana simply that we are already appropriating in this bill a sum of $68,000 more than was spent under this item last year by the Post Office Department?

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to impose on the time of the Committee, but in line with this discussion I may say to those of you who have third-class postmasters and in some instances second-class postmasters that have just gotten over the border. The act of Congress provides a stipulated salary for that third-class assistant postmaster, but because of a lack of appropriations, perhaps, a woman in that post office with a postmaster who has been sponsored politically and is not functioning as such, is carrying the burden and doing the work of the office and has been doing it for years and is deprived, perhaps, of a measly $150 a year of compensation that is her right by law. This has not anything particularly to do with this amendment, but with respect to overtime as covered by this amendment, reference has been made here to the high salaries of these people. For the most part, in the case of a high-salaried postmaster or a high-salaried administrative official within a post office, the matter of his compensatory time does not concern the available amount of time for which he cannot be compensated. He compensates himself whenever he wills to abandon that post office and go away, and the post-office inspector is the one who pretends to see that he stays on the job and attends to business while the inspection is under process of being initiated, conducted, and consummated. So the people who are being deprived of their compensation for compensatory overtime are not the ones who can go away at any time they may desire, and for this reason I believe the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Chairman, there is one aspect of this matter, if I understand the situation correctly, that ought to be called to the attention of the Committee. There are approximately 2,000 post offices in this classification which do not have assistant postmasters because of budgetary deficiencies. In such cases, in the absence of the postmaster, a clerk acts in the capacity of assistant postmaster. He assumes full responsibility for the office and discharges the duties not only of the assistant but of the postmaster, and very often of the clerk himself. In such post offices during the rush period a clerk, in addition to his own duties, is very often performing the duties of an assistant postmaster, working overtime and on various occasions working when in the ordinary course of his employment he would not be called on to perform any task whatsoever. As I understand the situation, we are asking the clerk who is assuming the responsibility of the post office, as a gratuity, to work for nothing, and, Mr. Chairman, he has no choice in the matter. He is just a clerk and he is a clerk under a politically appointed postmaster and he must, perforce, do as his superior requests in any emergency in the service, and you are compelling him to work for nothing.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLANNERY. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman think that the postmaster who does nothing should pay the assistant for those things out of his own pocket?

Mr. FLANNERY. Unfortunately, that matter is not before us at the moment. I would be pleased to discuss that at the proper time and place; but because there is an injustice, perhaps, on the one hand is no reason we should visit an injustice on a clerk who has no redress.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want only a couple of minutes. This question of overtime is present in almost every item we have in this bill, as well as in every department we go into. If the Federal Government is going to assume the matter of paying every man for a little effort on his part, an extra hour here or an extra hour there, there is no limit to it. The Federal Bureau of Investigation had half a million hours overtime work for which they are not getting anything. I could take almost every hearing we have, in every department, and show where men who are getting very good salaries, who have gone through the depression with security, who know where their money is coming from, who are satisfied although they work not only the hours for which they are paid, but occasionally, some Saturday or other, overtime. We cannot possibly establish a rule that gives a man pay for overtime for every minute that he spends in his office. I imagine that Congressmen occasionally work longer hours than they are expected to. All through the Federal service that is true. I believe most of these men are glad to have the jobs that they have, with steady monthly income, and that they are delighted to retain the positions they have, though they are asked to spend an extra hour in their offices once in a while. I think we are doing nobody any injustice. I think we are trying to help the situation with the cooperation of those men who do a little extra work, and that that is the solution of the problem. I do not believe this Committee should attempt to compensate all well-paid employees for a little extra time, and I think that the action of the committee in this respect should be supported in keeping the amount at the figure fixed in the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words. I was rather surprised to hear my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL] say that overtime should not be a proper charge against the Federal Government. We have said so, and enacted it into law.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. Yes.

Mr. O'NEAL. In the higher brackets. It is a very different situation with a man who has a comfortable $3,000 a year income, who stays and works on Saturday, from the fellow who is drawing $900 to $1,000 a year.

Mr. McGRANERY. And I say that the average pay of these assistant postmasters is $2,100 a year, so that they do not come within the upper brackets. We have enacted a law in this Congress which requires industry to meet the letter as well as the spirit of the law with respect to hours and overtime. We in this Congress should be the last to violate that law or deny the right to any employee to compensation for overtime. With respect to the chairman of the committee, I believe that he did not understand the question propounded to him when it was asked whether these men were paid last year. I read the testimony of Mr. Donaldson, in which he clearly says that they were not paid for three Saturdays they worked in December.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. It might be inferred from what the gentleman says and from what my friend from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY] said that these assistant postmasters do not receive any compensation. That is quite erroneous. They do not receive any compensation for overtime, but they were paid their usual salaries.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Donaldson said:

I might say in this appropriation estimate this year we have had to disallow overtime compensation to assistant postmasters for the last 3 Saturdays in the month of December, which is provided for by law.

We are the ones who fixed the 40-hour week for postmasters, and if they are required to work overtime 3 Saturdays, then we have an obligation to either pay them, or adjust the law so as to have it comply with their salaries.

Mr. LUDLOW. But they are not differentiated from any other postal employee. Many other postal employees have not been paid for overtime, and all through the Government that is so.

Mr. McGRANERY. The point is that these men were required to work 3 days in December for the Federal Government without compensation.

Mr. LUDLOW. That is an erroneous statement. They had the usual compensation, their salaries, but they did not receive anything for overtime.

Mr. McGRANERY. The Postal Department recommends the payment of this overtime. That Department is charged with the efficiency and maintenance and good conduct of that Department. They certainly must know what they are doing, and if you want to maintain honesty among your employees, at least be honest with them in return. We have fixed the 40 hours a week as the maximum, and when they are required to give more of their time, this Government should meet its obligation, the same as in private industry. Private industry would be dragged into the courts and compelled to comply with the law, and we have no right, because of our position here, to take advantage of that position and say to these employees, "We know you have worked, we know your employer said you ought to be paid, but we, the members of this Committee, feel it is high time that there should be some saving on the part of the Government and, therefore, we are going to violate our own law, a law that we enacted, and deny that which we said you should have." Mr. Chairman, that is an anomalous situation and that is the situation in which this Committee finds itself today. I ask that the Committee of the Whole vote the $50,000 carried in the amendment, so that we may do justice and nothing more to these postal employees.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. I yield.

Mr. O'NEAL. Does the gentleman favor appropriating money for every hour of overtime by all employees? For instance, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which has actually spent 500,000 hours overtime? Does the gentleman believe we should appropriate for every extra minute of overtime?

Mr. McGRANERY. I say if that is the law we ought to pay it. If it is bad practice, then the law ought to be changed by this Congress.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. Has the Government any way of determining the undertime? [Laughter.]

Mr. McGRANERY. They have the same way of determining undertime that they have of determining overtime. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SWEENEY) there were—ayes 31 and noes 88.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Foreign air-mail transportation: For transportation of foreign mails by aircraft, as authorized by law, $10,200,000.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: Page 64, line 14, after the period, insert: "Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be paid to any corporation which shall directly or indirectly purchase insurance from any official or employee of the United States or any member of their immediate family."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LUDLOW. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I wish to be heard briefly, Mr. Chairman.

This is a limitation. My amendment applies to a paragraph of the bill which makes an appropriation of $10,200,000 as a subsidy to aviation corporations which are engaged in the transportation of foreign air mail. In view of the fact that administrative branches of the Government determine what corporations are to receive these large subsidies, it is necessary to include the language of the amendment in order that private personal interests of Government officials and employees and their families might not conflict with the public interest with a resulting increased cost to the taxpayers' Treasury. This amendment is a limitation with a purpose of reducing the cost of government, and I submit it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana wish to be heard?

Mr. LUDLOW. I do not wish to be heard, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOEHNE). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of the opinion that this is definitely a limitation and, therefore, the point of order is overruled.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, for several years New Deal leaders denounced air-mail subsidies and charged fraud and corruption. Apparently these violent denunciations were only demagogic political propaganda, because the New Deal has been in complete control of the Federal Government for 6 years and has not even brought an indictment, let alone a conviction, of any person for fraud or corruption with relation to air-mail contracts. At that time you denounced Mr. McCracken, a Republican, and sent him to jail for giving Mr. Britten some files that the Senate investigating committee wanted, although the record shows that a New Deal "brain truster," Mr. Lee, Mr. McCracken's partner, admitted that he gave those files to Mr. Britten. By reason of this assistance in helping to spread New Deal political propaganda, Mr. Lee received a lucrative appointment in the Federal Alcohol Administration.

The pending bill carries many million more dollars for air-mail subsidies than the appropriation bills passed under Republican administrations. Page 39 of the committee report indicates that this bill carries $10,200,000 for foreign mail transportation subsidies, $996,000 as a subsidy for trans-Atlantic service estimated on the basis of 7 months' operation of six aircraft, three of which have already been delivered and three of which will be delivered in the near future. These six trans-Atlantic aircraft will be operated by the Pan American Airways, which will receive the subsidy. I do not believe any member of the immediate family of an official, particularly an administrative officer of the Federal Government who determines how much of this subsidy is to go to a private corporation and to what corporation it is to go, should be writing insurance for the corporation which receives the subsidy. The firm of Roosevelt & Sargent, of which the First Lady is a member, having taken the place of the star insurance salesman, James Roosevelt, wrote 50 percent of the insurance on the six Pan American trans-Atlantic planes. This information was released by John A. Sargent, president of the firm, upon his return from Europe, according to an Associated Press article appearing in the January 26 issue of the Washington Evening Star and the Boston Evening Transcript. This Associated Press article also indicated that Mr. Sargent stated that the insurance covered total liabilities of slightly more than $500,000 on each plane.

Here we have the Roosevelt administration handing out $996,000 of the taxpayers' money as a subsidy to the Pan American Airways for the operation of six trans-Atlantic planes. According to the press, the First Lady will christen one of these planes in Washington in the near future and according to the statement of the president of her insurance firm, said firm will underwrite more than $3,000,000 worth of insurance on the planes. This kind of a hook-up is not in the public interest. You Democrats should support this amendment in the interest of your political party as well as your country.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. Can the gentleman tell me why the Silver Shirts did not do anything about it?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I do not know anything about the Silver Shirts. The gentleman may know. The gentleman may know something about the Silver Shirts and the Red Shirts. I only know about the red, white, and blue shirts that I wore for 22 months overseas in the World War; and I do not yield further to the spokesman for the so-called liberal bloc of which our red-shirt Communist brethren and their various fronts are a part. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Star-route service, Alaska: For inland transportation by star routes in Alaska, $125,000.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. LUDLOW: On page 64, line 20, strike out "$125,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$140,000."

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the committee amendment provides for an increase of $25,000 in this item, to a total of $140,000 for star-route service in Alaska. The similar item carried in last year's bill was $206,000. The Bureau of the Budget sent up an estimate for this item of $150,000. The committee brought in the bill reducing the Budget estimate to $125,000. We find the reason for it in the committee report. The following statement is there made:

STAR-ROUTE SERVICE TO ALASKA

A reduction of $25,000 has been made in the Budget estimate for this item, it being recommended that an appropriation of $125,000 be approved by Congress for this service. Existing star-route service in Alaska, on the basis of actual expenditures for the first 6 months of this fiscal year, is being operated at an annual cost of approximately $110,000. Therefore, the amount approved by the committee should grant a margin of $15,000 for enlargement of existing operations or institution of new service.

Unfortunately the committee was misled, Mr. Chairman, by the fact that the cost of this service is comparatively light during the first 6 months of the fiscal year, but is comparatively heavy during the last 6 months. The committee evidently desired to leave a margin of $15,000 for emergency service. In doing this the committee undoubtedly had in mind the act of August 25, 1935, authorizing the Postmaster General to give emergency service in Alaska at a cost of not to exceed $25,000 in any fiscal year. I fear, however, that the estimate of the committee is still too low. I am not positive it is too low—otherwise I would offer an amendment to the amendment to bring the amount back to the Budget estimate of $150,000.

The existing contracts and orders, based upon last year's operations, call for a minimum expenditure during the next fiscal year of $132,400. Instead, then, of having a margin of $15,000 for emergency, as the committee planned, we shall have a margin of $7,600 for emergencies, and this may not be sufficient.

Mr. Chairman, my principal object in speaking at this time is to say that it is my understanding—and I think it is the understanding of the committee—that in accepting this figure, $140,000, we do not promise, or tell the House, that this amount will be sufficient to give the same service we have had over all of the years in the past. I am afraid it will not be sufficient. It is my understanding at least, and I think the committee so understands it too, that if the Department comes here either before the expiration of the present session of Congress or at the beginning of the next session and asks for an emergency appropriation in order to bring the amount up to the Budget estimate, namely, $150,000, the Committee on Appropriations will receive the officials of the Department with sympathetic consideration. The $140,000 may be sufficient, but I am apprehensive that it will not be; and in this connection I invite the attention of the membership to the fact that the cost of this service has been lowered every period of 4 years for the last 3 periods, or 12 years. Last year the appropriation was $206,000. Under the amendment proposed by the committee it will be $140,000 this year; and I hope this will be sufficient. We are getting better and cheaper service as the years pass. There is no need of any extraordinary haste in the reduction of expenditures with respect to star-route service in Alaska, for we are making constant progress in that direction.

May I refer once more to the lack of balance of expenditures in the two halves of the fiscal year. In testifying before the subcommittee, Mr. Cole, the Acting Second Assistant Postmaster General, as shown on page 193 of the printed hearings, testified as follows:

You gentlemen should not be misled by the cost for the first 4 months of the current fiscal year, because the costs in the winter months are a great deal more than they are in the summer months. The costs for the first 4 months of the fiscal year 1938 were only 10.3 percent of the cost for the entire year, although the first 4 months were one-third of the year.

The star-route service in Alaska, as will be seen from pages 192 and 193 of the hearings, embraces 8 routes served by dog teams, 13 routes served by motor vehicles, and 33 routes served by airplanes. The principal and greater part of the service is given by airplanes. In former days practically all of the winter service was given by dog teams, but at the present time dog-team service is all but nonexistent. We have come to depend more and more upon the airplane for all types of transport service in Alaska, because we are so sadly lacking in other ordinary facilities of transportation such as motor roads and railroads.

The development of air transport in Alaska is more adequately shown by the following table:

Trend of air travel and air traffic in Alaska

Year	Planes in service	Number passengers carried	Number of plane-miles	Number of passenger-miles	Mail and freight carried (pounds)
1929.....	8	2,171	33,591	272,999	118,951
1930.....	24	3,654	338,422	684,361	120,733
1931.....	26	7,947	381,234	947,695	161,718
1932.....	31	6,637	742,854	942,176	496,680
1933.....	42	7,743	1,059,155	1,222,510	785,586
1934.....	56	10,194	1,126,610	1,533,311	994,370
1935.....	75	13,318	1,685,654	2,148,692	1,722,757
1936.....	79	16,982	2,130,929	3,035,018	2,418,616
1937.....	102	20,958	2,209,206	4,021,798	3,211,927
1938.....	155	26,885	2,829,253	5,634,461	3,758,495

In the more thickly settled portions of the Nation, where ample facilities for all types of transportation are available, practically all of the mail service can be given under long-term contract. In Alaska, which is still largely a frontier country, the situation is different. There it is much better and cheaper for the Government to depend to a much greater extent on emergency service as the need for service may be shown. Congress has recognized this by the legislation to which I have referred, and which provides that—

The Postmaster General may provide difficult or emergency mail service in Alaska, at a total annual cost of not exceeding $25,000 * * *

An instance of that type of service came to my attention recently. St. Lawrence Island is situated in Bering Sea, approximately 150 miles from Nome, Alaska. At this season of the year, that part of Bering Sea is a mass of floating ice. And yet, the inhabitants of this island, about 500 in number, who had not received any mail since last September or early October, and who probably will not receive any more until next June at the earliest, were furnished mail at very modest expense by the flight of an airplane from Nome, through the power to give emergency mail service conferred upon the Postmaster General. The service is meager enough in any event. I do not wish to see the present meager service curtailed by lack of sufficient appropriation.

It would be as well, Mr. Chairman, to appropriate $150,000 as to appropriate $140,000. The larger appropriation would not result in the expenditure of a single additional dollar unless such expenditure were justified. I have lived in Alaska for many years, and during all of that time I have never known the Post Office Department to waste or squander a cent.

I should say, from my observation of the operations of the Post Office Department in Alaska, reinforced to some extent by my experience in Washington, that the Post Office Department is not only the most efficient but the most economical and thrifty Department of the Government. I have never known a single instance of waste in that Department. Sometimes I think that the saving thrift of the Department almost amounts to a vice. So I do not understand the reluctance of the committee to appropriate for star-route service in Alaska in this bill the sum set up by the Budget, $150,000, instead of the amount now offered as a committee amendment, namely, $140,000. But it is possible that $140,000 will be sufficient, and so I do not oppose it. We shall try to make it do, and if not sufficient, we shall come back and ask for more.

Mr. Chairman, I know the committee is not trying to reduce or curtail the mail service we have had in Alaska in the past. I am keenly sensible of the fact that the committee had approved an item in the bill of $213,000 for air-mail service between Seattle, Wash., and Juneau, Alaska. That service, I am confident, will be set up soon. We must then have summer air-mail service along the lower Yukon Valley to Nome, and along the Kuskokwim to Bethel. And I look forward confidently to the time, and that soon, when the air mail to Alaska will be routed along the coast of the Territory and not across foreign soil. There is not the slightest reason in the world why our air mail should not fly over international waters from Seattle to Ketchikan, thence to Juneau, and from there to Cordova, Valdez, Seward, Anchorage, Fairbanks, Nome, Bethel, and other important points in Alaska. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, the able Delegate from Alaska has correctly stated the facts with respect to this item.

At the time we decided on the amount of $125,000 the evidence before us was inconclusive. Since then we have come into possession of the complete evidence. In addition to the fact stated to the House by the distinguished Delegate from Alaska we are informed by the Acting Second Assistant Postmaster General that it will require $132,000 to cover the contractual obligations of this service in Alaska. So we have allowed $132,000, and to it have added $8,000 for emergency service. We believe this will be sufficient and that it corrects the situation.

We ask the Committee to adopt the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL

Post-office stationery, equipment, and supplies: For stationery for the Postal Service, including the money-order and registry system; and also for the purchase of supplies for the Postal Saving System, including rubber stamps, canceling devices, certificates, envelopes, and stamps for use in evidencing deposits, and free penalty envelopes; and for the reimbursement of the Secretary of the Treasury for expenses incident to the preparation, issue, and registration of the bonds authorized by the act of June 25, 1910 (39 U. S. C. 760); for miscellaneous equipment and supplies, including the purchase and repair of furniture, package boxes, posts, trucks, baskets, satchels, straps, letter-box paint, baling machines, perforating machines, duplicating machines, printing presses, directories, cleaning supplies, and the manufacture, repair, and exchange of equipment, the erection and painting of letter-box equipment, and for the purchase and repair of presses and dies for use in the manufacture of letter boxes; for postmarking, rating, money-order stamps, and electrotype plates and repairs to same; metal, rubber, and combination type, dates and figures, type holders, ink pads for canceling and stamping purposes, and for the purchase, exchange, and repair of typewriting machines, envelope-opening machines, and computing machines, numbering machines, time recorders, letter balances, scales (exclusive of dormant or built-in platform scales in Federal buildings), test weights, and miscellaneous articles purchased and furnished directly to the Postal Service, including complete equipment and furniture for post offices in leased and rented quarters; for the purchase, repair, and replacement of arms and miscellaneous items necessary for the protection of the mails; for miscellaneous expenses in the preparation and publication of post-route maps and rural delivery maps or blue prints, including tracing for photolithographic reproduction; for other expenditures necessary and incidental to post offices of the first, second, and third classes, and offices of the fourth class having or to have rural delivery service, and for letter boxes; for the purchase of atlases and geographical and technical works not to exceed $1,500; for wrapping twine and tying devices; for expenses incident to the shipment of supplies, including hardware, boxing, packing, and not exceeding $62,300 for the pay of employees in connection therewith in the District of Columbia; for rental, purchase, exchange, and repair of canceling machines and motors, mechanical mail-handling apparatus, accident prevention and other labor-saving devices, including cost of power in rented buildings and miscellaneous expenses of installation and operation of same, including not to exceed $35,000 for salaries of 13 traveling mechanics, and for traveling expenses, $3,000,000: Provided, That the Postmaster General may authorize the sale to the public of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blue prints at the cost of printing and 10 percent thereof added: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to provide post-office lock boxes, furniture, or screen-line equipment to post offices of the third class, except in those cases where the Department makes a lease for a period of 5 years or longer and the expenditure from this appropriation to provide post-office lock boxes, furniture, or screen-line equipment shall not exceed the amount allocated for this purpose during the fiscal year 1939.

Mr. BURCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 70, line 12, after the word "added" strike out the colon, insert a period, and strike out the remainder of the paragraph through line 20.

Mr. BURCH. Mr. Chairman, my amendment strikes out the provision which prohibits the Post Office from furnishing lockboxes, furniture, and equipment to third-class postmasters that has been taken from abandoned buildings.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURCH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. I am sure the gentleman does not want to make an incorrect statement. It limits them to the amount they used this year, which is $195,000.

Mr. BURCH. It goes a little further than that, if I understand it correctly.

Here is the language which my amendment would strike:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to provide post-office lockboxes, furniture, or screen-line equipment to post offices of the third class, except in those cases where the Department makes a lease for a period of 5 years or longer and the expenditure from this appropriation to provide post-office lockboxes, furniture, or screen-line equipment shall not exceed the amount allocated for this purpose during the fiscal year 1939.

Mr. Chairman, if that provision is left in the bill the Post Office Department will be unable to furnish lockboxes and equipment to third-class post offices which have not been leased for 5 years or more. There are only 2,100 offices in the United States on which the leases extend for that period of time. I am informed by Mr. Purdum, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, it is to the advantage of the Post Office Department and more satisfactory not to make long leases.

In the past year the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General has furnished second-hand boxes that have been reconditioned, and boxes that have come out of old post offices which have been abandoned to the number of 30,536 boxes. Some of these boxes were reconditioned and some were not. The average cost of the boxes that have been furnished the third-class postmasters is 38½ cents. Where the boxes have been reconditioned the cost has been 62 to 63 cents. You will find this in the testimony given by Mr. Purdum.

Mr. Chairman, the rental of boxes in third-class post offices from third-class postmasters amounts to over $2,000,000 annually. They get none of this rental. That has increased very materially since 1936, from $1,968,000 in 1936 to over $2,000,000 in 1938.

If my amendment is agreed to, the Government will salvage property now owned by it, but if the present provision remains in the bill the lockboxes and furniture that comes out of these abandoned buildings cannot and will not be used. I understand from Mr. Purdum they now have something like 70,000 or 80,000 boxes on hand.

Mr. SOUTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURCH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SOUTH. I cannot see any objection to the gentleman's amendment and I wonder if the Subcommittee on Appropriations objects to it and if so what the objection is? I would like to have that brought out.

Mr. BURCH. Mr. Chairman, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Purdum, makes the statement to me, and he has made the same statement to others, that if this provision is stricken from the bill and a similar provision is not included hereafter, within the course of the next 2 or 3 years, not to exceed 3 years, they will be able to furnish equipment and boxes to every third-class post office in the country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this proposition, and the principles relating to it, has been discussed for some time. It is a question of both dollars and cents, and of policy. The committee has written this provision in the bill primarily as a matter of policy. For many years these lockboxes have been furnished by private industry. For how many years I do not know, but a great many. They have been furnished at a reasonable cost. There has been no criticism of the boxes or the service.

The Committee has learned that the Government has its own equipment shop and if allowed to proceed as it wishes, this would mean direct competition with private industry which has been in existence for many years. It would mean the total elimination of old sound businesses which have been in existence for years and which have a right to continue to exist.

The question of cost also enters into this matter. There may be some conflicting opinion, but on page 302 of the hearings the statement is made that the excess cost of second-hand boxes over new boxes is 65 cents. In other words, private industry can do the job, according to these figures, for 65 cents per unit less than the Government. This may or may not be true.

The testimony is very clear that if this provision is stricken and the Government should pursue this course, it will put people out of business. We allowed a certain sum of money, which will allow the Government to go ahead on the basis it has been going ahead previously; but we do not want them to put American business out of business, and incidentally these firms are scattered all over the country. There are nine different companies located in Wisconsin, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Michigan, and other States.

Mr. Chairman, I feel very strongly about this matter personally. As a committee we should not permit the Federal Government to get into activities which will drive private business to the wall as long as private business is furnishing satisfactory service. [Applause.]

Mr. SOUTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SOUTH. The gentleman does not consider the welfare of private business of more importance than the convenience of the public, does he? Does not the gentleman know that these third-class postmasters are poorly paid, and if the Government does not provide equipment the postmaster has to do the best he or she can to furnish the service, with the result that the postmaster does not furnish adequate or sufficient equipment?

Mr. O'NEAL. Does the gentleman understand it costs 65 cents more to have the box reconditioned than it does to buy a new one for the little post office?

Mr. SOUTH. I do not believe that. Where did the gentleman get these figures?

Mr. O'NEAL. This is the testimony that came to us. I may say there was a conflict of testimony, but if a little post office, such as the gentleman mentions, wants to have its boxes reconditioned, and the Government does the work, there is testimony in the hearing that it costs 65 cents more per box than it would to buy from the concerns who have been making these boxes. I cannot say that the figures are exactly correct.

Mr. BURCH. Did more than one man make that statement? Mr. Baxter made that statement, and he is an operator of a manufacturing plant. That was in your hearings.

Mr. O'NEAL. For 3 years we have had witnesses on both sides. We have gone into the question of cost. Some say it costs more and some say it costs less, but I think I am safe in saying—and if the committee members disagree with me they can say so—that in the opinion of the committee the cost is greater to the little post office to have a box repaired by the Federal Government than to purchase it outright from private industry.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the distinguished gentleman from Virginia does not want the Federal Government to come into his district and drive out of business old-established and honest private institutions of business and put their employees on the relief rolls.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I cannot yield now.

Mr. SOUTH. The gentleman has 10 minutes. I should like a moment to ask a question.

Mr. LUDLOW. I should like to make a consecutive statement before I yield.

That is exactly what this means, unless we put on this limitation. I may state that the gentleman's opening assertion, that the Post Office Department cannot go ahead with the reconditioning of these boxes under this bill, is entirely erroneous, because in the present year the allocation for these boxes and for furniture is $192,800 and we provide in this limitation that they may go ahead and do exactly what they did this year, but that they shall not go wild, they shall not run amok and spend any more than that.

Mr. BURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. Not at the present time.

There are nine factories making these boxes and they are located in Wisconsin, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Tennessee, California, West Virginia, and Indiana. They are all suffering and they are all threatened by this Government competition.

As the gentleman from Kentucky has said, the evidence that was brought out before our committee is that it costs the Government very considerably more to build these boxes for presentation to the postmasters, by the time overhead is counted in and all the factory costs are evaluated, than it costs to buy the boxes directly from the manufacturers.

This is a very ill-advised sort of proceeding. The Government gains nothing by it. Even if the Government cost of manufacture were less than the boxes cost when new, what in the world would be gained by a little saving at this end of the line if it meant throwing employees out of work in Indiana, Wisconsin, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, and the other States, and putting them in the relief lines?

This matter has been before Congress many years. It first came to my attention when our late beloved Speaker, Mr. Byrns, of Tennessee, was the chairman of the subcommittee occupying the position I now have the honor to occupy. He thought this was one of the most ill-advised ventures the Government had ever entered. Time after time he spoke against it and brought in reports in opposition to it.

If you want to embark on a wild and unbridled program of throwing the Government into competition with business, this is your chance.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. No; I cannot yield. I am sorry; I do not have the time.

This proposal does not stop the Government from reconditioning the boxes. It simply puts a reasonable limitation on the Government's efforts and is a compromise that the Government in all sense and reason ought to have accepted; but there is a violent prejudice for some reason or other in certain quarters of the Post Office Department against these private institutions. It has never been satisfactorily explained to any of us.

I say with all respect that this matter has been threshed out very exhaustively, a hundred times more exhaustively than the gentleman from Virginia could possibly have considered it, before our subcommittee. We have gone into it in the utmost detail. We have heard witnesses. Our subcommittee is absolutely unanimous, Democratic and Republican Members alike, on what ought to be done and what ought not to be done. The entire membership, 100 percent, is back of the limitation we have written into the bill. If the House of Representatives has any confidence in its subcommittee and its diligence, its industry, its conscientiousness, and its desire to get at the facts and protect everybody who should be protected, then we ask you to stand by the committee and vote down this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment should be adopted. Of course, I am not going to quarrel with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Ludlow] because he has one of these factories in his home town.

The second thing I want to make clear is that there is no competition with private business involved in this matter.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Not now.

There is no competition with private business, because the Government does not manufacture these boxes.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman does not—

Mr. ROMJUE. I do not yield for the present.

The Government does not manufacture these boxes. We are tearing down some old buildings over the country and building new post-office buildings and, of course, the policy of the Government is that when we build new post-office buildings we put new fixtures in them. We do not want to put second-hand fixtures in such new post-office buildings and therefore we have the old equipment left over. These left-over fixtures have to be disposed of in some way. They are the property of the Government. The Government has paid for them, having bought them from private industry.

Now, the statement that you can make new lockboxes cheaper than you can move these old boxes is all poppycock and, of course, there is no truth in that. You cannot manufacture the new article cheaper than you can take the old article out of a post office; and, in many cases, groups of these boxes can be taken out of a post-office building and just shipped out and placed in another post-office building without even dissecting the boxes. Sometimes they polish them up, perhaps.

I now want to tell you what Mr. Purdum said in his testimony. Of course, the statement quoted a little while ago by some speaker against this amendment is what the private manufacturer himself said, but here is what Mr. Purdum, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, said when asked this question:

Does it cost more to rehabilitate them than it would to buy new boxes?

Mr. Purdum said:

No, sir; many of those boxes are reinstalled in Presidential offices just as they are taken from the vacated Federal buildings.

And he says further:

Our figures show that we can install these used boxes at much less cost than buying the new boxes.

Now, 4 years ago the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Ludlow], on January 28, 1935, complimented Mr. Purdum in this language, and this is Mr. Ludlow's statement:

To Smith Purdum, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, I doff my hat in unqualified admiration. He has more widespread knowledge of the Post Office Service than his associates in Mr. Farley's "kitchen cabinet," because he has been long in the service, he is the soul of conscientiousness and a symbol of devotion to the public interest.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman say just what that has to do with this matter?

Mr. ROMJUE. I am just proving what the gentleman said about Mr. Purdum, with which I am in accord.

Here is what he said about Mr. Purdum on the floor of this House on January 28, 1935, at page 1128, on this very subject:

Mr. Purdum ordered surveys made of large quantities of Government-owned second-hand furniture and he found with small repairs, much of this furniture which is really of excellent quality could be reconditioned and made serviceable for postal needs. Result, another large saving—

Says Mr. LUDLOW. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope no one gets confused about competition with private business, because all these boxes are made by private factories and bought by the Government and installed in third-class offices.

In the last 2 years box rentals have increased over $110,000. This is revenue coming in.

Of course, you have a limitation in this bill, and that is what we want to strike out. We have 10,079 third-class post offices in this country. Only 2,194 of them are under leases for any particular length of time. The Government chooses to carry these third-class post-office buildings along under short-term leases, and this provision would prevent the Government from taking its own property and installing it in any of those offices where the Government does not have a lease for 5 years or more. Therefore this amendment should be adopted striking out this restrictive feature now appearing in the bill. By adopting this amendment it will permit the Government to use its own property which has already been bought from private industries through the process of installing in such third-class offices as may require the use of these lockboxes and furniture. The public absorbs these boxes by applying for the use, and this furnishes an increase in revenue to the Government, which the public is glad to pay for the use of the lockboxes; and if this amendment is not adopted and legislation is enacted in its present form, the legislation would not only deprive the public of the use in many instances of lockboxes unless the Government went out and bought new boxes, and would also deprive the Government of considerable revenue. There is nothing sound in the argument that the Government can buy new equipment cheaper than it can install the present lockboxes into another office.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we cannot reach an agreement on a limitation of time. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto conclude in 15 minutes.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I shall be compelled to object to that, as I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. LUDLOW. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not have any great deal of interest in this amendment and I have not given it a great deal of thought. I am a little surprised at the chairman and other members of the committee taking the position which they do that it would be economy to prevent the third-class post offices from using discarded fixtures that have been taken out of first-class offices. Much is said about the manufacturer of this equipment. Who is entitled to the most consideration, the public or the manufacturer? Who paid for the equipment in the first place? The public. And who will be benefited by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, that is, by a more liberal use of this discarded equipment? The public. The only serious argument that has been made here is that certain equipment companies will suffer. I submit that, after all, the patrons of the third-class offices, situated in all of our districts, are of more importance than a few manufacturing concerns. The actual application of the proposition is this. In my own district I have had some three or four third-class postmasters on salaries of some $1,200 a year, who have not been able to buy or otherwise provide sufficient equipment to make the mail of the patrons safe. What happens under the terms of the pending amendment? The Post Office Department furnishes this equipment, and in some cases it had not been reconditioned at all, and therefore, it was of no additional expense to the Government. The result being that the third-class postmaster was able to render better service to his patrons, and better protection to the mail. I do not think we need to get excited about a few little concerns making this equipment. They will make it whether the Government buys it or the individual buys it. The only difference is that under the plan as defended by the chairman of this committee, you will have serviceable equipment piled up in Government warehouses and not being used. I submit that the amendment is a sensible amendment; that it is in the interest of the public service and that many people will benefit as a result of its adoption. I think the Committee ought to adopt it. [Applause.]

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, with all respect to the committee, I wish to say I have an affection for the distinguished chairman of the committee, Mr. LUDLOW, as all of us have, because he is one of the most conscientious workers in the Congress, yet I think the greatest effort to provide economy comes from those who present this amendment. This fight was fought in the last Congress. The distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BURCH] gave factual information to this House, and he was so persuasive that the Congress passed the bill, and while our distinguished friend from Indiana has, as you might say, a duty to protect an industry in his own district, we should take a wider perspective and look at the matter as it affects the Nation as a whole.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I cannot yield now. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. LUDLOW. But the gentleman does not mean to infer that I would do something that I ought not to do.

Mr. SWEENEY. Oh, no; I certainly do not want to leave that impression at all. But I can recognize the fact that it is everyone's desire to aid industries in his own district. We have from 70,000 to 90,000 lockboxes stored in warehouses in Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Denver, Washington, and they ought to be in these third-class post offices, where the third-class postmasters are now paying rent for such equipment.

Let me give you an illustration. Take the town of Oldham, S. Dak. There the postmaster rented equipment from the Keyless Lock Co. at $165 a year for 7 years. The Department bought new equipment from the Morgan Lumber & Manufacturing Co. for $822.76. Then in Cumberland, Ky., screen-line only was rented from the Keyless Lock Co. for several years at $273 per annum, and the Department purchased new equipment from the Keyless Lock Co. for $1,311.33. This equipment ought to be distributed to the third-class postmasters. Men getting small salaries have to pay $165 to $180 per year for these boxes, which yield no return. It is unfair. I think this committee is derelict in its duty in this respect. To say that we are putting the Government in business is no answer. The Government has been in business. It has a uniform manufacturing plant in Philadelphia; they have munition plants in New Haven, Conn., and it is no defense to say now that this is putting the Government in business. It is already in business, and with the tremendous amount of equipment we have on hand I think this Congress owes itself the duty of passing this amendment.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. Yes.

Mr. SOUTH. Is it not a fact that aside from the matter of who furnishes the equipment, the public will get better service if this amendment is adopted and this equipment put into the various third-class post offices?

Mr. SWEENEY. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Is it true that some of the boxes that have been taken out of first-class post offices are used without reconditioning?

Mr. SWEENEY. That is true.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. Yes.

Mr. O'NEAL. I rise to make a comment about the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Ludlow]. There is no man on the committee who does not know that Mr. Ludlow would vote against his district at any time when it was a matter of right, and I say further that every member of the committee knows that Mr. Ludlow is in favor of economy, and would not do anything that would in any way reflect upon his honor.

Mr. SWEENEY. I appreciate the contribution the gentleman has made. I again reaffirm my faith in the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Ludlow]. He is one of the most distinguished Members of this House, but in view of the fact that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General has appeared before the committee time and time again recommending this amendment, I believe his recommendation should be supported. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

This is an item that was originally carried in the bill, as we are carrying it now, written by the late Joseph W. Byrns, former Speaker of the House, when he was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It was designed to prevent, as far as it might, the wasteful procedure in the equipment shops in the city of Washington, whereby the outfit there spends more money to rehabilitate these boxes than it would cost to buy new boxes. There is no attempt on the part of the committee to prevent money being spent to provide boxes to third-class offices, because with this provision carried as it is $192,000 may be spent. But the committee would require the item to be kept within reason, and would require a situation where some funds would have to be spent to buy boxes, which can be bought for $1.25.

I tried to find out from Mr. Purdum what he thought it was costing for the rehabilitation of these boxes. I received a statement, on page 308 of the hearings, which left out about two-thirds of the items of cost, and, where it did give the items of cost, they were more than the private manufacturers claimed it was costing the Government. With that picture so clear that it is an extravagance to put the Government into the business of rehabilitation of boxes further than it should go, and it is costing it more to rehabilitate the boxes than it is to buy new boxes, I think this House should sustain the position of the committee and refuse to adopt this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BURCH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURCH) there were ayes 69 and noes 47.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PACE: On page 69, line 24, after the word "devices", add the following in parentheses: "(not more than one-half of the funds herein appropriated for the purchase of twine shall be expended in the purchase of twine manufactured from materials or commodities produced outside the United States)."

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we can reach an agreement on time? I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment may close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, it is somewhat embarrassing for an American citizen to have to come before an American Congress to insist that one of the great departments of the American Government use American commodities.

This bill carries $325,000 for the purchase of twine. The item last year was $292,000. In this bill it is increased to $325,000. For the last 18 years your mail and mine, transported by your Post Office Department, has been wrapped in jute, a commodity produced thousands of miles from American shores.

I make no attempt in my amendment, for none is necessary, to increase the appropriation. I do not ask, as I should, that the twine used by your Post Office Department should be made of American products entirely. I simply ask that you at least, or the postal authorities, at least give the American commodities a 50-50 chance. My amendment provides that not more than one-half of this money shall be expended for twine manufactured from materials grown outside the United States. Is it unreasonable that I should object, with 15,000,000 bales of cotton lying in the warehouses, with your own Government holding 11,200,000 bales under loans of approximately $600,000,000, that I should ask that you at least in part give the American farmer the American market? [Applause.]

The Appropriations Committee, I understand, states that it wants more time, after 18 years of investigating this question. I ask you to turn to page 14 of this bill and see how much time they gave in helping the paper manufacturers of this Nation. On page 14 you see an appropriation of $851,000 for fancy paper, approximately three times as much as that for twine, and listen to the provision which the Appropriations Committee has inserted for the benefit of the paper manufacturers. The committee insists that the jute manufacturer has submitted the lowest bid on twine, and, therefore, they must have all the twine business, regardless of the condition of the cotton farmers of the South, but when the Secretary of the Treasury wants to get some fancy paper on which to print more Government bonds the committee authorizes him to disregard the requirement with respect to accepting the low bid. Here is the provision they have written in at page 14:

That in order to foster competition in the manufacture of distinctive paper for the United States securities the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized in his discretion to split the award for such paper for the fiscal year 1940 between the two bidders whose prices per pound are the lowest received.

Understand me, I do not want to mislead you. Year before last there was no bidder on cotton twine. I will tell you why. You know we are happy in the security, I think, that we have a competitive bidding system in our Government, but have you ever stopped to think that you leave it to the head of the department to draw the specifications? Just this week I was given an illustration by the head of a department. They moved the headquarters from one place to another; had to rent new quarters. They were supposed to have done it by competitive bidding, and they did, but they did not advertise that they wanted 5,000 feet of office space. Do you know what they did? They went to the city they were to move to, picked out the offices they wanted, and then drew the specifications and issued the advertisement. There was, of course, exactly one bidder in the United States that could bid on it.

Let us turn to the hearings of last year. The committee asked us why we did not come before them. I did not come before the committee because the hearings were held on the 16th day of last December, when I was a long, long way from the city of Washington. But let us look at the hearings on the 1939 bill; let us see what we find. It is given on page 303. Mr. Trexler, who, I presume, is the purchasing officer for the Department, said:

The last time a representative of the jute-manufacturing industry was in my office he said that the next time we advertised for jute twine the price was going to be even higher. When the last proposals were called for, there were no bids on cotton twine. This year there was a bidder on cotton twine. The bid on jute was 11.25 cents a pound. The lowest bid on cotton was 14.50 cents a pound.

Under that figure, they say, it is going to cost a little more to use cotton and other American commodities. Suppose it does, you have a buy-American law that authorizes a differential of 25 percent; but I submit to you if you will give cotton a chance, if you will tell that Department down there they must write their specifications so as to be fair to cotton, they can arrange those specifications so they will give the cotton manufacturers an equal chance of making a suitable twine to compete with the jute twine.

Today we are paying a subsidy on wheat of 27 cents a bushel for sale in foreign countries. That is a subsidy of 50 percent. Do you realize that? It is a 50-percent subsidy. I am not complaining of what our Government has done to help the farmer of the South who produces cotton; you have done a great deal. At this hour you are spending millions of dollars to find new uses for cotton, yet here is a use right under your nose that I will guarantee under this amendment will not cost the American Government over $1,000 or $2,000 additional.

Is it unreasonable that the people in the South, who are trying to stay in the cotton business, who do not want to go into the wheat business, to set up new farm practices unless it becomes absolutely necessary—is it unreasonable to ask an American Congress to give the American cotton producer under existing conditions at least at 50-50 chance at the business of the American Government?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Why not give them a 100-percent chance? Why limit it to 50-50 when you have such a deplorable situation?

Mr. PACE. I will tell the gentleman why. They contend they want to investigate it more, that it costs a little more for cotton twine; and I am willing to make a start after 18 long years to make it merely 50-50 and let cotton and jute get on the line, and then I am willing to accept the consequences. That is the reason. I admit to the gentleman that it is embarrassing now to me to come here and ask for only half when we are entitled to all, but I am doing it in view of the conditions; I am doing it because above all things on earth I want to be fair, I want to be fair to every commodity and to every section, and I want no more than I can prove I am entitled to. I have never asked for more than my fair share, and I shall never be satisfied with less.

My amendment will not require any increase in the appropriation. If it should develop that the cotton twine should cost a little more than the jute twine, I am sure a little economy in the use of twine will more than save the difference.

The cotton farmer of the South is facing a critical situation and his future is very uncertain. The present surplus of cotton is the greatest in history, with 15,000,000 bales in this country and an equal quantity in foreign countries.

On top of that our exports or foreign sales have dropped down to what they were in 1880, or 60 years ago. It is doubtful that we will export as much as 4,000,000 bales this year.

In addition, the use of cotton in this country is becoming less and less, due to the rapid increase of substitutes for cotton and the failure of business to expand in a normal way.

At this time it seems that our principal hope lies in increasing the consumption of cotton by finding new uses for it. My amendment provides one new use by substituting cotton twine for jute twine in the Post Office Department. I propose to later suggest the same change in the hundreds of other departments and agencies of the Federal Government, and in all it will bring about a substantial increase in the use of cotton.

The cotton farmer is not receiving cost of production. He would not be receiving even 8 cents per pound were it not for the Government loan. Under the loan program the Government has already accumulated 11,200,000 bales of cotton, and we all realize that this cannot go on forever; we know loans in excess of world prices cannot continue very long on a commodity which is dependent on world trade for at least half of its market. We must soon begin paying export subsidies, as you are now doing for wheat, or you must increase the uses of cotton. If we reduce cotton acreage much more it will throw millions of southern people out of work and will tend to increase cotton production in foreign countries.

I do not want to beg you to do anything, but I do hope you can understand the position we are in and that the Appropriations Committee, which is in charge of this bill, will not fight my amendment. When I questioned the chairman of that committee concerning this matter during general debate last Friday he said that the committee and the Post Office Department wanted to investigate the matter further. It seems to me that 18 years is long enough and the time has come to act.

May I repeat—the American farmer is entitled to the American market; he is entitled to sell his own products to his own Government. My amendment gives you an opportunity to see that he gets it, at least in part. I hope you will adopt the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON] for 3 minutes.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia says he wishes to be fair to the American public in regard to his amendment. I certainly want to be fair also. He has already told us that for 18 years the Post Office Department has been using jute twine. This twine is not made abroad. The raw material, the jute, comes in here and is fabricated into twine in the United States. If the amendment offered by the gentleman were adopted, an additional subsidy beyond the 25-percent allowance already given to cotton goods would be given to the cotton industry. The result might be to throw out of work for 6 months 300 people in Massachusetts and 300 people in Pennsylvania who have been accustomed to employment in this work for the last 18 years.

I ask, Is it fair to start up a new industry which will, in the first place throw out of work 600 citizens who have been accustomed to this type of work and make idle the machinery that makes this product—to do this in order further to subsidize a product which already has the advantage of the buy-American plan; in other words, has a 25-percent advantage on price because it is cotton? For 18 years the Post Office Department has got along with jute twine. There is no question about its being satisfactory. It answers the needs and requirements of the Postal Service. Why at this late date do the cotton interests come in and say: "We are not making cotton twine for this particular kind of job. We have got to bid more than 25 percent more than the Post Office is able to obtain jute twine for, and yet we insist on having this business." I feel this way about it: For 18 years we have allowed this industry to be built up by a company with mills in Ludlow, Mass.; Allentown, Pa.; and Savannah, Ga.

We have allowed these employees to carry on their work, build their homes, and raise their families. We have allowed the cotton people a 25-percent advantage over us so far as price is concerned. Think of these 600 people and their families and do not wipe them out arbitrarily.

Mr. Chairman, this Committee has heard all the evidence. It has heard this evidence year after year and this amendment has been offered year after year. The Committee has decided, in fairness to the Post Office Department, to the taxpayers, and to the people engaged in this jute industry, that it is sufficient to give the cotton people a 25-percent advantage in price on every bid of this character.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. Chairman, a great many things could be brought into the debate. We could mention patriotism, as did the gentleman from Georgia. We could mention helping the cotton farmers. We could mention a great many things. But I think the Committee should reason this proposition out, having all the facts before it, then decide what is right and what is wrong.

What is right and what is wrong? It is perfectly clear that all of us want to buy American-made goods. We have a provision in the law which encourages the purchase of American-made goods. However, we do not say in that law that no foreign goods should ever be used. With reference to the twine used in the Post Office Department, although the Department states it could use cotton twine, it is a matter of common knowledge that cotton stretches more than jute.

Mr. Chairman, the cotton people have never bid on the total needs of the Post Office Department, with the exception of this year, when they did bid on the total needs of the Post Office Department and they were $3\frac{1}{4}$ cents higher than the jute people. They had an advantage, and if they had bid one-fourth of a cent less they would have gotten the entire business on the buy American plan; however, as I stated, their price was $3\frac{1}{4}$ cents higher than the jute.

Speaking about patriotism, may I say that the factories could have bought cotton at 5 cents a pound. In buying this cotton at 5 cents a pound and in the processing of the twine, in my judgment, they could have made a price certainly less than $14\frac{1}{2}$ cents, probably very close to $11\frac{1}{4}$ cents. So when we begin talking about helping the cotton farmer, let us reflect that it is the man who buys the cotton and processes it who makes the bid and who is trying to get the contract, just the same as the man who processes the jute. Incidentally, since the price of cotton is that much higher, it seems to me his remedy is not to come in here and make a patriotic appeal and plead with us not to make him conform to strict business standards, and to ask us to force the Post Office Department to give him half the business. The cotton people instead should tell us, "You are buying at a price that is fair enough. I want you to have every opportunity to let the contract on a business competitive basis."

This whole thing only involves 5,000 bales of cotton. The Post Office Department has not been unkind to the cotton people. Back in 1938 it bought 2,416,000 yards of cotton duck and paid the cotton manufacturers $630,500. In 1939 it bought 3,023,000 yards of cotton duck and paid the cotton manufacturers $551,000.

Mr. Chairman, when the jute is manufactured only 10 percent of the cost is the original purchase price. Ninety percent goes to American labor and American manufacturers.

May I say in conclusion, I do not believe we ought to say to the manufacturers of cotton goods, "We are not only going to give you a 25-percent differential over the other fellow but we are going to make the Post Office Department give you half of the business." That is un-American. It does not conform to the standards of American fair play and American business.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the pending amendment be voted down.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Does the gentleman realize that we could get a little better degree of fairness due to the fact there is more yardage in a pound of cotton twine than there is in a pound of jute twine, yet the Department insists on buying on a poundage basis and not on a yardage basis?

Mr. O'NEAL. If the gentleman has an advantage of that sort, it would help him that much more in bidding and if he would put in his bid based on the question of price he would get the business.

[Here he gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PACE) there were—ayes 66, noes 84.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up the time of the Committee unnecessarily, but I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. O'NEAL and Mr. PACE to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 74, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Equipment shops, Washington, D. C.: For the purchase, manufacture, and repair of mail bags and other mail containers and attachments, mail locks, keys, chains, tools, machinery, and material necessary for same, and for incidental expenses pertaining thereto; material, machinery, and tools necessary for the manufacture and repair of such other equipment for the Postal Service as may be deemed expedient; accident prevention; for the expenses of maintenance and repair of the mail bag equipment shops building and equipment, including fuel, light, power, and miscellaneous supplies and services; maintenance of grounds; for compensation to labor employed in the equipment shops and in the operation, care, maintenance, and protection of the equipment shops building, grounds, and equipment, $1,200,000, of which not to exceed $635,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to use as much of the sum, not exceeding $15,000, as may be deemed necessary for the purchase of material and the manufacture in the equipment shops of such small quantities of distinctive equipments as may be required by other executive departments; and for service in Alaska, Puerto Rico, Philippine Islands, Hawaii, or other island possessions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Now that the Committee has decided they do not want to change the plan adopted in 1937 with reference to the construction of post-office buildings throughout the various congressional districts in the United States, by rejecting my amendment, I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL], a member of the committee, what is the purpose of publishing the list on the extreme right of House Document 177, which intimates to the public they are going to get new post-office buildings in their towns when they are not? We Congressmen, and particularly I in my own district, are constantly being asked the question, "When do we get our post-office building for which provision already has been made?"

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; I do not have time to yield.

In other words, the Government of the United States through some agency lets the people believe by these publications that they are going to get post-office buildings when they are not. On one side of this document is a list of authorized post-office buildings, and next to it is another list. It took the expert interpretation the other day of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] to tell the House just what that document meant. I should like to ask what is the purpose of putting out such information as that, because it is at least misleading if not deceiving. The public think they are going to get something when they are not.

Mr. O'NEAL. I may say to the gentleman this is the approved list of the Post Office Department that states which towns can qualify for public buildings. The remedy of the gentleman is to go before the Public Buildings Committee and urge the passage of a bill to have the thing done the way he wants it done.

Mr. O'CONNOR. What is the purpose of declaring these cities eligible for post offices when under the present system and under the plan adopted in 1937 it would take 51 years in my own district to carry out the program and give the people the post offices in the cities that have been declared by the Government to have been eligible?

Mr. O'NEAL. The receipts have been sufficient to justify these towns being placed on the list known as the approved list.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But why publish that list and give the people the idea they are going to get these post-office buildings when they are not?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield I will tell him.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The list in the last column is placed in the communication from the Procurement Division as propaganda to create agitation for post offices in those places.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman there is included in that list a $75,000 post office for my little town of Woolrich, Pa. Let me say I am for saving the Government money, and if the Post Office Department builds that post office in Woolrich, I will think the whole Congress is crazy. We have to stop building these post offices. To build every one of these post offices will increase the cost of government from 200 to 500 percent.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If we are not going to build these post offices, we should quit kidding the public about the matter.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. Does the gentleman know that not only the buildings to be built for the next 51 years are listed but those that have been built in the last 5 or 6 years as well? My home-town newspaper, published last week, stated that the postmaster was at a loss to know why Waco was going to get a post-office building, because he opened a new post office 2 years ago, and he could not figure out why we should have a new one unless they were going to build a basement or an addition to that post office.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We should get busy in the right department and see that such misinformation is no longer published. [Applause.]

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendations that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOEHNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4492) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. TABER. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TABER moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the bill back forthwith with the following amendment: On page 45, line 5, after the comma, strike out "$2,016,000" and insert "$1,916,000" and the following: "Provided, That none of the funds appropriated in this bill shall be used for carrying out the purchase of any silver except newly mined silver mined in the United States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 102, noes 137.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 197, not voting 93, as follows:

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1411. By Mr. COCHRAN: Memorial of the Central Trades and Labor Union, submitted by the secretary, W. M. Brandt, urging Congress to make an additional appropriation for the Works Progress Administration in order that those in need of employment will be reinstated and no additional employees entitled to recognition under the Works Progress Administration policy will be furloughed; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1412. By Mr. COFFEE of Washington: Resolution of 300 persons at mass meeting at Bremerton, Wash., assembled under the sponsorship of the Bremerton Sun, stating that Federal social-security law, while a step in the right direction, has proved inadequate and unsatisfactory; pointing out that it has been too costly and discriminatory in its operation; and therefore urging Congress to give serious consideration to the principles embodied in House bills 2 and 11, now pending before the Congress, to the end that a genuine retirement and recovery plan be enacted in keeping with the American standard of living; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1413. Also, resolution of the plywood, veneer, and box shock council of the International Woodworkers of America, pointing out that the Pacific Northwest possesses the only appreciable stands of old growth Douglas fir timber suitable for peeler logs; asserting that such resources are a natural heritage which should be conserved; asserting that exportation of such logs has undermined Northwest industries, and urging that the Congress pass House bill 3579, introduced by Mr. COFFEE of Washington, or identical legislation to prohibit the exportation of such logs; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1414. Also, resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Tacoma, Wash., Thad Stevenson, secretary-manager, pointing out that lumber industries are the means of employment of thousands of workers in the Tacoma, Wash., area; that these industries are dependent on the virgin softwood resources of the Pacific Northwest for their existence; asserting that export trade of finished lumber during recent years has been curtailed because foreign countries have imported Douglas fir logs to the exclusion of American finished products, constituting a serious drain on the great natural resources of the Pacific Northwest; insisting that the exportation of the raw material instead of finished product deprives the Pacific Northwest of more than $1,000,000 annual pay roll, and therefore emphatically urging that the Congress forthwith consider and pass House bill 3579, introduced by Mr. COFFEE of Washington (and similar bills of the same purport and tenor providing for the prohibition of export of such logs); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1415. Also, resolution of mass meeting of 5,000 persons held under the auspices of the Seattle Star, Seattle, Wash., comprising representatives of all pension groups within the State of Washington, asserting that the present social security law, though commendable in objective, has proved to be inadequate, unsatisfactory, and discriminatory; and therefore urging the present Congress to give serious consideration to the various recovery and retirement plans now pending and enact forthwith a recovery and retirement plan embodying the general principles of House bills 2 and 11, so that the country will be benefited by a genuine retirement and recovery plan consonant with the American standard of living; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1416. By Mr. GRAHAM: Petition of the Catholic Daughters of America Court, No. 663, Rochester, Pa., urging the retention on the statute books the act of May 1, 1937, and the extension of the original act to include civil as well as international conflicts; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1417. By Mr. GUYER of Kansas: Petition of the State of Kansas, as expressed in Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 6, passed by the Senate and the House of the State of Kansas, now in session at Topeka, Kans., asking that Congress make available to the States all funds collected under the tax imposed on sporting arms and ammunition by the Pittman-Robertson Act; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1418. By Mr. HALLECK: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Bourbon, Ind., favoring the enactment of legislation for the control of the motion-picture industry; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1419. By Mr. HOUSTON: Concurrent Resolution No. 6 of the Kansas Senate, memorializing the Congress of the United States to appropriate all of the funds collected under the terms of the Pittman-Robertson Act for Federal aid to the States in wildlife restoration; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1420. By Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON: Petition of Charles A. Teeple, of Corsicana, Tex., opposing House bill 101, section 210 (b) (7), amendment to the Social Security Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1421. Also, petition of A. M. Aycock, owner of Ben Hur Telephone Co., route 2, Mart, Tex., favoring House bill 2842, which has to do with telephone exchanges having 1,000 or less subscribers, and modifies the wage-and-hour law so as to make it possible for these small exchanges to continue to employ telephone operators as they have in the past; to the Committee on Labor.

1422. By Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY: Petition of the Transport Workers Union of Greater New York, comprising 50,000 members, urging vote for the appropriation of the additional sum of $150,000,000 cut from President Roosevelt's original recommendation on Works Progress Administration; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1423. Also, resolution of the New York Board of Trade, Inc., New York City, opposing the enactment of Senate bill 158, known as the Hill bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1424. Also, letter from Rev. Dr. Paul Austin Wolfe, of the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York City, expressing opposition to the proposal to include churches and ministers under the extended provisions of the Social Security Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1425. Also, letter from the board of national missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, New York City, opposing the proposal to include churches and ministers under the extended provisions of the Social Security Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1426. By Mr. KEOGH: Petition of Vincent A. Roy, supervisor, teacher-training department, Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y., concerning House bill 2319; to the Committee on Education.

1427. Also, petition of the Queens County committee, the American Legion, Department of New York, concerning House bill 3760; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

1428. Also, petition of the Transport Workers Union of Greater New York, concerning the President's recommendation for additional appropriation of $150,000,000 for Works Progress Administration; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1429. Also, petition of the rehabilitation committee, United States Marine Hospital, Fort Stanton, N. Mex., concerning seamen coming under the Social Security Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1430. Also, petition of Gane & Ingram, Inc., manufacturing chemists, New York City, concerning House bill 3536; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1431. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of Gane & Ingram, Inc., manufacturing chemists, New York City, urging support of House bill 3536, to tax imported menthol; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1432. Also, petition of the National League of District Postmasters of the United States, Washington, D. C., urging support of amendment by Representative BURCH, of Virginia, increasing appropriation for third-class post offices; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1433. Also, petition of the Transport Workers' Union of Greater New York, urging additional appropriation of $150,000,000 for Works Progress Administration; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1434. By Mr. SANDAGER: Memorial of the officers and members of the board of directors of the General Welfare Association of Rhode Island, Inc., of Providence, R. I., to speedily enact the General Welfare Act (H. R. 11) into law; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1435. Also, memorial of the Rhode Island Agricultural Conference, opposing placing a tax of 3 cents per gallon on fuel oil; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1436. Also, memorial of the State of Rhode Island, urging that in the construction of the new post office in Westerly, R. I., the entire exterior be of Westerly granite; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1437. By Mr. SCHAEFER of Illinois: Petition of Local 243, Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Beverage Dispensers, Byrl Donelson, secretary, Alton, Ill., favoring adoption by Congress of amendments to the Wagner Labor Relations Act as recommended by the American Federation of Labor; to the Committee on Labor.

1438. Also, petition of the Ladies' Auxiliary, National Association of Letter Carriers, Lodge No. 97, Viola I. Palis, recording secretary, East St. Louis, Ill., urging enactment of certain legislation for improvement in working conditions for postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1439. Also, petition of the Senate and House of Representatives, General Assembly, State of Illinois, appealing to the President, Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy, and commanding officers and athletic directors of the service academies to direct that the annual football game for 1939 between Army and Navy be held in the city of Chicago; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1440. By Mr. SCHIFFLER: Petition of Katie B. Knox, secretary, Townsend Club, No. 3, Fairmont, W. Va., urging early action on the Townsend bill (H. R. 2); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1441. By Mr. SMITH of West Virginia: Resolution passed by the House of Delegates of the State of West Virginia in which the Representatives in Congress from that State are requested to oppose the enactment of House bill 188 and Senate bills 126, 138, and 158, which pertain to the establishment of freight rates; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1442. Also, resolution adopted by the members of Local Union No. 7252, United Mine Workers of America, Royal, W. Va., opposing any and all amendments to the National Labor Relations Act; to the Committee on Labor.

1443. By Mr. TENEROWICZ: Resolution of the Senate of the State of Michigan, urging Members of Congress not to take favorable action on House bill 188 and Senate bills 126, 137, and 158; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1444. By Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey: Concurrent resolution introduced and adopted by the One Hundred and Sixty-third Legislature of the State of New Jersey, February 6, 1939, commending the House of Representatives of the National Congress on their recent action in continuing the activities of the Dies committee to investigate un-American practices; to the Committee on Rules.

1445. By Mr. WEAVER: Petition of certain citizens of Waynesville, N. C.; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1446. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Jose Castro Novoa, of Hatillo, P. R., and others, petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to veterans of the World War; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1447. Also, petition of the Meridian Teachers' Association, of Meridian, Miss., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to Senate bill 1305, Federal aid to education; to the Committee on Education.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, February 27, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O giver of life and light, who hast brought us in safety to the beginning of this another day, look down in infinite pity upon this, Thy world, and let Thy spirit lead us through the coming hours into a new and richer experience wherein all fears and vain regrets shall be cast aside, and our service to our country and our God shall know the rapture of a high resolve to quit ourselves like men in this valley of decision.

Bless, we humbly beseech Thee, with health, strength, and spiritual insight our President, Vice President, the Members of the Congress, the judiciary, and everyone who bears the authority and responsibility of leadership, and grant that they and all our citizens may make the great adventure of faith, and discover the secret of peace in finding Thee. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, February 28, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4492) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 494. An act to name the bridge to be erected over the Anacostia River in the District of Columbia, after the late "March King," John Philip Sousa, composer of The Stars and Stripes Forever; and

S. 1294. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to regulate the hours during which streets, alleys, etc., shall be lighted.

CHARGES FOR METERED COMMODITIES OR SERVICES, POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Postmaster General, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act approved April 27, 1937, entitled "An act to simplify accounting," which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DRAFTS OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION BY INTERIOR DEPARTMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate letters from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting drafts of proposed legislation to authorize the sale and conveyance of certain property of the estate of Jackson Barnett, deceased Creek Indian, and also to amend section 4 of the act of May 31, 1933, enacted to safeguard the interests and welfare of Indians of the Taos Pueblo, N. Mex., in certain lands within the Carson National Forest, which, with the accompanying papers, were each referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Joint Memorial 5

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Fortieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, convened in regular session, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the Port of Bay City is a municipal corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the constitution and laws of the State of Oregon, and organized principally for the purpose of improving the harbor conditions at the entrance of and on Tillamook Bay, in Tillamook County, Oreg.; and

Whereas at the time of the organization of such port, it embraced within its territory and subject to taxation many millions of feet of standing and merchantable timber, upon which such port depended for the revenue necessary to carry out its purposes; and

Whereas in 1933 a fire destroyed a large portion of such timber, thereby eliminating the principal source of revenue of such port, and rendering it financially impossible for such port to pay its outstanding indebtedness approximating $296,000, or to further carry on the necessary works in connection with the improvement and maintenance of such port; and

Whereas during the present winter a storm caused the washing out of the north end of Bay Ocean at the entrance of Tillamook Bay, which will require the early construction of a jetty at the south entrance of Tillamook Bay in order to protect not only the harbor, but also lands bordering on Tillamook Bay, and said port is without revenue, as well as without sources of revenue, to carry on the work immediately necessary; and

Whereas the improvement of the entrance to Tillamook Bay, as well as the maintenance of said harbor, is of general interest to the welfare of the people of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the senate jointly concurring therein), That the Legislature of the State of Oregon does petition the Members of Congress from the State of Oregon and the whole Congress of the United States to consider favorably and to pass such legislation as may be necessary to permit and direct the assumption and payment by the United States of the present and outstanding indebtedness of the Port of Bay City, and the appropriation of such additional sums as may be necessary to forthwith improve the entrance to Tillamook Bay in Oregon by the construction of a jetty at the south side of such entrance and to construct and maintain the necessary sea wall to protect Bay Ocean Peninsula; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this application be sent forthwith to the Congress of the United States, to each Member of the Congress from the State of Oregon, and to the President of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

House Concurrent Resolution 14

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to appropriate funds for the payment of taxes levied on Indian lands in South Dakota to which patent in fee titles have been erroneously issued by the Secretary of the Interior and which patent in fee titles were later canceled by the Secretary of the Interior

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the senate concurring):

Whereas heretofore the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to a "declaration of policy," issued patents in fee to numerous Indians residing on the several Indian reservations in the State of South Dakota, covering the lands theretofore allotted to such Indians by trust patent; and

Whereas by issuance of patent in fee title such lands became and were subject to taxation by the several tax districts of the State of South Dakota in which such lands were situated; and

Whereas upon the issuance of such patent in fee titles the lands were assessed and taxed by the taxing districts in which such lands were located for several years, and the said taxing districts issued warrants of indebtedness against such anticipated tax revenues; and

Whereas in most cases the tax levies against such land were not paid by the Indian owner thereof, but such taxes were allowed to accumulate thereon for several years; and

Whereas subsequently thereto the patent in fee titles theretofore issued to many of said Indians were canceled as having been erroneously issued, and the land restored to its former trust status, and the lien of said taxes were thereby canceled and lost to the detriment, disadvantage, and hardship of such taxing district which had incurred indebtedness relying on the validity of such patents in fee and consequent taxation of such lands; and

Whereas a few of said Indians receiving such patent in fee titles to their lands paid the taxes assessed and levied thereon for several years, and after cancellation of such patent in fee titles as aforesaid, have brought suit in the United States courts and have recovered judgments against the county or counties in which such lands are situated, for the amount of taxes so paid by them with interest thereon from the date of said payment; and

Whereas on account of the general financial distress of the counties of the State of South Dakota containing Indian lands this situation has worked a tremendous hardship on the taxpayers of such counties in not being able to collect the taxes so assessed and levied against such Indian lands to which patent in fee titles had been issued as aforesaid, and upon which tax levies said taxing districts had incurred indebtedness, and in being compelled to pay back to those Indians who had paid the taxes, the amount of taxes paid by them with interest from the date of such payments; and

Whereas this deplorable situation has occurred entirely by reason of the issuance of such fee simple patents by the Secretary of the Interior as aforesaid: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress be, and it is hereby, memorialized and petitioned to promptly take such steps and to appropriate such funds as may be necessary as to provide for the payment to the several counties of the State of South Dakota of the taxes so assessed and levied against Indian lands to which fee simple patents have been issued by the Secretary of the Interior, and which patents in fee were subsequently canceled and the said taxes thereby lost to said counties and to pay to said counties the amount or amounts that such counties have paid on account of judgments recovered against them by Indians on account of taxes mistakenly paid by them under such patent in fee titles heretofore issued by the Secretary of the Interior, as aforesaid; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be certified and forwarded by the secretary of state of South Dakota to the Secretary of State of the United States at Washington, D. C., and to the Vice President of the United States as presiding officer of the United States Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a cablegram from the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico, embodying a resolution of that house requesting that Puerto Rico be included and allotted its share of a proposed appropriation for developing and operating vocational schools in the States, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. HUGHES presented a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of Delaware, in reference to Federal taxes on motor fuels and lubricating oils, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 27th instant, pp. 1894-1895, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. LODGE presented petitions, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the adoption of measures to stop the shipment of arms and munitions to Japan for use in operations in China, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MINTON presented a memorial, numerous signed, of members of the South Bend Industrial Union Council, and sundry other citizens of South Bend, Ind., remonstrating against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the memorial of the pastor and 521 members of the First Baptist Church, of Warsaw, Ind., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to include religious bodies under the operation of the social-security system, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented the petition of sundry citizens of Greenleaf, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation exempting small independent telephone companies from the provisions of the Labor Standards Act of 1938, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Review Club, the Ladies Literary League, the Current Event Club, the Mothers League, the faculty and student body of the College of Emporia, and sundry citizens of Wabunsee, Kans., praying that the United States stop the shipment of war materials to Japan for use in operations in China, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wichita, Kans., praying for the enactment of House bill 11, a general-welfare bill granting old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by a joint meeting of the elders, trustees, and members of the First Presbyterian Church of Great Bend, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation including religious bodies under the operation of the social-security system, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

RESOLUTIONS OF MICHIGAN STATE LEGISLATURE

Mr. VANDENBERG. I present two memorials from the Michigan State Legislature for usual publication and reference. I especially call attention to one of them, which happens to relate to the particular subject matter now pending before the Senate; and I desire to read two of the resolving clauses:

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That we, the members of the Sixtieth Legislature of the State of Michigan, memorialize the Congress of the United States that we are in favor of preparation for a reasonable adequate home defense of the United States by air and sea and land, but that we are unalterably opposed to any action, diplomacy, or mandate that will involve our Nation in war with any other nations, on our own behalf or in defense of other nations; and be it further

Resolved, That any declaration of war, either direct or implied, we believe must be by the present United States constitutional sovereign power of Congress, and should not be delegated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolutions presented by the Senator from Michigan will be received and appropriately referred, and, under the rule, printed in the RECORD.

To the table:

House Concurrent Resolution 5

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to provide for a reasonable adequate home defense, and also measures for the prevention of war

Whereas we are warned by the facts that the Old World has been and is at war, declared and undeclared, and that there is a real menace, it is believed, to the peace of our Nation; and

Whereas the greatest peacetime program for war is now being prepared, and the imminence of war is being discussed in assemblies and in newspapers throughout the Nation; and

Whereas our citizenry with foreign interests should be warned that we are unalterably opposed to any action, diplomacy, or mandate that will involve our Nation in war with any other nations; and

Whereas we approve uniting with friendly nations in diplomatic and economic cooperation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That we, the members of the Sixtieth Legislature of the State of Michigan, memorialize the Congress of the United States that we are in favor of preparation for a reasonable adequate home defense of the United States by air and sea and land, but that we are unalterably opposed to any action, diplomacy, or mandate that will involve our Nation in war with any other nations on our own behalf or in defense of other nations; and be it further

Resolved, That any declaration of war, either direct or implied, we believe must be by the present United States constitutional sovereign power of Congress and should not be delegated; and be it further

Resolved, That we believe war is abhorrent, a destroyer and not a builder of nations, and that the people of our democracy can best serve not only the interests of its own people but the peoples of other nations, with a real demonstration of democracy of peace and prosperity in our own country as the best guarantor of world peace and welfare; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution be spread on the journals of the house and senate and suitable copies be sent to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to Michigan Members in the Senate and House of the Congress of the United States.

To the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 12

A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to defeat certain measures that would discriminate against Michigan industry and agriculture in the matter of transportation rates

Whereas there are now pending in Congress several measures, namely, H. R. 188, S. 126, S. 137, and S. 158, and before the Interstate Commerce Commission an action designated as Docket 27744, all of which are detrimental to Michigan labor, industry, and agriculture, because they impose discriminatory transportation rates against Michigan and in favor of certain Southern States competing with the products of Michigan; and

Whereas adoption of these revised rate schedules, in the estimation of competent authorities, would force some Michigan industrial enterprises to face the alternative of closing or moving their plants to the States sponsoring these rate revisions, thus making more acute Michigan's economic difficulties; and

Whereas other States threatened with the same destructive discrimination, notably Illinois and Indiana, are putting forth every effort to defeat this attempt to subject them to unfair competition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That we do hereby urge the United States Senators and Members of the United States House of Representatives from Michigan to exert their full force in defeating the measures referred to; and be it further

Resolved, That the interests of the State of Michigan be adequately represented in hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission or before any other agency of the Government on the proposals referred to, such representation to be at the discretion of the Governor of Michigan.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BULOW, from the Committee on Civil Service, to which was referred the bill (S. 1582) to authorize the President to bestow a Meritorious Service Medal upon civil-service officers and employees of the United States, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 121) thereon.

Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on Civil Service, to which was referred the bill (S. 281) to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 122) thereon.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 1464) to extend the facilities of the United States Public Health Service to active officers of the Foreign Service of the United States, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 123) thereon.

WATER-POLLUTION CONTROL—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted a report (Rept. No. 120) to accompany the bill (S. 685) to create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, heretofore reported from that committee without amendment.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARBOUR:

S. 1656. A bill for the relief of Parker McKee, Sr., and Louise McKee; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NEELY:

S. 1657. A bill for the relief of William Lewis Drain; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TRUMAN:

S. 1658. A bill granting a pension to Thyra Wilks; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED:

S. 1660. A bill to redistribute the functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to create a Transportation Planning Board, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this morning my colleague, the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], and I received a telegraphic request to introduce in the Senate two bills which are now pending in the House of Representatives. I have conferred with Representative HORTON, who introduced the bills in the House; and I now ask unanimous consent that we may introduce both bills in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bills will be received and appropriately referred.

By Mr. HATCH and Mr. CHAVEZ:

S. 1661. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920

(41 Stat. 437; U. S. C., title 30, secs. 185, 223), as amended; and

S. 1662. A bill to provide for the extension of certain oil and gas prospecting permits issued under the acts of Congress entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on public domain," approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437, U. S. C., title 30, secs. 185, 223), as amended; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

S. 1663. A bill to adjust the salaries of rural letter carriers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 1664. A bill to reclassify the salaries of watchmen, messengers, and laborers in the Postal Service, and to prescribe the time credits for service as substitute watchmen, messengers, and laborers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

(Mr. MURRAY introduced Senate bill 1665, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. DAVIS:

S. 1666. A bill to provide a right-of-way; and

S. 1667. A bill to provide a right-of-way; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1668 (by request). A bill to amend the act entitled "An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases," approved April 22, 1908; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BYRD:

S. 1669. A bill relating to the military record of Irving L. Leaf; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ASHURST:

S. 1670. A bill for the relief of Walter D. Adams; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KING:

S. 1671. A bill to provide for the construction, extension, and improvement of public-school buildings in Uintah County, Utah; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 1672. A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to permit Salt Lake City, Utah, to construct and maintain certain roads, streets, and boulevards across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CONNALLY:

S. J. Res. 85. Joint resolution authorizing the preparation of plans for the eradication and control of the pink bollworm affecting cotton in the United States and Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

W. P. A. PROJECTS IN GREAT PLAINS AREA

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, several days ago I sent to the desk to be printed an amendment which I intend to propose to the second deficiency bill. That amendment provides for the appropriation of $5,000,000 to be used in making supplemental allotments for W. P. A. projects in the northern Great Plains area. The necessity for these supplemental allotments arises from the fact that under present W. P. A. appropriations the administration is limited to expending not more than $7 per man-month for nonlabor costs on W. P. A. projects.

In the Great Plains area it is absolutely essential that a comprehensive program of rehabilitation be carried out, and these supplemental allotments for nonlabor costs will make possible the relocation of stranded farm families in the drought areas, making them self-supporting and removing them from the relief rolls. It should be emphasized in connection with this amendment that all allotments made from this appropriation of $5,000,000 will be wholly reimbursable to the Government.

The appropriation was passed by the Senate last year and was recommended by the Director of the Budget. In this connection I refer to Senate Document No. 220, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting this recommendation made by the Acting Director of the Budget. I request that the document I refer to be inserted in the Record at this point as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The document referred to is as follows:

[S. Doc. 220, 75th Cong., 3d sess.]

CONSTRUCTION OF WATER CONSERVATION AND UTILIZATION PROJECTS
Communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1939 for the construction of water conservation and utilization projects, amounting to $5,000,000

June 7 (calendar day, June 14), 1938.—Read; referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 14, 1938.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1939 for the construction of water conservation and utilization projects, in the amount of $5,000,000.

The details of this estimate, the necessity therefor, and the reasons for its transmission at this time are set forth in the letter of the Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget, which is transmitted herewith, with whose comments and observations thereon I concur.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, June 14, 1938.

THE PRESIDENT,

The White House.

Sir: I have the honor to submit for your consideration a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1939 for the construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the amount of $5,000,000, as follows:

"Water conservation and utilization projects: For construction, in addition to labor and materials to be supplied by the Works Progress Administration, of water conservation and utilization projects, including acquisition of water rights, rights-of-way, and other interests in land, in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States, fiscal year 1939, $5,000,000, to be allocated by the President, in such amounts as he deems necessary, to such Federal departments, establishments, and other agencies as he may designate, and to be reimbursed to the United States by the water users on such projects in not to exceed 40 annual installments: Provided, That expenditures from Works Progress Administration funds shall be subject to such provisions with respect to reimbursability as the President may determine."

There have been submitted for consideration various proposals for the construction of irrigation projects in the Dakotas, Montana, and other portions of the Great Plains area, which would be impracticable for construction under the existing reclamation laws requiring full reimbursability of construction costs, but which might be considered feasible if reimbursement were not required of a part or all of the cost of labor and materials that might be supplied by the Works Progress Administration. The purpose of this estimate is to provide, for allocation by the President, an appropriation of $5,000,000, which would be reimbursable to the United States, and be expended, in connection with Works Progress Administration funds, for the construction of such projects as the President may consider feasible. This program contemplates the construction of numerous projects for the purpose of providing opportunities for settlement by farmers who are now unable to make a living by dry-land farming.

The foregoing estimate is required to meet contingencies which have arisen since the transmission of the Budget for the fiscal year 1939, and approval is recommended.

Very respectfully,

D. W. BELL,
Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. MURRAY. After the appropriation had been passed by the Senate last year and sent to conference, an amendment was inserted which provided that not more than $50,000 could be allotted to any one project. This amendment rendered the appropriation ineffective and useless, as no project could be carried through under such a limitation. Last October the Northern Great Plains Committee, in submitting its report to the President, recommended the removal of this limitation, and it was on the basis of this recommendation that I prepared and introduced my amendment which will remove the limitation.

I have here an excerpt from the report of the Great Plains Committee, and I ask that it be printed in the Record at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

EXCERPT FROM REPORT OF GREAT PLAINS COMMITTEE MADE TO THE PRESIDENT OCTOBER 14, 1938

On June 14, 1938, the President submitted to the Congress a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1939 for the construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States, amounting to $5,000,000. Such an additional appropriation, if supplemented by such Works Progress Administration aid as appears to be suitable, would permit construction of the greater part of the projects indicated in table I. The Congress authorized the item of $5,000,000 in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1938, but provided that the funds were to be taken from the funds made available by section 1 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, and also provided that not to exceed $50,000 may be expended on any one project. These limiting provisions practically defeat the purpose of the appropriation—insofar as projects in table I are concerned. It is accordingly recommended that these restrictions be removed by appropriate action in connection with the first deficiency bill of the next session of the Congress and that so much of the appropriation as cannot be effectively used thereafter and before June 30, 1939, as the President may direct, be made available for use in the fiscal year 1940 (contingent upon the continuation of the work-relief program). Work could thus be initiated during the latter part of the fiscal year 1939 with a greater degree of assurance of its completion.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, today I am introducing additional proposed legislation in connection with the recommendations made by the Great Plains Committee. The bill which I am sending to the desk will enable the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire land suitable for cultivation which will be used for the relocation of drought-stricken farmers now receiving Federal relief. It is the opinion of the Great Plains Committee that without such enabling legislation there can be no adequate program of rehabilitation in the Great Plains area. The bill further provides that the Secretary of Agriculture be authorized to make use of Farm Security Administration appropriations for the construction of small irrigation projects. Hitherto the funds appropriated for the Farm Security Administration have been used in making direct relief grants. This legislation will enable the Secretary to place these rural relief clients on useful work projects and rehabilitate these areas now constituting such a serious problem to our Government.

I respectfully request that the bill I now introduce be referred to the appropriate committee for consideration and report, and that it be printed in the Record at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill of the Senator from Montana will be received, appropriately referred, and printed in the Record.

The bill (S. 1665) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to more adequately provide for the rehabilitation of certain regions of the United States, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the first sentence of subsection (a) of section 32 of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is amended to read as follows: "To acquire by purchase, gift, or devise, or by transfer from any agency of the United States or from any State, Territory, or political subdivision (1) submarginal land and land not primarily suitable for cultivation, and interests in and options on such land, and (2) land suitable for cultivation or capable of being made suitable for cultivation, and interests in and options on such land.

(b) Subsection (c) of such section is amended by striking out "sale, exchange, or grant" and inserting in lieu thereof "conveyance of title without consideration."

Sec. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture, in lieu of extending direct relief to any person who may apply to him for direct relief payable from any sums appropriated to the Secretary of Agriculture and made available for loans, relief, and rehabilitation for needy persons, may employ such person and pay him compensation at the rate paid to employees employed by the Works Progress Administration upon work similar to the work to which such person may be assigned. Any person so employed by the Secretary shall be assigned by the Secretary to perform work upon any water-utilization, soil-conservation, or other regional rehabilitation project under construction by any department or independent agency of the United States or by any agency of a State or a political subdivision thereof. No such assignment shall be made by the Secretary without the consent of the department or agency constructing the project. The provisions of the act of February 15, 1934 (48 Stat. 351), as amended, relating to disability or death compensation and benefits shall apply to any person so employed to the same extent, and in the same manner, that such provisions apply to persons receiving compensation as employees of the United States from the funds appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 4492) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. CAPPER, the Committee on Finance was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1628) to exempt from taxation certain property of the American Friends Service Committee, a nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of Pennsylvania for religious, educational, and social-service purposes, and it was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. BRIDGES submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADVERTISING OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES BY RADIO—AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 517) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by radio, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL DEFENSE ARRANGEMENTS WITH FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, for myself and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] I ask consent to submit a resolution which I request to have printed and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 91) was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas the Senate Military Affairs Committee recently approved a $100,000,000 authorization to purchase and store large stocks of essential war materials which are not available in this country; and

Whereas the acquisition of such reserves of strategic war materials would materially contribute to our national security and to the creation of a sound national defense program; and

Whereas, in view of recent developments in war-torn Europe, it is not impossible that certain insular possessions of great strategic importance in the defense of the American hemisphere now held by certain so-called democracies may be lost to nations whose proximity to our coasts would be undesirable; and

Whereas several foreign nations have debts, incurred during the World War, still outstanding to the United States; and

Whereas the payment of these debts might be used to fund the purchase of these war materials in part or full payment of their debts to us and to make available to the United States geographical points important in the defense of the United States; and

Whereas the payment of these war materials would not compete with any American activity: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested to enter into negotiations with foreign governments which are indebted to the United States with a view to arranging for such governments (1) to furnish the United States with strategic materials for national defense purposes, and (2) to make available to the United States geographical points which are of strategic importance for national defense purposes, in payment or part payment of the indebtedness of such governments to the United States.

FLORIDA SHIP CANAL

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, on the 4th day of February of this year I addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior inquiring whether the Geological Survey had any information as to the possible effect of the construction of the Florida ship canal on the ground waters of Florida, and in reply I received a letter from W. C. Mendenhall, Director of the Geological Survey, under date of February 7. In his reply Mr. Mendenhall referred to the hearings before the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, where he testified.

I have before me also a letter dated February 25, 1939, from the Acting Secretary of the Interior in response to Senate Resolution 63.

I also have before me a letter from Mrs. Bessie Palmer, setting forth that as far back as 1825 the Governor and the Legislative Council of the State of Florida passed an act providing for an examination into the expediency of opening a canal across the peninsula of Florida, and enclosing a copy of the act, as well as of a memorial to the Congress of the United States on the subject.

I also have before me a letter written by me to Dr. Mendenhall, Director of the Geological Survey, under date of February 25, of this year, and his reply under date of February 28.

I ask unanimous consent that all this correspondence, together with the testimony of Dr. Mendenhall before the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives on Thursday, April 29, 1937, on House bill 6150, be printed as a Senate document, and that the letter from Mrs. Bessie Palmer to me under date of February 16, 1939, together with the memorial of the Governor and Legislative Council of the State of Florida, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter and enclosure referred to are as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
STATE OF FLORIDA,
Tallahassee, February 16, 1939.

HON. CLAUDE PEPPER,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I thought you might be interested in knowing that the Florida canal project has been on the Congress calendar since year 1825.

While doing some research work on a W. P. A. project sponsored by the Florida Railroad Commission, I discovered the act that was created by the Legislative Council of Florida in 1825 to open this canal.

In 1834 a resolution was drawn up by the legislative council to be sent to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States concerning the canal.

Enclosed is a copy of each. I am,

Very truly yours,

Mrs. BESSIE PALMER.

Chapter CXCVIII (No. 32)

An act appointing commissioners to report on the opening of a canal from the Gulf of Mexico to the Atlantic Ocean.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Governor and legislative council of the Territory, that James Gadsden, William H. Simmons, and Edward R. Gibson be commissioned to examine into the expediency of opening a canal from the waters of the Gulf of Mexico to those of the Atlantic through the peninsula of Florida, and that they report to the next legislative council on the consequences, practicability, and probable cost of operation; the intent of assistance that may be deemed from the General Government in aid of the undertaking; and the terms on which private enterprise and capital may be enlisted in its execution.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, moneys advanced by individuals and which shall be received and disbursed by said commissioners shall be considered a component part of a general stock of a canal company, if it shall hereafter by the legislative council be deemed expedient to charter the same.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, that said company shall not be entitled to any compensation for their services.

A. B. BELLAMY,
President of the Legislative Council.

Approved December 8, 1825.

WILLIAM P. DUVAL, Governor.

No. 1

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The legislative council of the Territory of Florida beg leave again respectfully to ask the attention of the Federal Government to the important project of effecting a communication between the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico across the Florida Peninsula. The excavation of the ship channel, so long and so anxiously contemplated it is believed will not probably be undertaken by the United States. If it is to be abandoned your memorialists respectively present to the attention and favorable consideration of Congress a project for creating such communications which it deems feasible, to wit, by the construction of a railroad across the upper neck of the peninsula from the town of Jacksonville on St. Johns River to the Gulf of Mexico at the disembogement of the River St. Marks.

The district of country through which this railroad would pass affords advantages certainly not surpassed, perhaps not equaled in any portion of the United States of the same extent throughout the whole distance, the country level, of firm, solid foundation, and the few rivers which the road route across are never subject to high or rapid freshet. In every portion of the route is found in the greatest abundance, and the finest, timber in the world for such a construction and a mild and delightful climate where frosts and ice never occur to impede its operation.

The legislative council, impressed with the belief that it is a measure perfectly practicable in its accomplishment and highly important in its consequences, not only with reference to the interests and prosperity of the Territory of Florida but received in a national light as forming the most important link in the chain of inland communication between the extreme North and South, have at their present session incorporated The Florida Peninsula Jacksonville Railroad to construct a railroad from Jacksonville to Tallahassee, a distance of about 145 miles in a straight line to be there connected with the Tallahassee and St. Marks Railroad; also charter at the present session without the aid of the Government this great undertaking will be restored for many years or perhaps totally fail of accomplishment. They therefore pray the attention of your honorable body to the following resolutions. Be it therefore

Resolved, by the Governor and legislative council of Florida that the Delegate in Congress be requested to obtain from the Congress of the United States the appointment of an experienced engineer to survey the route of the contemplated railroad from Jacksonville to Tallahassee and also to obtain relinquishment on the part of the United States in favor of said company of 1 mile on each side of the said route of the public lands through which it may pass; and be it further

Resolved, That the Delegate be further requested to obtain from Congress such appropriations of money, donations of land, or subscriptions to the stock of railroad company as their wisdom and the importance of the object may suggest or justify; and be it further

Resolved, That the foregoing memorial and resolutions when signed by the Governor and president of this legislative council shall be certified by the chief clerk and forwarded to our Delegate in Congress.

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article written by Miss June Lipke entitled "Here on the Pribilofs," which appears in the Appendix.]

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday, the first committee amendment was pending. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] gave notice that he desired to be heard. The Chair sees the Senator from New Mexico on his feet, and recognizes that Senator.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I do.

Mr. BRIDGES. I offer amendments to the defense bill now under consideration, and ask that they may be printed and lie on the table.

In explanation of the amendments, let me say that they are amendments to permit the training of Negro aviators in certain Negro colleges approved by the Secretary of War, and to do other acts to that end, in order that the Negroes of the country may have the advantage in certain institutions of the same training for aviation that is offered to white boys.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I am going to vote for the pending bill because I believe in national defense as a fixed governmental policy—a defense in keeping with this country's welfare, historical traditions, ideals, and the dignity of the Nation.

During the debate on the pending measure much has been said concerning the foreign policy of this Nation. It seems to me that the Nation has had a fixed foreign policy; and, regardless of inflammatory statements by some persons in the Government, the fact still remains that we need a fixed foreign policy now. Ever since the beginning of the Republic there has been such a policy. It is simple and readily understood by the entire world. Our policy has been to attend to our own business and stay away from the political difficulties of other nations. We may not agree with or like their form of government, but we still feel that it is their business. Other nations may not like our form of government, but this country would not for a minute stand for any other nation telling us what type of government we should have. We are satisfied with ours.

We have not in the past let any other nation interfere with our domestic policy. That is something which pertains to the American people and the American people only. Ours has always been a party government, and we let the American people decide just what party they want to have in control of the Government. We have had both the Republican and the Democratic Parties in control of governmental affairs. If the American people are not satisfied, it is up to them to make the proper changes; and in keeping with that idea we would not let another nation tell us whether or not the New Deal is satisfactory to the American people.

There is no reason for misinterpretation of our foreign policy. I believe that the American people are satisfied with the policy as it was outlined by the early statesmen of our country. It was very vividly expressed in this Chamber on the 22d of February, when I listened most attentively to the reading of Washington's Farewell Address by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. I have been in the Congress of this country since 1931; and on the 22d of February every year, either in this body or in the House of Representatives, I have heard that masterpiece of common sense and intelligence read by some Member of the Congress. There must be some reason for it. One cannot say it is idle curiosity that makes Members of Congress and other citizens of the country listen to that address. I listen to it because it contains words of wisdom and advice that have been strictly followed by this Nation in governmental affairs for the past 150 years. In that address is embodied wisdom which should guide our international policy now.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that there seems to be some doubt as to what that policy is, and what the advice of Washington was at the time, and what we have been following ever since, I ask to be allowed to quote from that masterpiece.

Referring especially to our foreign policy, Washington said what I am about to read. I believe it was good advice then; I believe it is good advice now, and that it has been and should be followed:

In our dealings with other countries Washington said that we should—

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but, in the course of time and things—

How prophetic, Mr. President.

the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it; can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

The following I respectfully commend to some governmental officials who, in my opinion, do not exemplify the advice and the sentiments expressed by Washington.

In the execution of such a plan—

Says Washington, referring to a plan or rule of conduct—nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others, should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another, disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty of nations, has been the victim.

So, likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gliding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak toward a great and powerful nation dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence—I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens—the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Mr. President, I believe sincerely that Washington's advice in his Farewell Address to the Nation contains our foreign policy, that it has been generally strictly adhered to, and that in the future this country should ever heed that advice. So it appears to me that when we talk of a different foreign policy of this Government at this time, we forget our own past history. Never have we interfered with the domestic policies of other nations, but that it resulted to our detriment. With the exception of Latin America, our policy has been in keeping with the dignity of this Nation; we have followed and heeded the advice of George Washington.

We should never interfere with the domestic affairs of other countries any more than we would let any other country interfere with our affairs. But let us examine history and see how in keeping with the advice of Washington have been the efforts of this country along these lines.

One of our first experiences in foreign affairs was during the time of the French Revolution. Did we tell the French people what kind of a government they should set up? There were many people in this country at that time who did not believe in beheading other human beings, a thing which happened in France. Nevertheless, this country kept hands off, as it always should in the affairs of other countries.

There is no reason why we should be our brother's keeper so far as his domestic affairs are concerned. There is no reason whatsoever why we should stand for one instant another country telling us what to do.

Mr. President, there is no question that peoples of other nations probably were not satisfied and criticized and condemned our attitude toward the real natives of this country, the Indians. Who can say that he is proud of what we have done to the Indians? Nevertheless, it has been our affair. Shocking the history may have been, to such an extent that even to this day the Congress takes cognizance of the fact that the Indian must have been abused, for at every session of Congress we take action to try to rectify something bad that was done in the past. But we handled that affair.

During the time when Texas was obtaining its independence from Mexico did we assert or obtain the sanction of any other country as to what we should do? In our dealings with the Republic of Mexico did we ask any other country for advice? We have been following the advice of Washington and attending to our own affairs so far as domestic policy has been concerned and have let other countries attend to theirs. We may not like their governments, we may not like what they are doing. I personally do not like many of the things that are happening in nations in Europe today, and while we may protest, and while we as a nation may say that we dislike what they are doing, nevertheless, if we are to heed and follow the advice of Washington, we must let them settle their own difficulties.

Mr. President, I shall digress for a few moments to talk of something which I believe we can do in order to bring about peace, at least in some sections of the world. I will ask my colleagues to follow me when I say and believe me when I assert that it is not my purpose to interfere or say what kind of government any other nation should have. I firmly believe that, whether we like it or not, every other nation has the right to run its affairs as it and the people of the country see fit.

I shall talk of one particular matter, because I believe it is along the line of what I think the American people want—peace everywhere. I shall discuss an unfortunate country which for the last 2½ years has been in the throes of a terrible civil war, and I shall do this in order to see if we as a nation can do something to bring about peace in that unfortunate country.

Mr. President, possibly the most dramatic historical event of recent years is the Spanish war which has been so sanguinely waged these past 2½ years. It has captured the spotlight of the world news. It has aroused the sentiments of all people. In its savagery it has indeed surpassed all civil wars before it. Due to the tremendous amount of propaganda, feelings have been whipped to fever heat in this country. I feel, however, that now that the war is drawing to a close the common desire and wish in the United States, of even the most partisan for either side, is that the war end quickly and that peace be restored to that unhappy nation.

Events of the last few days have brought the war to a dizzy close and it is commonly accepted by the world that the nationalist forces have won. This being so, it should now be the earnest desire of all peace-loving Americans that conditions in Spain be restored to normalcy and that we, as a nation, do all we can to bring this about.

Mr. President, I earnestly urge that we take immediate steps to recognize the nationalist government of General Franco. I do this because of the sincere belief that it will contribute to the immediate peace of the world and tend to restore normal relations between the United States and a great country of Europe and add to our own immediate prosperity. In this I am guided solely by what has been the consistent policy of this Nation; that is, to view recognition and any other manifestation of our foreign policy strictly on the basis of our own welfare and our obligations as prescribed by international law.

In my humble opinion our foreign policy, and certainly the domestic policies of other nations, should be viewed completely and impartially from the single standpoint of our own welfare. This is based on the belief that a war for this country would greatly endanger our own institutions, and is based also on the conviction that to become involved in the domestic affairs of foreign countries will lead us to war. That may be selfish, perhaps, but the hard-won liberties wrested by the blood and sacrifices of our ancestors are too precious a heritage to trust to the dangers which might possibly result if we became involved in every domestic problem which might arise the world over.

In my remarks it will be necessary to go into the background of the Spanish war. By doing so I hope to clear away if possible some of the mistakes which I am afraid have been accepted in this country and overcome also some of the arguments against recognition of Nationalist Spain which are based on these errors.

The Spanish War had its origin in problems and racial characteristics some thousands of years old, yet pseudo experts have been swarming over this country explaining the question and solving it, mind you, in an evening's short lecture.

I recall the speeches of my good friends the former Representatives in Congress, Mr. O'Connell and Mr. Bernard, who spent a week in Spain and returned experts on the ethnic, social, economic, political, and spiritual problems of a country which the whole world acknowledges to contain people more individualistic and diverse than any other on the globe.

I am minded of the irresponsible statements of would-be Machiavellis who invoked the sacred name of democracy and rushed to the fray to defend what purported to be democracy but which in reality was only clothed in its raiment.

It is time that the people of this Nation obtain a true picture of conditions in Spain. In the few moments I am taking today I hope to show why I believe the Nationalist government should be recognized immediately. To do so it will be necessary to go into several phases of the civil war, including the events leading up to it.

I do not want anyone to overlook, however, that though I believe in the intrinsic merits of the Franco government and its right to recognition, for reasons which I will endeavor to demonstrate, still the strictly legal argument based on American foreign policy and our own welfare as a people ultimately motivates my arguments for recognition and is the only one upon which I insist.

Mr. President, why the people of this Nation have been misled as to the nature of the war in Spain is hard to explain; but if we put our finger on international propaganda, the story reveals itself. It is a sad commentary, however, that the liberal press of the United States, which a few short years ago was so loudly condemning the propaganda which drew us into the World War, should have been duped, along with the rest of the press of this Nation, on the Spanish situation. But just as the press of this country was wrong in its choice for President in 1936, so has it been wrong in interpreting conditions in Spain. I know that if the American people were acquainted with facts they would see the striking similarity between the Nationalist movement and their own struggles for freedom. Americans who have fought so many times to protect their civil rights and institutions should have no difficulty explaining or appreciating why the Government of Spain since the Republic and prior to the outbreak of the war was no government at all, and above all was not a democratic government. They need only to know the real story.

I am mentioning this only because I know that the immediate objection to recognition will be the soporific argument that Franco is a dictator and a Fascist.

What amazes me is that in our country all the organizations which are so industriously lobbying and sponsoring the cause of the Negrin government fasten so tenaciously on fascism and ignore completely its twin evil communism. And I am wondering if it is not true that the various organizations—I name them offhand: (1) The American Friends of Spanish Democracy; (2) American League for Peace and Democracy; (3) Friends of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade; (4) Lawyers Committee on American Relations with Spain; (5) American League Against War and Fascism; (6) Medical Bureau to Aid Spanish Democracy; (7) North American Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy—are not after all communistic organizations with a democratic cloak. It does seem strange that the principal officers of these organizations should be also officers or adherents of the Communist Party.

Permit me then to develop the history of the so-called Spanish Republic.

The Spanish Republic, though established because of basic social evils existing under the Royalist government of Alfonso and founded for the purpose of attempting to solve these problems, made little effort to do so, but, rather, confined itself to anticlericalism of the most violent sort. It was weak, vacillating, and inept. In fact, it did not govern since it did not or could not control the outrages of the street mobs. In fact, it was no government at all, for it was either guilty of inciting the violence of the mobs, as so many charge, or it was incapable of controlling them. In either case it was not government but anarchy.

It is a mistake to judge conditions in Spain by conditions in our own country. A thorough understanding of conditions existing in Spain will reveal how utterly incorrect it is to call the former Spanish Government a democracy.

Spain must not be compared to the United States. The American people have had not only the hundreds of years of legislative government, but the countless centuries of inherited experience in parliamentary government from the mother country, England.

To class Negrin, Indalecio Prieto, Del Vayo, or Largo Caballero as champions of democracy is much more farfetched when the record is examined than it is to class Franco as a democrat.

To begin with, Spain has for centuries been the battleground of races and ideologies. Civilizations have repeatedly clashed on her soil. Europeans clashed with the Asiatics on her soil when Roman and Carthaginian met there in a death struggle for mastery of the world. It was just beyond her gates that the Moslem tide was turned back on her soil by Charles Martel, and Spain's history since then has been one long struggle to rid the land of the invader.

When the second great Moslem invasion threatened to engulf all Europe it was the Spanish infantry of the Emperor Charles V, at Vienna, which defeated the hordes of Suliman the Great; and again at Lepanto the Spanish vessels shattered once and for all the menace of Moslem invasion to Europe by destroying the sea power of the Great Turk.

Today Spain is dedicating her blood, shedding it on her own soil, as a willing sacrifice that the greatest menace to civilization the world has yet to know will be turned back. Spain's 1,000,000 dead form a mighty dike against which the surging wave of communism will spend its strength.

We are fortunate in this country that we do not know communism, but, just as Spain was marked by international communism to be its victim, so has this great Nation been chosen, and if we are wise we will profit by Spain's experience, for communism has no equal in its threat to civilization. For sheer terror, godlessness, immorality, and ruthlessness the atheistic Muscovite terror is beyond comparison.

The fierce warriors of Taric el Tuerto, who destroyed the flower of the Spanish Visigoths at Guadalete, were lambs in comparison to the agents of communism who invaded Spain 1,220 years later.

It will be a revelation for Americans at least to learn that even from the beginning the Spanish Government was hardly democratic in our sense of the term. Shortly after the constitution was adopted, in 1931, the government pushed through Parliament the so-called act for the defense of the republic, which suspended the provisions of the constitution referring to freedom of speech, of the press, of meeting, of association, and thus destroyed what we consider to be the choicest fruits of our democracy.

At that time the government was in the hands of Azana, the recently resigned President of the Spanish Republic. The opposition party consisted mainly of the Popular Action Party of Gil Robles, which represented the rightist or traditionalist viewpoint.

During the next 2 years the government manifested itself most consistently in its anticlericalism and antireligiousness. Everywhere there was disorder and bloodshed. Writers and public speakers during this period were imprisoned. One hundred and fifty rightist newspapers were suspended. Three thousand fines were levied.

So violent were the excesses that the Nation reacted instinctively, and in the elections of 1933 there was a sharp swing to the right. In that election the Popular Action Party won a decisive victory, but instead of appointing a government corresponding to the mandate of the electorate the President of the Republic appointed a cabinet headed by Martinez Barrio, a man equally as violent and anticlerical as Azana.

In the chamber elected in that year the Popular Action Party had the greatest number of seats. The result of the election enraged the leftists who openly incited the masses to revolt and to terrorism and violence. It was at this time that the fateful revolution broke out in Asturias under the radicals. The revolution was put down by the army. Then the leftists, growing alarmed at the growing strength of the rightist forces, and fearful lest the social program of the Popular Action Party meet with public approval, decided on further violence.

It was in such a situation that Spain saw itself approaching the elections of 1936. This is the election which the friends of so-called Spanish democracy insist legally elected the Negrin government. For it is commonly asserted and not disputed that the leftist or popular-front government won a complete and legal victory in that election.

However, an analysis of the election figures, as well as a study of conditions attending the election, will demonstrate that there is at least grave doubt whether the so-called Loyalist government was ever popularly installed, much less legally elected.

By the figures of the Junta Central del Censo, the official results of the election, the anti-Marxist coalition secured in Spain some 250,000 more votes than did the popular front. This is too evident to be denied. The figures are easily obtainable. Upon further analysis of the composition of the Parliament, one will see that though the popular front did elect more representatives it did so only because of the gerrymandering and chicanery which had taken place under its order.

Americans who have had a taste of elections in which the registration, the poll books, the election officials, and all the election machinery are in the hands of one party, will appreciate what happened in that election.

In other words the electoral districts were divided in such a way that leftist districts were given a disproportionate number of delegates. For example, districts like Madrid elected 19 delegates, Barcelona 22, and the rightist rural districts, like Soria and Alva, only 3 and 2, respectively.

In the leftist districts the seats reserved for the minority were proportionately few, while in the rightist districts the seats reserved for the minority were proportionately very many.

To put the matter graphically, in Madrid the majority of the leftists amounted to 35,000 votes, and by this they elected 11 deputies, and in Salamanca the rightists secured a majority of 70,000 and elected only three deputies.

The election itself was a farce. For example, the Government agents in Lugo imprisoned the rightist candidates and leaders. In the district of Tuy, Lalin, L'Estrada, the Government's agent forcibly seized the election certificates of 230 precincts. In the district of Corunna the rightist candidates were locked up in the offices of the civil government and obliged to sign certificates acknowledging that they were beaten. One candidate was threatened at the point of a gun to sign his name, and, Mr. President, strangely enough it was "O'Shea."

With methods such as these the popular front reached the Cortes with a small majority. To make it larger they annulled the elections in the districts of Granada, Cuenca, Salamanca, Burgos, and Santander.

I should like to ask those who insist so vigorously that the popular front government was popularly installed by the election of 1936, to read Current History Magazine and the publications of the Royal Institute of International Relations of London. Both publications give the right wing a large majority in the election.

How then could the rightists in Spain have faith in this so-called democracy? What would have been the reaction in our Nation if in the election of 1936 the Government or New Deal had by force seized the poll books and certificates in Vermont and Maine in order to make its victory complete?

And what if in 1938, to make the majority in Congress greater, the Government had seized by force candidates of the Republicans such as the distinguished Senator from Ohio, and the countless other successful Republican candidates for Congress, and at the point of a gun forced them to acknowledge by written certificates that they had been defeated?

Would not our faith in democracy have been shattered if the Government had at the last election stepped into the States of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kansas, Wyoming, Massachusetts, and other places where the Republican Party won great victories, and annulled the elections by decree of the Democratic majority which exists in this Congress?

But in Spain excesses such as these were not enough for the fiendish desires of the leftists. They then summarily dismissed from office the President of the Republic, Alcalá Zamora, and they then initiated a slaughter of rightist soldiers and officials.

And by law passed by this, oh, so democratic parliament, all judges and magistrates who did not adhere to the popular front were deprived of their offices. And this, Senators, included members of the Supreme Court of Spain.

This was not a question of adding to any court. It merely consisted of kicking out the opposition. It was as if this Congress and the Government should enact a law tossing out the dissenters on our Supreme Court if they did not agree to all the New Deal legislation which we have passed, most of which, I am proud to say, I voted for. Could such a government pass the test of democracy?

Then in Spain began the reign of terror. Mobs ruled the streets with ever-increasing violence. In Cadiz, in Alicante, and in Granada the leftist mobs burned and sacked churches, theaters, business houses, and residences, and the civil governors refused to call out the militia.

In Madrid the Communists burned three churches, one of which was that of San Luis, which was situated within 50 yards of the Ministry of the Interior. We are told by reports that the Minister watched the fire from his apartment in the Ministry and made no attempt to stop the disorder.

Murder, arson, bombings, and assassinations took place daily throughout the land. Time and time again rightist deputies, such as Calvo Sotelo and Gil Robles, called attention to these outrages, but the Government declined to heed their protests. Robles tells us that he himself reported hundreds of assassinations without the Government being able to deny a single one.

Spain was in the hands of the anarchists. It was then that the Nationalists took arms to fight for the things which we in this country cherish above life itself.

God forbid, but should a situation such as I have described ever arise in this country, I would join, as we would expect all Americans to join, any movement which promised to restore the institutions and culture of our ancestors and guarantee the stamping out of so fiendish a government.

How can anyone who truly believes in the institutions of our country by any stretch of the imagination call the government which then existed in Spain a democracy? Who can blame those who rose up and by force of arms fought to crush the anarchistic and diabolical forces which are destroying their country and their culture?

Imagine a situation in which armed mobs throughout this country are bombing and burning churches and residences of those who do not belong to "a popular front." Imagine a popular-front government in this country which annuls the elections of conservative or opposition Representatives and Senators. Imagine a situation in which a popular-front President aided by a small majority in the Congress, throws out the members of the Supreme Court and Federal judiciary who do not agree with them. Imagine a President and a Congress who encourage and incite mob violence, and who sit back and allow the beautiful National Cathedral in Washington, in which rests the body of our great wartime President, to be used as a munition dump and to be burned to the ground. Imagine a government which allows the ministers of God to be murdered merely because they are religious. Imagine a government which would allow the bodies of the Jesuit fathers, who rest in eternal sleep in the consecrated burial ground back of the old Georgetown College, to be sacrilegiously torn from their burial places and rudely dragged through the streets of Washington. Would that be democracy?

American patriots gave their lives for their belief in free government and liberty, just as today Spaniards are fighting and willingly giving their lives to stamp out communism and restore what they, too, hold dear—the tradition and culture of their ancestors.

The spark that set off the flame of war in Spain was the murder of Calvo Sotelo, the leader of the rightist forces in the Cortes. He was a brilliant orator and statesman, and had been Minister of Finance during the regime of Primo de Rivera. Through his brilliance and sound argument, Sotelo was becoming a threat to the leftist, who realized that through their excesses they stood to lose in the coming elections, so they murdered him. His murderers were three captains of the police.

God forbid that such a thing should ever happen here; but imagine, if you can, what conditions would exist in this country if, because of inability to match wits with the adroit maneuvers of our brilliant minority leader, the Democratic leaders of Congress could with impunity order his murder by three Capitol policemen. Democracy, Mr. President? Government, Mr. President? Or anarchy?

Following this in Spain, the first to strike was the army. Behind it all sectors of the Spanish Nation united as a man. The poor and the rich who did not wish their country to fall into the hands of anarchism and godlessness joined in the nationalist movement.

Why, I ask, has not this tale been told to the American people? It is easy to understand the Gallup poll when we realize that the American people have never been told the true story of what happened in Spain. Why has this side of the story been withheld?

Of course, I know these statements will be challenged, but fortunately we have the written word of the great men of Spain to bear them out. The written testimony of the men who led the fight for the establishment of the Republic in 1931—the liberals, republicans, and ardent patriots who had suffered under the monarchy that Spain might be free—is vivid proof of the statements I have just made.

Let me quote what the first President of the Spanish Republic has to say of the turbulent days while he was in office, and see if I have in any way exaggerated what took place. In the Journal de Geneve he addresses to its readers on January 17, 1937, the following:

The Popular Front rose to power on the 16th of February by means of an electoral procedure as absurd as it was unjust, one which grants to a relative majority, though it may be an absolute minority, an extraordinary preference. It was thus in any district that the popular front, even though it had received 30,000 less votes than the opposition, could nevertheless win 10 out of 13 seats, without having anywhere more than 2 percent more votes than the party which came next. This paradox was quite frequent.

Later he adds:

It was thus that the Cortes planned two parliamentary coups d'etat. First, they declared themselves indissoluble for the remainder of the presidential term. Second, they removed me from office. The last obstacle had been swept aside from the path of anarchy and all the violence of the civil war.

Let me quote from Alejandro Lerroux, a chieftain of the radical party in Spain, one of its dominant figures during the period of the Republic, and certainly no Fascist.

He says:

The tenseness of the situation in Spain was becoming intolerable. The time had come when either the Communists and their allies or the conservative forces of the country would have to take the initiative, for such a situation could not last. Since the illusory electoral triumph gained in February by the popular front, Spain was the scene of the most criminal violence for which no one was punished. In Madrid assassinations and arson were common even in open daylight. Not only did the Government fail to exercise the slightest repression, but the most elementary measures of precaution were disregarded.

He adds further, in describing the violence that went on prior to the outbreak:

But at one stroke everything gives way; there is no parliament, no democracy, no liberty, no justice, no order, no peace. Then what is left of the Republic, and the nation? For the nation cannot be this savage horde that robs, pillages, and assassinates under the pretext of social equality; nor this band of elementary intellectuals who direct it and who, preferring that the work of 20 centuries of civilization be reduced to nothingness, do not have the heroism to perish with it nor the greatness nor the nobility to assume their responsibilities. Before resorting to flight, sure of impunity, they pillage the national treasury and sack private property, leaving behind them as prey for gunfire and fodder for the cannon a miserable herd, which will have to pay with its own blood.

And finally, to describe the present war being waged by the Nationalist, he adds in the same article:

I therefore declare we are not witnessing a military rebellion. The army has not broken its discipline; it is trying to reestablish a discipline which antipatriotic treason and criminal anarchy have destroyed; it has not rebelled against the law but to uphold the law, because law and authority require it; not against the people but for the salvation of the people. We are not concerned in the slightest with merely another military pronunciamiento but with a national uprising as sacred and legitimate as that of the independence in 1808. It is even more sacred, for here it is not only a matter of political independence but also of social and economic organization of the home, of property, of culture, of conscience, of life; in short, of all the civilization of an entire history. . . . When the army rose in arms it was already identified with the people, and the people placed themselves deliberately on its side without distinction of class or ideology. The people and the army have mingled their blood from the first day, and that blood has sealed a pact of sacrifice and of abnegation on the altar of the nation.

What more noble sentiments have ever been uttered? Here is a man who has dedicated himself to the establishment of a republic in Spain, a man who throughout his entire life in an unbroken line consecrated his efforts to bring democracy to Spain; a man who suffered persecutions, trials, imprisonment, and exile in his struggles for its principles; yet he saw the futility of describing the Spanish Government as a democracy.

Let me describe for you the words of Gregorio Marañón, president of the Academy of Medicine of Madrid, a world-famous biologist, a deputy in the Cortes, and one of the founders of the Republic, and—what will interest the women of this country—the sponsor of suffrage for the women of Spain.

He tells us that he was horrified by the murder of the great Spanish Republican, Ferrer, by the monarchist government; but the murder of 30,000 Ferrers by the Popular Front government, because they believed in freedom of thought, without trial, by firing squads, and the murder by hand grenades of 5,000 more in prison, destroyed his faith in such democracy. I quote him:

In me these acts produced the same reactions. I did not wait for such murders to sever my connections with stupid assassins, savage fanatics, who hate all science and intelligence. . . . When Calvo Sotelo was assassinated, with the consent and knowledge of all, by three police captains, I wrote my friend: "I am through . . . forever."

Spain, the great country of letters, has produced no figure more brilliant than the great philosopher and outstanding world liberal, Unamuno. He was late president of the University of Salamanca. He led the fight for the establishment of the Republic. He dedicated his life to it. Imagine the disillusionment and the great force of character that was required of this great man to acknowledge to the world that the social experiment which he himself helped initiate had not worked out as planned and that it was a failure and menace to the country. Listen to his words:

In a very short time Marxism succeeded in dividing the citizens. I have seen what the class struggle is; a reign of hatred and of envy which the worst passions unleash. We have known a period of pillage and murder. Our civilization was going to be destroyed. You can probably understand the irresistible impulse which today is driving the Spanish people to expel those who have deceived them. This impulse grows between blood and suffering. What will become of it tomorrow, next month?

Let me quote an outstanding American statesman. The first Ambassador to the Spanish Republic, Mr. Laughlin, was on the scene throughout the early days of the Republic and can personally testify to the excesses and anarchism of the Reds and, what is even more important, can give evidence to the trials and sacrifices which a nation must undergo if it falls a victim to communism. To read his statement is to want to dedicate one's life to wiping out the evil. This is the quotation from Mr. Laughlin:

The object of this Spanish popular-front government, which came into power in February 1936 has been the destruction of democracy, and to this end they have deliberately slaughtered, in thousands of cases with obscene torture, at the very lowest estimate more than 200,000 helpless men, women, and children.

I continue quoting from Mr. Laughlin:

These Spanish anarchists have been directed by carefully formulated plans sent them from abroad to exterminate the middle classes. The Communist International has controlled the mob—and the Government as well—and has directed the outrages since the spring of 1936. Its influence on the popular front has been known since 1932. . . . The driving force behind the whole movement is the Communist Party. The National Commission of Marxist Unification did a thorough work of organization before the popular revolution of July 1936. All these facts have been published and can be confirmed by anyone who wishes to follow up the dismaying history. But they are not yet generally known to the great public in the United States. From this ignorance springs the widespread delusion that what are so often called the Spanish Loyalists are adherents of a democratic government of respectable existence.

Mr. President, I have purposely refrained from analyzing the direct cause of the disorder and chaos in Spain, preferring to describe the situation generally as anarchistic communism. I intend to go slightly into the background and its origin with two purposes in mind: First, to show that the civil war and the success of the Nationalists was the direct result of the reaction of Christian Spain to communism; and, second, to warn the United States of the evils of communism; to reveal to our people an example of what happens when communism is allowed to filter into a country under the guise of democratic institutions, and to show them more particularly what is meant by the popular front, the Trojan horse plan of action which international communism has so cleverly devised.

International communism, I maintain, deliberately planned and directed the violence and lawlessness that characterized conditions in Spain during the early days of the Republic and immediately prior to the outbreak of the Nationalist revolution. The strikes, mob riots, burned churches, and public edifices, the mutilated art treasures, the assassinations of priests, the murder and violation of nuns, the desecration of the dead were nothing more than the carrying out of a carefully and diabolically laid plan, and it was not, as Ambassador de Los Rios claims, the sporadic outbreak of indignant people.

We are told—and it is a matter of record—that long before the assassination of Calvo Sotelo the possibilities of communistic control of Spain were openly discussed in the meetings of the central executive committee of the Communist International in Moscow, and a specific program was forwarded to the Communist Party in Spain for execution.

It is also a matter of record that during the critical period of the Spanish Republic's existence a group of trained agitators were dispatched from Moscow to Spain. There were some 70 of these agitators sent to this unhappy country, every one of whom was trained in the technique of revolutionary uprising.

In 1931 the executive committee of the Communist International in Moscow adopted several theses, a statement from one of which is as follows:

* * * The prerequisites of a revolutionary crisis are being created in a rapid pace in Spain.

It was in the report of this same meeting in Moscow that the masters and directors of international communism so clearly outlined what they were doing in Spain. We are told that the agents were paving the way for the revolution which was to come. The report described in detail the economic strikes of the proletariat, the mass disintegration of the army, the murder of religious people, and the increasingly fervent propaganda against Christianity. The effect of their plans is evidenced by the disorders which followed.

In this country news reports at that time hinted that the Spanish Republic was being made the victim of a vast conspiracy against law and order and that in the background there existed a vast clandestine and powerful force. Peasants were carrying the Communist banner and compelling the landowners to salute the flag. The war against God continued at white heat. We are told that on May 16, 1932, seven stone crosses, one of them dating from the twelfth century, were destroyed in Galicia. Religious processions were fired upon.

All this was leading up to and in preparation for the direct work to come of the radical and Communist agitators in the popular front. And while on the subject of the popular front, it is well to consider that, by admission of the Communist officials themselves, Communists are always the guiding spirit and driving force of the popular front.

The foreign secretary of the Communist International, Dimitroff, in a speech at the World Congress, has this to say:

Only the Communist Party is at the bottom, the initiator, the organizer, and the driving force of the united front.

The period from 1932 and up to 1935 is characterized by increasing violence. Nineteen hundred and thirty-five is the time of the Asturias revolt, at the bottom of which the Communists, by admission of their press in Russia, were the instigators. The revolt, by admission of the Communist International, was for Soviet power and led by Communists. In 1935 the same Dimitroff, whom I have just mentioned, on August 2, 1935, at the Seventh World Congress, gives further explanation of the instructions which they wanted their agents abroad to use and which they did use in unhappy Spain.

The formation of a broad people's front—providing for joint action with social-democratic parties, is a necessity. Cannot we endeavor to unite the Communist, social-democratic, Catholic, and other workers? Comrades, you will remember the ancient tale of the capture of Troy. Troy was inaccessible to the armies attacking her, thanks to her impregnable walls. And the attacking army was unable to achieve victory until, with the aid of the famous Trojan horse, it managed to penetrate to the very heart of the enemy's camp. We revolutionary workers, it seems to me, should not be shy about using the same tactics.

So the popular front was formed in Spain. This was prior to the election. Manifestoes urging the voters in the general election in February to vote for the Soviet system were openly circulated. Through the election and following it disorder was rife in the provinces. Communists ordered the general strike in Granada, and during its progress mobs roamed the streets, burning and sacking.

It is impossible to list all the outrages following the election. In June a list submitted to the Government after 6 months of popular-front government included: 160 churches destroyed, 251 churches partially destroyed, 43 newspaper offices destroyed, 69 Catholic centers destroyed, and 28 churches closed. In the Cortes deputies were brazenly singing the International, and their clenched fists were raised in mockery to God in the "red" popular-front salute.

It was in April of that year that Senor Sotelo warned Spain in a speech before the Cortes of "the progressive bolshevization of labor groups and their open threats to supplant the Government by a proletarian dictatorship at the first opportunity."

No sooner had Calvo Sotelo finished delivering his now famous address in the Cortes, revealing the anarchy then prevalent in the country, and warning of the bolshevization of Spain, when a Communist delegate arose and said: "This will be your last speech."

His words were prophetic, as Sotelo paid with his life for his utterances, for within 3 months local Soviets and committees took over the government in Madrid, and the prophetic words of another long since dead also came true. Lenin died prophesying that Europe would burn at both ends. Spain in the hands of the Communists was being reduced to shambles; it was then that Franco started his victorious march.

Of the success of the Nationalist arms there is no need to speak. Victory, however, was won at the cost of over a million dead and countless wounded. Lenin was right—Spain was burning; she paid a horrible price; but Lenin wrongly foresaw a Communist Spain as the result. He did not reckon that Spain would overcome the Communist invasion just as she had every other invasion in the past.

We should not be too prone to condemn the horrors of the Spanish war, but rather we should recall the terrific slaughter of our own War between the States. Let us not forget the sufferings of innocent noncombatants because it was strategically sound that sources of supplies should be cut off in order that the Union might be preserved.

The Spanish war should remind us rather of the horror in all wars and impress us with the futility of wars and the sorrow they bring. Above all it should bring home to us the realization that our freedom and institutions are our most precious possessions and that even at the cost of the horrors of war we should be prepared to defend them.

But what of the Nationalist regime and its leader General Franco? How are we to judge him? In October 1936, Francisco Franco at Burgos described the aims of the Nationalist government as follows:

We promise the Spanish people that no home shall lack a hearth and fire; no worker shall lack bread. Everybody shall have work, because those who have more shall give away something for those who have less. Our social justice will be based on brotherly love and on intimate collaboration of all classes. Our hand will be hard and relentless to establish social justice.

How, then, shall we characterize the outcries in this country of the pseudo liberals and radicals who are everywhere screaming fascism, dictator, and reactionary at anyone who mentions Franco's name?

Any man who speaks such words as those which follow cannot be motivated by the interests of the wealthy and conservative classes:

For peace and the country's welfare—

General Franco continues—for the rational and just betterment of the working and middle classes, for liberty of conscience and respect for religion and tradition, for the tranquillity and prosperity of the home, for our threatened civilization and the prestige of our flag, for the independence of our country, for a new Spain, a free Spain, a great Spain, our soldiers are fighting today this Russo-communistic invasion.

Under Franco there is peace and tranquillity in Nationalist Spain. Those who insist that the Nationalist uprising is only militaristic ignore the facts. Today the territory of Nationalist Spain knows only happiness and security. In nationalistic Spain there is authority and order.

To its credit it might be added that throughout this sector of Spain there is not even the semblance of military government, for in the territory conquered by the Nationalists preparations had been made in advance for the setting up of civil government. There is a civil and not a military government in Nationalist Spain.

In speaking of the work that goes on behind the lines in Nationalist Spain, Franco tells us that they are taking up the problem of ending stoppage in work, of adequately helping people out of work, of educating the poor and middle classes, and of providing facilities for underprivileged children. Plans are being made for free medical assistance, to fight tuberculosis, and to help poor families; in a word—I quote him—"to do everything to secure the new, happy Spain which we all desire."

His economic aims are quite clear, and no one can find fault with them, for he says that the Nationalists will govern in favor of the poor and the middle classes; that they want to banish forever the poverty of the working classes and the injustices of those who have a right to live and be happy. On labor Franco has the following to say:

The laborer is worthy of his hire and will receive an absolute guarantee that he will not be a slave to capitalism * * *. We are fighting for a state which will be like one great family, without overlords or serfs, plutocrats or proletarians, and in which all the elements that go to make the national wealth will be represented.

And once again, in Salamanca, in 1937, on January 19, he tells us:

This new Spain will represent a great national family, one without masters or vassals, without poor or potentate. Social justice will be the basis of our new empire, without destructive and suicidal class warfare, without meddlesome interferences from abroad that are so incompatible with our national dignity. We want a fraternal Spain, an industrious and working Spain, where parasites can find no lodging. A Spain without chains and tyrannies, a nation without destructive Marxism and communism, a state for the people and not a people for the state.

I like the last sentence—"a state for the people and not a people for the state." In other words, he proposes the very antithesis of both communism and fascism, which would subordinate the lives and souls of the people to the state.

Mr. President, the Nationalist government is the only government in Spain today. The Negrin government has collapsed. Resistance is at an end. Azaña, the President of the Republic, has tendered his resignation, convinced that further resistance on the part of the Government is not only futile but would result only in further and needless slaughter and continue the suffering of the Spanish people. He is seconded in this view by the Vice President and the head of the Spanish Parliament, Martinez Barrio. Only the evacuation of Government and Army officials awaits Franco's occupation of the remaining one-fourth of Spain which remains outside of Nationalist territory. The terror and chaos and ruin which characterized Government Spain will, thanks to God, be replaced by the order and peace which has thus far followed the success of the Nationalist arms.

Internationally, the world has accepted the success of the Nationalists. The following nations have already recognized Franco's government as the government of all Spain: Albania, Hungary, Peru, Bulgaria, Italy, Poland, El Salvador, Japan, Portugal, Germany, Manchukuo, Uruguay, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Argentina.

The Balkan entente has met, and each of its members agreed to recognize Franco.

I understand that 11 other nations, in addition to those I have just mentioned, have also recognized the Nationalist regime of General Franco. The French and the British are according unequivocal recognition to the Nationalists. So in the eyes of the world, with the exception of the United States and Russia, the Nationalist government is the sole government of Spain.

We are in lovely company. Naturally this will please the countless "pink" publications and organizations which shroud their "red" tendencies under various guises; but whether this is for the best interest of the Nation is at least debatable.

Personally I believe we should immediately instruct Ambassador Claude Bowers to proceed to Burgos and present his credentials.

Before proceeding further, let me analyze briefly what is meant by recognition, after which I shall point to what American policy has been in respect to recognition throughout the history of the Republic. Then I shall endeavor to demonstrate how conditions today fulfill all the requisites of recognition; and, finally, it shall be my purpose to show why it is to the interest of our Nation immediately to recognize Franco.

The requisites of recognition are given by the authorities simply as follows:

First. There must be a stable government, with the additional attribute of future stability or future permanence.

Second. It must exercise dominion over a considerable geographical area.

Third. It must be willing to recognize its international obligations.

Other authorities have concentrated on two requisites and have overlooked that of exercising dominion over a geographical area. For example, Taylor Cole, in defining American policy on recognition, says:

These criteria, reliance upon which has resulted in giving to the United States a recognition policy which has been fundamentally continuous from earliest times to the present, have included, first, the present and future stability of the government to be recognized; and, second, the willingness and ability of the government to fulfill its international obligations.

In other words, if the United States should recognize Franco, it would only be admitting what is a fact; namely, that his government is stable now, that it offers promise of stability in the future, and that the Nationalist government has time and time again expressed its willingness to meet its international obligations.

In respect to the first condition, it is a commonly accepted fact that the Nationalists have won the war. The Negrin government has disintegrated; and further resistance is, according to newspaper dispatches, impossible.

Reports from Nationalist Spain tell of the order and peace which exist there. Prices have remained at prewar levels. Their currency is accepted throughout the exchanges of the world at no discount; and, of course, the step taken by France and Great Britain to recognize the Nationalists is in itself testimony of the stability of the Nationalist government.

It should be added here that the policy of recognition of Great Britain differs from that of the United States in that the foreign office has always divided recognition into categories. One is conditional and revocable and is called de facto. The other is complete, final, irrevocable, and is called de jure recognition. In the present case the governments of both nations are according complete and irrevocable recognition to the Nationalists.

An examination of the history of our own foreign policy will disclose that we recognize only one form of recognition, and that is de jure. We do not believe in de facto recognition.

According to our policy the sole thing which we look to when a new government exists in fact is the question, Are the requisites satisfied? If they are, recognition should immediately follow.

Therefore, since every condition necessary for recognition is found in the Nationalist government—it is stable; it gives promise of future stability; it exercises dominion over practically all of Spain; it has publicly announced its willingness to respect its international obligations—we should immediately recognize it as the sole government of all Spain.

The only possible objection that can be raised—and this is political—is that we do not agree with the form of government maintained by Franco.

In the first place, I am not willing to concede that the government of Franco will be Fascist in any sense of the term.

I cannot believe that the Spaniards, as individualistic as they are, will ever submit to fascism in the extreme sense of the term. Their history and characteristics clash much too diametrically with the principles of fascism to permit this.

Just as the Nationalist movement itself was a reaction to communism, so would there be reaction to fascism.

Fascism is not the answer to Spain's problems. Authority, order, peace, work, bread, justice for the poor are the answer; and all of these, and more, are pledged by Franco to the Spanish people.

But, even so, we should not be concerned by the internal political affairs of Spain as far as recognition is concerned, when our interests are not affected.

An unbroken line of precedents, from the time of the founding fathers to the present, clearly illustrates the theory accepted by the United States that the internal domestic affairs of other nations are no concern of ours.

There is wisdom and foresight in the statement of Thomas Jefferson when he so ably outlined this policy in his letter to Morris while he was Secretary of State. It is dated March 12, 1793.

I read:

I am sensible that your situation must have been difficult during the transition from the late form of government to the reestablishment of some other legitimate authority, and that you may have been at loss to determine with whom business might be done. Nevertheless when principles are well understood their application is less embarrassing. We surely cannot deny to any other nation that right wherein our own Government is founded—that every one may govern itself according to whatever form it pleases, and change these forms at its own will; and that it may transact its business with foreign nations through whatever organ it thinks proper, whether king, convention, assembly, committee, president, or anything else it may choose. The will of the Nation is the only thing to be regarded.

Congress has concurred in this policy. Henry Clay, in his report to the Committee on Foreign Relations at the time of the consideration of the recognition of Texas, further confirming the power of the United States to recognize if it chose, said the following:

The right of one individual power to recognize the fact of the existence of a new power is incontestable. It is founded upon another right, which appertains to every sovereignty, to take care of its own interests by establishing and cultivating such commercial and other relations with the new power as may be deemed expedient. Its exercise gives no just ground of umbrage or cause of war. The policy which has hitherto guided the Government of the United States in respect to new powers is to act on the fact of their existence, without regard to their origin whether that has been by the subversion of the preexisting government or by the violent or voluntary separation of one from another part of a common nation.

Confirming this policy, Buchanan, as Secretary of State in 1848, when we recognized the provisional government of France, said:

In its intercourse with foreign nations the Government of the United States has from its origin always recognized de facto governments. We recognize the right of all nations to create and reform their political institutions according to their own will and pleasure. We do not go behind the existing government to involve ourselves in a question of legitimacy. It is sufficient for us to know that a government exists capable of maintaining itself and then its recognition on our part inevitably follows.

In keeping with this policy the United States has rarely delayed in recognizing new governments, taking as an example, no doubt, the recognition of our own Government in its very infancy by France and Spain.

When the Spanish colonies were breaking away from Spain, even at a time when there were grave doubts as to the success of their being separated from the mother country because of the presence of Spanish armies in the field, Adams' reply to Aduanga, the Spanish Minister to the United States, illustrates this policy. He draws a comparison between the principles involved, insisting that there is one of right and one of fact, and that the one of fact was the one the United States followed as a matter of policy.

In the past the United States has generally, among the nations of the world, taken the lead in recognizing the changes in government in this hemisphere. In Europe we have generally followed the lead of the great powers. However, since the war there has been an increasing tendency to take the lead ourselves as long as the requisites for recognition were fulfilled.

In the case of the Kerensky government Wilson, through Lansing, waited only 9 days from the time of the outbreak until recognition.

In the case of Estonia this Government recognized a consul before there was even the semblance of a government in Estonia. The Czechoslovakian Government was scattered from Pittsburgh to Paris, and yet her government was recognized as existing in fact.

Therefore, on the basis of precedent, there can then be no reason for withholding recognition. It is entirely consistent with our foreign policy.

Thus far I have briefly traced the course of the Spanish war to show why the Nationalists rose up in arms. I sought to show what happened to that unhappy country when it became the testing ground for the application of the clever Trojan horse plan of the Communist International. I sought then to show what the Nationalist government promises to do in Spain and to give evidence of the Nationalist government's popularity and stability. I then sought to point out the policy of our country in respect to recognition, as illustrated by such statesmen as Jefferson, Clay, and Buchanan.

It follows from these that the United States should recognize Franco. The sole question, then, for us to examine is the expediency of recognition. In other words, is it to the benefit of the United States to recognize the Nationalist Government in Spain?

It will be to our material benefit to recognize the Franco government. It is all well and good to talk of ideals and rights and forms of government, but the first concern of government is to its people.

In view of our long line of foreign policy and in view of our own economic conditions at home it is the obligation and the duty of this Government to look first to the welfare of our people. We have millions out of work. We must look to new markets for our goods in order that industry may reemploy at least a part of these people. Certainly it is not right that we should turn our back on opportunity to trade with Spain.

I should like to read some figures submitted to me by the Department of Commerce on our trade with Spain since 1920:

United States exports to and imports from Spain, 1920-38

Year	Exports, including re-exports	General imports
1920.....	$151,440,000	$42,513,000
1921.....	69,197,000	26,160,000
1922.....	70,901,000	28,669,000
1923.....	61,862,000	31,461,000
1924.....	71,163,000	28,962,000
1925.....	79,203,000	32,798,000
1926.....	68,206,000	41,399,000
1927.....	73,776,000	34,351,000
1928.....	86,613,000	35,018,000
1929.....	82,120,000	36,059,000
1930.....	57,507,000	25,362,000
1931.....	33,971,000	16,621,000
1932.....	26,688,000	11,406,000
1933.....	30,757,000	13,701,000
1934.....	38,029,000	18,903,000
1935.....	41,303,000	20,021,000
1936.....	21,540,000	18,537,000
1937.....	6,012,000	13,806,000
1938.....	12,226,000	9,157,000

It is true, of course, that the war could not help but have an adverse effect on trade; but it is equally true that with peace it will be only by restoring the normal relations between the nations that we can hope to restore our lost trade.

We shall have for competitors in this market not only the so-called totalitarian nations but also the democratic countries, which, incidentally, are very commercial. They all will be on hand, you may rest assured, to reap whatever profit can be gained from Spanish markets. Conditions in our own Nation do not warrant our passing up any opportunities for trade.

In addition, it is well to dwell upon the fact that sentiment in Latin America has been consistently in favor of the cessation of hostilities in Spain. Now that peace is promised, and is being bolstered not only by the Nationalist arms but also by the recognition of the various countries in Europe and elsewhere in the world, the countries to our south will resent our hesitancy, and look on it as another example of our propensities in the past toward intervention in their domestic affairs.

They are very interested in that war, and will look upon our policy toward Spain with minute care. We must not jeopardize our improved relations with Latin America merely because of the domestic problems of a European country.

Of course it will be argued that a Fascist victory in Spain in itself will constitute a threat to our interests in Latin America because of the close racial and cultural ties which exist between Latin America and Spain.

This argument overlooks a fundamental characteristic of the Spanish the world over. They are extremely individualistic. Even though in South America they are vitally interested in the outcome in Spain, it does not follow that they can or will be dominated politically by Spain.

Just as Latin America has resented in the past the attempts of this and other nations to intervene in its domestic affairs, so will Latin America resent it if an attempt is made by Spain.

Commercially, we are still leaders so far as South American trade is concerned. We are closely followed, not by either of the totalitarian states, but rather by England. So, if we are afraid to lose this position, we should look to our own efforts, and forget about European bugaboos.

If the South American countries wish to trade and improve their relations with Europe, there is nothing that we can do or should attempt to do to stop them. Let us depend on good salesmanship to promote our stock. Let us sell ourselves, and let the poor qualities of our competitors' brand of goods do the mocking.

While we are on the subject of the closeness of the cultural and racial ties between Spain and Latin America, I might point out that as a nation we are overlooking one of our best bets, and this not even as far away as our doorstep. This treasure is right within our very house, if we would only make use of it.

In the southwestern part of this great Nation and in Puerto Rico live the descendants of the Spanish explorers and colonizers. These people speak both English and Spanish. They have inherited the same culture, language, and traits as their cousins in Latin America. In addition, they possess, by God's grace, an additional gift—American citizenship.

For various reasons, the United States has overlooked the fact that it, too, has a brilliant and illustrious Spanish background. We are only now beginning to appreciate it. If we want success to the south of the Rio Grande, why do we not pick up and utilize the services of those of our citizenry who can present what is truly American, and yet, because of cultural ties, are able at the same time to reach the hearts and understandings of the Latin Americans—something which, thus far, our Government has been unable to accomplish?

Words and pleas about democracy are fine, but deeds are more effective. Try this, and we shall not need to worry about European penetration of South America.

Because I hold the sincere belief that the sanest foreign policy is that which follows the advice of the founding fathers, and steers clear of foreign entanglements; because I believe that we, as a nation, should endeavor to promote friendship with all the nations of the world, irrespective of their internal policies; because I truly believe that the American people want peace, and for the reasons I have previously mentioned, I again submit that we should recognize the National Government of Spain.

Mr. President, I have before me several editorials dealing with our commercial relations with Spain, which I should like to have inserted in the RECORD at this particular point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorials referred to are as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of February 27, 1939]

RECOGNITION OF FRANCO

The decision of Britain and France to recognize the Franco regime in Spain doubtless will cause some bitterness in this country. Yet they had no safe alternative. The almost certain consequence of delayed recognition would have been to throw Franco into the waiting arms of Hitler and Mussolini.

To say that Franco has already sold out to Germany and Italy is an altogether too facile generalization. True, he has accepted their support in his war. We accepted French support in our Revolution, but that did not make us a tool of France. The proud people of Spain, Franco among them, are not likely to submit willingly to foreign domination. We in this country ought to know something about that. Every time our marines have intervened in Spanish-America it has stirred up a hornets' nest all the way from the Rio Grande to Cape Horn.

Spanish reconstruction will cost a great deal of money, and the only major powers in a position to give the new government such financial help as it will need are Britain, France, and the United States. Germany and Italy are having the utmost difficulty in financing themselves.

Furthermore, while Britain and France refused to go to war over Czechoslovakia, they would fight if Italy and Germany attempted to dominate Spain. The very existence of their empires depends upon Spanish friendship, or at least neutrality. They have no wish to dominate Spain; but, as Franco well knows, this is not true of the dictatorships.

Rome and Berlin have claimed all along that their only interest in Spain was to prevent the establishment of a Communist regime. That having been accomplished they can pack up and leave Spain to govern herself, which, no doubt, is exactly what Franco desires. Now, through cooperation, Britain, France, and Spain all have a fair chance to get what they want.

[From the Washington Post of February 28, 1939]

"WITH CHARITY FOR ALL"

For over 31 months the Spanish civil war has kept civilization on the brink of the abyss. More than any other conflict of modern times, the World War not excepted, it has aroused bitterness and divided communities far removed from the actual fighting. Protagonists of either side have painted partisans of the other in the blackest shades. The actual physical destruction, ghastly though it has been, is perhaps less damaging than the sum total of hatred and passion which has been developed.

Now that this war is all but over, every intelligent person, regardless of his sympathies, will breathe a sigh of relief. One of the most dangerous threats to European peace, and to the peace of the United States, is at an end. A deep-rooted disturbance which might easily have engulfed a score of nations, at almost any time since July 18, 1936, is being liquidated. There is no better testimonial to the virility of Europe's intense will for peace than the successful restriction of the fighting to Spain. That must be credited, no matter what is written on the other side of the ledger.

Men of good will everywhere will now be anxious to let bygones be bygones. And Americans in particular will at this moment recall Lincoln's timeless admonition in his second inaugural address. They will hope that Franco will also now proceed "with malice toward none; with charity for all." They will hope that Franco, too, will now "do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves, and with all nations."

It is partly in that hope, and partly because of the inescapable realities of the situation, that the British and French Governments are extending recognition to General Franco on the heels of President Azana's voluntary abandonment of his office. Probably it will be only a matter of time before the United States follows suit. For better or worse the republican government is falling to pieces and the sooner the fact of Nationalist dominance in Spain is accepted the quicker that unhappy country will be able to concentrate on the enormous task of reconstruction.

There will be many who will argue that haste in recognizing Franco is unseemly; that he has triumphed because of foreign assistance and that proof of his ability to govern the country is still lacking. All this is true, yet the factors urging a definitive settlement in Spain remain overwhelming. The democracies cannot save the Spanish Republic by withholding recognition from Franco. That would merely insure that his government, as his army in the past, will have to depend on German and Italian aid. Such an outcome is not in the interest of Spain nor of the democracies. When Great Britain and France agreed on nonintervention they really decided to recognize Franco promptly if he should win. The logic of their policy demands the action now taken.

Nothing is now to be gained by reviewing the ghastly record of butchery which has given the Spanish civil war an aspect of horror unparalleled in modern times. The memory of the priests, the nuns, and the religious murdered by left-wing republicans, like that of the women and children blown to pieces by Nationalist bombs, deserves better than to be exploited for propaganda purposes. On either side they are the martyrs to a break-down of civilization. There is honor for the fallen in both camps and what now should be emphasized is the bravery, the loyalty, the self-sacrificing determination with which the Spanish people, of both factions, have endured the terrible ordeal inflicted on them.

Historians must decide—and their task will not be easy—whether the popular-front government seized power illegally in 1936, and was then overthrown by a righteous rising; or whether an alliance of reactionary groups in 1936 attacked and has now destroyed a promising Spanish democracy. The actual truth is probably somewhere between the two viewpoints. But determination of that controversial issue is at the moment a secondary matter. The vital task today is to get Spain on her feet again. Reconciliation injurious to that end are to be deplored.

It does appear, however, that again the so-called popular-front technique has brought disaster on those who accepted it. In Spain, as everywhere else, the attempted cooperation between communism and democracy has only served to stimulate fascism and to destroy that which it was sought to save. On considering the factors behind Franco's victory there remains no doubt that whole-souled antagonism to the atheistic and ruthless materialism of communism was one of the most potent.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Taft in the chair). Ninety-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, there is one grand objective upon which all Senators are united, namely, peace. There are apparently many differences as to where we should have peace, and the manner of obtaining peace, which divide us in the Senate, and probably divide the citizens of the United States. Some of us want peace throughout the world, and are sufficiently optimistic to believe that, though it is entirely impractical at the present time to found such a peace upon sanctions different from war, yet the objective is so important for the world that we should hug it to our bosoms, as it were, and continually strive for the establishment of a new sanction among all peoples, so that they might develop within themselves an international faith of a kind which is new in the world, and which will make it "sporting," to state it as we would in America, or will make it "cricket," as they state it in England, to conduct ourselves nationally in such a way as not to trespass upon the good feelings of other countries, and not to irritate them, and thus to avoid the causes of war.

On the other hand, there are those who want peace so dearly for America, peace for the citizens of this country, that they cannot go far enough to excite causes for peace outside of our limitations. But what I have to say can be narrowed down without too much simplification, I believe, to this premise, that whether we in the Senate stand for isolation, whether we stand for insulation, or whether we stand for independence, or, looking at it in the corollary way, that is, looking outward, whether we stand for non-intervention, whether we stand for intervention, or whether we stand for cooperation, no matter which of these positions we take in the Senate, the pending bill, House bill 3791, ought to pass.

I do not believe that the bill affords what has been described here as an adequate establishment for national defense. From my understanding of the evidence given in the committee, the bill falls short of providing an adequate defense. For example, after the whole program has been put into effect, that is, by 1941, and has accomplished the objectives provided for in this authority, how many bombers or fighting planes will the United States have altogether for its first line of defense? Do Senators know? If they do not, they are going to be astonished when I tell them that the number will be only 1,900 planes. By comparison with those we know other countries of the world already possess, that is an inadequate number of planes.

There is another aspect to this measure, however, which is quite as important now to consider in respect to the wisdom of its passage as the number of planes which will be actually in esse in 1941; that is, the capacity to produce planes in great numbers to meet any foreseeable need for them. Another aspect is the increase of the personnel of officers and standing army necessary to man such planes, necessary to afford the ground crews, necessary to equip the factories which must be keyed up to the point where production can be accomplished when and if the need should occur. These elements in the bill afford the strongest recommendations for its passage.

Briefly stated, the bill authorizes, in effect, $300,000,000 to be expended on the aerial branch of national defense. That is the largest element of authorization in this particular bill. There are two other items of importance, of course, namely, the Panama Canal authorization of $23,750,000 to be used for construction, rehabilitation, and installation in the Panama Canal Zone. Then, finally, $34,500,000 for educational orders.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. At some time before the Senator takes his seat I desire to ask him a question about one phase of this matter. Would the Senator prefer to have the question asked later, after he has presented his case?

Mr. AUSTIN. It makes no difference to me. I am glad to accommodate myself to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The bill passed the House after very thorough investigation and after consideration of the testimony of the experts who know about these questions, and the House fixed the number of planes at 5,500. What was the evidence and what was the showing; upon what does the Senator rely as a justification for adding the 500 planes after the House, upon the testimony of the same expert, had decided upon the number of 5,500?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will state what I understand to be the justification. Of the $300,000,000 herein authorized, only $170,000,000 is to be used, if appropriated, for the manufacture of planes. This is so near to a definite allocation of money to units that it in effect limits the ability of the Government to obtain a larger number of planes within the appropriation. The additional number of 500 planes under the plan or program in this authorization does not call for a single dollar of additional money. It merely takes the elephant's foot off the shoulder and allows the Government to obtain more planes for the same money if it can do so, either by competitive bidding or under such authorized negotiation as may hereafter take place. So there is no commitment, there is no obligation to secure 500 additional planes within this figure. There is the authorization to do so. There is no increase in the amount of money appropriated to that particular purpose. Does that answer the question?

Mr. BORAH. As a matter of fact, then, the House bill and the Senate committee amendment provide for the same number of planes; only in one instance there is an authorization for 500 and in the other there is an appropriation.

Mr. AUSTIN. The bill before us is the House bill, H. R. 3791, and it is nothing but an authorization. The measure before the Senate is not an appropriation. The authorization is raised by the committee amendment in order that the same money which is expected to be used under the President's program, the $300,000,000, may purchase more planes than probably could be purchased under the limitation contained in House bill 3791.

Mr. BORAH. The House bill provides an authorization for 5,500 planes.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is not exactly correct. It is thirty-two hundred and something. But when added to existing planes, as I understand, it will equal 5,500.

Mr. BORAH. And under the Senate committee amendment it will equal 6,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct, if they are obtainable within the same amount of money, but not if they are not so obtainable. As I understand, the proposal is just the same as if the lid were taken off entirely, and no limitation placed upon the number of planes at all. It was thought, as I understand the recommendation of the Secretary of War, that authorization for 500 additional planes would have the same effect in relieving the Government from the limitations and restrictions that bound them to a high price per plane, if they used the figure 500 additional, as would have resulted if the limit had been taken off.

Mr. BORAH. We need an expert to interpret these bills as well as an expert to supply the evidence upon which the bills are made up.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I confess I am not an expert.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator is doing very well.

Mr. AUSTIN. But I am for the bill. I believe that this program is well expressed by General Arnold, as appears at page 42 of the hearings. He says:

Mr. Chairman, I am for this program here, hook, line, and sinker, because I believe it is a program that is well planned, and one that balances the personnel with the airplanes, and one that answers the problem of the aerial defense of the United States, and I cannot see any need at this time for anything more.

That is found at page 42 of the last edition of the hearings.

Mr. President, at this point I desire to record what I understand to be the fact, that the number of planes that may be manufactured and put into use by 1941 would afford defensive protection to our country upon four different bases, namely one in the northeast, one in the southeast, one in the southwest, and one in the northwest; that they do not afford the means of aggression upon any other country; that the plan and program is not designed to cross the seas and reach any foreign land, save, of course, lends in this hemisphere where planes could alight at friendly bases and go from place to place overland. We had before us for consideration, in determining whether this was a suitable program of national defense, maps which showed the area of aerial influence from these bases, so that one could see all the points of approach by planes or ships that might attack the Canal Zone, or any other vulnerable point on this hemisphere, and how this distribution of this small number of 1,900 planes would enable our country, by means of combining them, to have a fairly good defense against attack in this hemisphere.

Let me say here that I think the discussion in the Senate has been extremely illuminating. It has been educational to me; and I have great respect for the views of my colleagues even though I may not agree in all respects with their views, and particularly with views about foreign policy.

I wish to say that I think there is nothing about this particular bill in and of itself which indicates that the United States of America has changed its foreign policy in the least degree. As to what that policy has been and what it is now there seems to be some dispute in the Senate. My own notion about it is that we have never at any time in the history of this country had an attitude of isolation. I firmly believe that our policy has been also something different than one of insulation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, has anyone ever contended, either before the World War or since the World War, for a policy of isolation, such as here indicated? We have contended for complete independence of action, free from previous commitments or agreements; we have contended for the doctrine of Washington and Jefferson.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I regret to say that the person who is referred to as the originator of the first information regarding the sale of planes to France, Ambassador Bullitt, made an address in France to Americans and French people, in which he is quoted as saying that the United States now is abandoning its policy of isolation. I take issue with that. I claim that we have never had a policy of isolation.

Mr. BORAH. There have been those in this country from the beginning who contended for a policy which would leave the United States free at all times and under all circumstances to determine what it would do in case of war or an emergency of that kind. But a policy of "isolation," in the sense that so many now use the term—that we would not trade with other nations, that we would not have treaties with other nations, that we would not carry on business with other nations—of course, that has never been contended for at any time. If Mr. Bullitt is undertaking to say that the United States is preparing to depart from the traditional policy of this Government and to adopt a policy which would tie this country into another country's policy or political affairs, I venture to say that Mr. Bullitt is mistaken.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am glad to have the corroboration of the very learned Senator from Idaho, whose opinions I greatly respect. And I do not add anything when I say that I think that even the Monroe Doctrine is not inflexible. It does not commit us to action. We are always free, even when a European country undertakes to penetrate an American country with foreign ideology. We are still free to take such action as the circumstances of the particular time seem to dictate for our national welfare and for the peace of the world.

Mr. President, we are inextricably mixed up with world politics. I think it is not the simplest thing in the world to keep our nose out of other peoples' business, as I have heard us advised to do so many times recently on the floor of the Senate. Our nose is already in other peoples' business.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. It is easy enough for us to maintain a policy under which we can insert our nose into other peoples' business or keep it out, just as we choose.

Mr. AUSTIN. We are in other peoples' business.

Mr. BORAH. It has been the policy of this country at all times to maintain the attitude I have described. Our country can determine for itself, without any previous commitments, without any previous understanding or agreement, without anything that embarrasses it at all what it will do in any emergency.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is quite true; but we are already bound by treaties and by conduct in many parts of the world. The open-door policy, which Japan agreed to respect, and the obligation of the United States to conduct the foreign relations of the Philippine Islands during the period yet remaining of their probation, keep us now in the oriental disturbance. Do what we may, we cannot get out of it; and just so long as there remains a period of years when we occupy a position of responsibility in the Philippines, I say that we ought to do all that is necessary to keep our country strong, not for war but for peace. Our voice in the world will not be worth any more than that of China if we pursue the course of China. Just so long as we are in the Orient to the extent that we are today, I am firmly in favor of such establishment at Guam as is necessary in order to enable us to maintain a naval base and an air force there.

If the time shall come when it is necessary or advisable for us to withdraw from the Orient, and if at that time we are advised that it is safe for our west coast for us to do so, then we shall be at liberty, under the theory that we are independent, though not isolated, to adopt such policy as is adapted to the circumstances.

Mr. President, the act of our House of Representatives in turning down the proposal to fortify Guam was not accepted by Japan as a friendly gesture. I read a paraphrase from editorial opinion which reacted forthwith to the conduct of the House of Representatives:

[Paraphrase]

The fact that the proposal to fortify Guam was defeated was prominently reported in the vernacular press yesterday. This morning's editions of Yomiuri, Nichi Nichi, and Asahi all carry editorials in which the following summary of opinions is expressed:

Opinion expressed in Asahi: "The elimination by the American House of Representatives of the fortification of Guam from the plan for expansion of defense in the Pacific, indicates a tempering of the fervor, which has exceeded normal bounds, favoring expansion in the Pacific area of naval bases." We are glad in the first place for the sake of the American people themselves, since fortifying of Guam would, in fact, weaken American defense by extending the line of * * * to an isolated island far closer to the imaginary enemy, Japan, than to the United States, and would eventually be excessively expensive. Contrary to expectation, the extensive defensive works of Imperial Russia in the Far East were one of the provocations of the Russo-Japanese war, and it is not impossible that fortification of Guam might prove to be of similar significance. Also from the standpoint of American-Japan relations, abandonment of this plan is to be welcomed. Elimination of the Guam fortifications cannot, since it is the result of consideration of various desiderata from a purely American standpoint, be viewed as a friendly gesture to Japan, but it does soften somewhat the feeling which the presentation of this vast plan for Pacific fortifications aroused.

The United States must first, we should say, decide whether the ambitions of Japan are so dangerous that America must check them. Based on the premise that a war between the totalitarian and democratic nations is to be expected, diplomatic and defense policies carry with them the danger that such policies may of themselves bring into reality a condition which at present is non-existent. The fortification of Guam is not at all fearful to Japan, but rather the reaction to such an act of the people in Japan and in the United States.

A similar tone is expressed in the editorials in the Yomiuri and Nichi Nichi. The alleged fact that such fortification would be provocative to Japan and of little strategic value is emphasized.

It is indicated by the amount of publicity given to it that the Japanese have carefully followed this question.

Mr. President, the point is that the act of the House of Representatives had no peace value at all in relationship with Japan. We are for peace. That is the major and all-comprehending objective of what we are about to do or not to do. The action of the House had no beneficial effect of that character. The Japanese newspapers said that our action was taken in view of various desiderata, from a purely American standpoint, and could not be viewed as a friendly gesture to Japan.

I know the spirit of the people of Japan. I have lived in the Orient. They are a lovable people. They are just as friendly to Americans as one would want. It is not the people of Japan who hold contrary views. It is the militaristic rulers of Japan who express such views. Japanese newspapers, unlike American newspapers, are not free to express the editorial views which they really hold. They are obliged to express the views of the militaristic Government of Japan.

The plan, which comprehended the inclusion of Guam for definite and specific reasons to which I have already alluded, is not a new plan excited by the invasion of China by Japan. The entire program has been in process for many years. It is not the product of war hysteria. As stated by the War Department, the reason it comes to us now, instead of 6 or 7 years ago, is that there seems to be a psychology in our country today that admits of the favorable consideration of the plan. It is idealistic. It is not antagonistic. It is not made to provoke Japan or any other country on earth.

It is a rounded-out scheme for the defense of the United States of America; and although it is frankly admitted to be only a step in the right direction, yet it now appears to be adequate to start something which will in time put our country in a position where the voice of America in the world will count for peace, count for peace in time of peace, count for peace in arbitrations. We have already participated in more than 70 arbitrations. The voice of America will not be strong if we allow ourselves to assume such a position economically, or such a position of weakness with respect to national defense, that we invite the discourtesy of all other nations of the world. We shall then not be in a position to promote peace on earth; and that is our objective. I think that if we must say what our present policy is in time of peace, we ought to say that it is to make clear to all the countries of the world that this country is for peace, and that the nation which disturbs the peace is sure to excite the animosity and the dislike of the United States, because one of the greatest objectives of our country is peace on earth, and we stand for the promotion of that objective. We make no promises. We make no threats; but we have a suitable military establishment for national defense, and our voice in the world on that subject will be given respect.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly if it is essential to the security and protection of the United States to fortify Guam, or establish a naval base there, we should do so regardless of whether or not some other nation thinks well of it; but I can bring to the Senator plenty of evidence, given by our ablest military experts, that it is not in the interest of the security of the United States.

I oppose making Guam a naval base because, in the first place, some of the ablest military experts say that it is not in the interest of security, but also there is no calculation as to how much it will ultimately cost. It is proposed to start out with $5,000,000, but the ultimate cost will run into billions of dollars, and when we come to use it and transfer the means of use 3,000 miles from Pearl Harbor or 8,000 miles from the Pacific coast, there will be involved an expenditure that would almost bankrupt the Nation if it should undertake such a work. It is not in the interest of the taxpayers of the United States or the security of the people of the United States.

It is not that I care anything about what Japan says. Although I would not unnecessarily offend Japan or any other nation in these times, yet I would not stop building what I thought was necessary for the security of this Nation because some other nation objected; but my opposition is based on the impracticability and unwisdom of the project itself.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is a matter about which experts probably do differ. I accept, however, the evidence of those experts who say that Guam is a necessary adjunct to Corregidor. We are already out there, and just so long as we are out there we need the island of Guam; we need it for a stopping place in crossing the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. BORAH. Then we certainly would need the Philippines; but we have freed them.

Mr. AUSTIN. We have not as yet done so.

Mr. BORAH. Then, as I understand, the Guam proposal involves taking back the Philippines, holding the Philippines, and establishing ourselves in the Far East. That certainly would be a change of our foreign policy.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I hardly think the Senator can conclude from the position I have taken here that I stand for what he suggests, for I have tried to make it clear that just so long as we are committed to conducting the foreign affairs of the Philippine Islands—and we are so committed for a number of years yet—I want our country to have a station at Guam, where our planes may alight, where our ships may find fuel and have an opportunity of getting us out of trouble, if necessary.

Of course, Guam will never become an important and impregnable fortress. Corregidor is a great fortress; I have been there and I admire it, but it is not impregnable, and we do not expect any such thing. What we do expect, however, is a safe haven in those waters just so long as we have a responsibility in the Philippine Islands. We also need to have a listening post out there, a sentinel, as it were. We must know, for the defense of our own coast line, what is going on out at sea there. We ought to have there means of communication, and we probably will have if we continue our present policy.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Of course, Guam is not in this bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand that, but it has been discussed here.

Mr. MINTON. And this bill, as I understand the Senator—and I so understood it myself, and he brought it out in the committee—is not to implement any foreign policy, but is rather to establish what the War Department conceives to be an absolute minimum for our own national defense.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wanted to say when I rose that I myself was not discussing this bill on the theory that it had anything to do with our foreign policy until the Guam question was brought into the discussion.

Mr. AUSTIN. The discussion of this bill has led off into the subject of our foreign relations. Some of my colleagues have indicated, at least one of them on the Military Affairs Committee has indicated, that his position on this bill is taken by virtue of the implications respecting our foreign policy. Others have said that they will not support this bill without knowing what our foreign policy is. I am undertaking to say that we know what it is. It is what it has always been throughout the life of the Republic. We have not had any definite, positive, undisturbed rule. We have had a policy of nonintervention in Europe, but we have had a policy of intervention in South America; that is to say, we said we would consider it a cause for intervention if European countries should undertake to penetrate the free governments of this hemisphere with European ideologies; so, although we should not bind ourselves to action, yet we were in there.

We have thus two diverse types of attitude, one for European countries and another for South American countries; and we have still another for the Orient. It has been labeled the "open-door policy," but it is intervention there, in fact. All the great treaty powers are there. Some of them are there with spheres of influence which they themselves govern short of the act of sovereign control of territory. Their influence is very great. The United States has never taken the position that it wanted to deprive China of territorial extent or of any of her sovereignty. The United States has even stood between other treaty powers and China to preserve the integrity both of the sovereignty and the territory of old China. That is one of the incidents of our policy in the Orient, which we call the "open-door policy," but it is absolutely contrary to our policy with respect to Europe.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President—

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Vermont asserts his belief that our foreign policy is fixed and certain and that he knows what it is. I should like to ask him whether or not the President's Chicago quarantine speech is part of our foreign policy as the Senator understands it to be fixed and certain?

Mr. AUSTIN. We at once get into a collateral discussion when we begin to consider the definition of a phrase. I would not use that phrase, but is it for me to undertake to say in what sense the President of the United States used that phrase?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I think it is for the President to say—

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well. Then ask the President.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And I am still waiting for him to say.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think I see what the trouble is and what provoked that type of question. I am not undertaking to speak for the President of the United States when I try to indicate what I understand to be the policy of the United States; I am speaking only for myself from my limited understanding of foreign relations. Although for many years I have been interested in such matters because of business connections that have taken me afar, and I have made some special study of the subject, yet I do not know sufficient to be an authority on this question. All I am undertaking to say is what I think about it. I say that we cannot have insulation; we cannot have isolation; we are out in the world as a responsible country, one of the greatest countries in the world, a leader in spirituality, a leader in economics. All the world looks to us as a great leader in government; they think we are a free country, and, if we could learn the truth about it, we would know that even the poor citizens living under dictatorships are yearning for the liberty that is here in America.

We gave our consent to the Palestine mandate. That put us into the Mediterranean Basin. War clouds overhang that entire basin, notwithstanding we hope that an end to the Spanish war is approaching. We gave our consent to the Palestine mandate, with an implication that we would have something to do in the future. We insisted, in the first place, that the League of Nations had no right to dispose of Palestine by a treaty entered into by nations that constituted the League. We said, "We are a conqueror as well as any other ally, and you must come to us and submit to us the treaty respecting Palestine." We brought this on ourselves. Is that isolation? We insisted that we be heard; we were heard; and we ratified a convention with Great Britain which looked well into the future, and we said to Great Britain, "We agree to this mandate on the condition that you shall not amend it so as to affect any of the interests of the United State of America there or elsewhere without submitting such amendment to us and obtaining our consent to it."

So we are in the Mediterranean Basin. Can it be said that we are sticking our nose into other people's business if we are concerned with the execution and the faithful carrying out of a treaty between Great Britain and ourselves which ratified a convention of the League of Nations which contained in it a guaranty that a national home for Jews should be established and maintained in Palestine? I say not.

Furthermore, our good-neighbor commitment to South American States through the general treaty of inter-American arbitration and our venerable Monroe Doctrine entangle us in the affairs of the Western Hemisphere. The Nine Power Pact of Washington is inconsistent with the attitude of isolation. The Kellogg-Briand Treaty, outlawing war as a means of settling disputes, in which the United States assumed a leadership, contradicts isolation. That is one of our jobs.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator is using the word "isolation" or the word "insulation" in the sense in which I used it, namely, no commitment to the use of force by American arms in respect to controversies that may arise elsewhere, the exhibit which he has just named supports my position rather than his, for the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, when it reported the Kellogg-Briand Pact, specifically and directly and scrupulously asserted that we declined any obligation whatsoever to sustain it by force of arms or by any other method. It was solely an assertion.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the Senator can get that consolation out of the Kellogg-Briand Treaty, I want him to have it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is no consolation in the Kellogg-Briand Treaty. Unfortunately, it has become a grim joke.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well. It was a solemn pronouncement by this country, and it represented an attitude of this country in the family of nations. By it we did not bind our hands behind our back. We only kept that independence, though not isolation, which we have asserted from the beginning of our government in our relation with other nations. It was a reiteration of our ancient policy. By it we were left, after consultation, in a position to act in one way in one case, in another way in another case, just as we might see fit when the occasion arose and we knew what the circumstances were. We did not thereby tie our hands behind our back; and I am opposed in principle to a statute which ties our hands behind our back, or a permanent treaty which does so. You will observe the word "permanent." I agree that from the time of Washington it has always been our policy to be perfectly competent and able and willing to cooperate with another nation in the world by temporary treaty whenever the safety and the welfare of the United States, the peace of the world, and the well-informed public sentiment of the citizens of this country, required it.

This boggy that George Washington excluded us from moral responsibility in the family of nations never existed except in fallacy. George Washington clearly acted in cooperation with other nations. George Washington, when he departed the chair of President of the United States, clearly announced to his successor in office that he believed this country ought to be able to cooperate with other countries, using temporary alliances, but not engaging in permanent alliances which would tie our hands behind our back like the statutes which are called neutrality laws.

It always seems to me a great pity that in the excess of emotion, or for some other cause, we forget our role as a great, responsible nation in the world, and by a statute say that we will not do this, and promise the world that we will not do that, not knowing how important it may be for us when the time comes to be free, as we were before the statute was passed, under the Constitution, with the Chief Executive having the duty, the responsibility, and the authority to conduct our foreign relations up to the point where a treaty is to be entered into or where a war is to be declared, and thereupon swinging into action the representatives of the citizens of this country in Congress assembled, who are expected to represent the sentiment of the people. I believe they honestly try to do so.

I think Charles Evans Hughes' definition of our attitude is as good as that which I have seen by anybody else. Perhaps I like it better than any other I have seen; and I should like to read it. Mr. Hughes then was Secretary of State, and, of course, was concentrating on that subject. This was said at an address to the American Bar Association after the World War:

Our people are still intent upon abstaining from participation in the political strife of Europe. They are not disposed to commit this Government in advance to the use of its power in unknown contingencies, preferring to reserve freedom of action in the confidence of our ability and readiness to respond to every future call of duty. They have no desire to put their power in pledge, but they do not shirk cooperation with other nations whenever there is a sound basis for it and a consciousness of community of interest and aim. Cooperation is not dictatorship and it is not partisanship. On our part it must be the cooperation of a free people drawing their strength from many racial stocks, and a cooperation that is made possible by a preponderant sentiment permitting—permitting governmental action under a system which denies all exercise of autocratic power. It will be the cooperation of a people of liberal ideals, deeply concerned with the maintenance of peace and interested in all measures which find support in the common sense of the country as being practicable and well designed to foster common interests.

Is not that sound? Is not that what you believe to be the attitude of the United States this day? But even that attitude cannot be maintained unless we have a suitable establishment for national defense; and who has pointed out what there is about this bill that is wrong? Who has pointed out any excess of authorization in this bill? I have not heard anyone. The attacks upon the bill have a peculiar character. Pardon me if I tell you that my impression is that they are more calculated to excite prejudice by reason of a collateral thing than by reason of any rational criticism of the bill itself.

For example, take this story of the French sale and the Treasury Department's activity in connection with it. I have not heard anybody relate events as they occurred; and for the benefit of the people of America, as well as for the benefit of Senators who are now giving me the honor of their attention, I think I shall refer briefly to some of the things that happened in that transaction, and then let the judgment fall where it ought to. You may trust the people of America as you may trust a jury of our countrymen to arrive at the right judgment. I do, anyway.

In the last edition of the testimony—I am sorry I have to refer to it in that way; there should not be two different editions, with some of the testimony expurgated from it, but that is our situation—in the last edition, on page 107, is shown the order of events.

Mr. Morgenthau was asked who brought this French purchase to his attention and he said it was Ambassador Bullitt. That is the first thing we know anything about. Then he said:

The Ambassador first brought it to my attention, and then, following my usual custom, before I will see any mission of any kind I call up the State Department and say, "Is this an authentic mission, and is it all right for me to see them?"

Later he said:

Mr. Welles, after a reasonable time, informed me that this was an authentic mission, and on that basis I received them.

Senator NYE. And on that basis, Mr. Secretary, you summoned the others to the meeting?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. No; as I say, the direction to proceed to put the Procurement Division at the disposal of this mission and to assist them—I thought I made it plain that that instruction to me came from the President of the United States.

There are four steps. There was the instruction to put the Procurement Division at the service of the French mission.

Senator NYE. But upon whose instructions or whose order did the War Department, in the person of General Arnold, appear?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. I think the Secretary of War did it. I am only testifying to any action that affects us.

The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of the Treasury had a conference with the President after a Cabinet meeting. There were subsequent conferences. During the course of these negotiations, which occurred in December, there was a disagreement about what was to be done respecting the sale of planes. I think that it is without doubt that the War Department at first objected to the sale being made on two grounds. One of them was that the sale would interfere with the rate of procurement of the American planes under the President's plan and the other objection was that it would deprive the United States of priority in respect of secret devices, new inventions, which ought to belong to the defense of the United States.

According to my understanding and interpretation of the facts, those matters were all straightened out, all these differences were composed, the Secretary of War was satisfied and convinced that it was proper and beneficial to make this sale of this very Douglas plane, or planes of that type, and the contract of sale was made with the full and complete approval of both the War and Navy Departments.

Now, is that true? Let us take a look at some of the testimony. Consider the subject of procurement; there was no trouble in the procurement of our planes under our plan, because of this French purchase. Therefore, the objection so made had no ground.

Let us turn to page 98 of the original record. I am better acquainted with the original than with the second, which I did not get until Monday. I read from that record as follows:

Senator NYE. How much increase is private industry going to have in its capacity to do that?

That is, that the last planes should be produced by the end of the second year.

General ARNOLD. No increase at all in facilities. An increase in personnel only. At the present time most of our factories are operating with one shift. In two instances, I think, they may have two shifts or a shift and a half. But we also have about five factories that are not engaged in producing any Government work at this time. One of the largest is practically shut down. That is Consolidated. In addition to that, the Northrup plant is practically shut down. Vaught, Sikorsky, Seversky have no Government work in them at all, to speak of. Martin is producing nothing right at this time for the Army. It is, however, producing quite a few airplanes for foreign countries. So, by using all those facilities, we should have no trouble at all in producing this number of airplanes.

But that was not enough. When we turn to page 101 we see this very interesting testimony right to the point:

Senator CLARK. But we might suffer some very severe penalties, too, by giving somebody else much better planes than we have.

Senator NYE. Is this building program contemplated by the United States military to slow up the delivery of orders that France and England have pending in this country?

General ARNOLD. The orders that France and England have pending in this country now were made with the understanding that they would not slow up our production. So if we go into this increased production we would just quite naturally slow up their deliveries.

Senator NYE. If we do go into it, it will have a tendency to slow up their production?

General ARNOLD. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. On page 179 of the final transcript it appears that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] asked this question:

Let me ask you this, then, General. Was it your idea, as the technical head of the Air Service, that the sale of a large number of planes to France, or to any other country, would interfere with the program contemplated by the United States Army?

General ARNOLD. It would not interfere if carried out in accordance with the numbers as represented that the French wished to procure. It was also brought out in the conference that the authorized orders would be so arranged so that it would not interfere with our production.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator. There are many other places where we find this fact attested; so that one may say with certainty that before ever these planes were allowed to be contracted for, before any permit for their exportation was allowed, the Army and the Navy, notwithstanding the objections previously made, were thoroughly satisfied that their objections were not well founded, and the program was accepted, as I will point out, in so many words.

First, however, let me call attention to the other point. The first related to procurement. We now know that the French contract would not interfere with the rate of our own procurement.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am very much interested in knowing the reality of the point the Senator is now discussing. As I understand the Senator, he is asserting that the original objection of the War Department was withdrawn.

Mr. AUSTIN. There is no one who says it was withdrawn. All we can take is what they say and what they do, and draw our own inferences. There is no other inference that can be drawn excepting that the War Department was thoroughly satisfied, before they got through, that there would not be any interference with our plans, and that the contract was beneficial. I will review the statement of the Secretary of War in so many words.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is it equally accurate to infer that after the Commander in Chief had spoken, the War Department thereupon thought it was the proper course to concede the Commander in Chief's viewpoint?

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, yes; that is not only an inference, that is part of the testimony. There is no doubt that the direction—or "directive," as it was described by the Secretary of War—had something to do with the meeting held, at which these differences were finally composed. As the Senator will see later, this directive occurred first. There was a directive, so-called by the Secretary of War and the other Secretaries, relating to the use of the Procurement Division for coordination, as I understand, and for the acquisition of this plane, without secret parts, or less secret parts. That word "less," contained in the original, was not transcribed in the copy at first, but it was afterward shown that in transmission, or in translation, the word "less" had been omitted.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Without intending any invidious indication, I am asking the Senator whether it is not a fact that after the Commander in Chief had spoken the War Department was no longer a free agent to assert its position?

Mr. AUSTIN. The Commander in Chief is the highest officer of the War Department. I do not see how one can assume that the opinion of the President of the United States expressed to the Secretary of War should be regarded as outside of the War Department.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am referring to the protest which obviously was originally made. Am I mistaken about that? The protest that was originally made by the War Department per se. There was a protest about the refusal to agree to the orders. Is that not correct?

Mr. AUSTIN. No.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What was it?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is not exactly so. There never has appeared a story of just how that disagreement was expressed. It came to us in the form of the testimony of General Craig with respect to the fact, as it was at that time, that the War Department thought that the contract ought not to be entered into because it might interfere with the rate of procurement of planes by the United States, and because it might deprive the United States of priority with respect to newly invented parts. I do not believe that one can find anywhere in the record the suggestion of an expression to the President of the disagreement of the Secretary of War, or the Assistant Secretary of War, or of General Craig, or of anyone else.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is it that we are to infer from the information that came to us that the President had overridden the War Department in connection with this episode? What does that mean?

Mr. AUSTIN. Where does the Senator get that expression?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I got that from all the reports that were in the newspapers, the only source from which I was permitted to get any information for a long time, not being on the committee which was locked up with the primary sources of information.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I may not have seen that source of information. I have not equal opportunity nor the advantage which the Senator from Michigan has on that point. For my part, I am getting my understanding from the record.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The very question we are now discussing has been bandied back and forth in the United States Senate and throughout the press of the country. I am not a member of the Military Affairs Committee, yet I for one would like to know whether or not there is anything in the record which will give to the Senate some concrete information upon that particular point?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am about to read something upon it now. I have already covered the point of procurement and shown that, whereas the thought was in the mind of the commanding general that the French sale might interfere with the rate of procurement by the United States, nevertheless it turned out that the French sale was made subject to our procurement, and could not interfere with it at all. So there is no collision there. No matter what they thought, no matter what their objections were, there was nothing to the thought that the rate of procurement of American planes would be interfered with.

I am now about to tell the Senate what the record shows with respect to priority.

Mr. LUCAS. What I am interested in mostly, if the Senator will again yield to me for a moment, is the exact language that was used by the officers of the Army when that question was put to them in the beginning before the Senator's committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. The objection?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes. What did they say on that point?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will now give it to the Senator.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; if the Senator can help me on that point, I shall be very glad.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I am afraid I cannot help the Senator so far as giving what the real reasons were, but I will read what General Arnold said at page 178 of the committee hearings. I read as follows:

Senator NYE. On what grounds did you protest, General?

General ARNOLD. On the ground it did not conform with the release policy.

And on page 179 General Arnold was asked what the objections were, and he answered:

The grounds of the objection, as far as I could recall now, were based upon the release policy, in that this did not conform to the release policy.

But with respect to wherein it failed to comply with the release policy, I do not believe the record will help us very much.

Mr. AUSTIN. I cannot find it. It is difficult, while on one's feet, to go through a large hearing and locate the precise subject. I thought I had it indexed.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not quarreling with the ultimate objective that was obtained, the Senator understands, but because of the question that has been bandied back and forth, I thought it might be of material interest to know exactly what was said upon that question.

Mr. AUSTIN. I regret that I am not able to turn to it; but I have the abiding conviction that the two objections stated were interference with rate of procurement by us and a possible loss of priority by us in up-to-date equipment, secret equipment.

I have disposed of that first ground and I desire now to turn to the priority point. I turn to page 33.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I inquire of the Senator if it is not a fact that regardless of what the objections were originally, they were ultimately in effect withdrawn.

Mr. AUSTIN. I believe the Senator will not find in the testimony where anyone said they were withdrawn. But I think from what happened and what was said before the committee that the objections did not exist in fact. So that when the Secretary of War ultimately said that he was for this purchase, one may conclude that he based his decision and his statement that they all agreed to it, upon a rational basis as well as upon conformity with the President's directive. I think the President's directive is a part of it.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. In view of the imputations that have been made, may I not inquire of the Senator if there is anything in the hearings which still appears, or that was later deleted, which would indicate that the President as Commander in Chief had by any improper methods coerced the War Department or any official of the Government, or had attempted to coerce by any improper methods any official of the Government into submission to what he seemed to think was a proper policy in authorizing the sale of these planes?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator withdraw that question, because I do not think one should regard it as coercion at all if the Chief Executive transmits to a department, particularly to a Cabinet officer, a chit or memorandum of his views respecting a policy. I cannot bear the idea of such an act being regarded as of itself coercion. Furthermore, I cannot tolerate the idea that a Cabinet officer would be so weak and so little a man that he would be cowed by a chit or a note from his President. And I do not believe that of any member of the President's Cabinet.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will permit me I should like to make one further observation upon the point raised by my able friend from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] and recently discussed at the moment by my able friend from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am not suggesting any improper coercion on the part of the President in respect to this situation at all. I am simply asserting as a matter of simple natural reaction, that after the Commander in Chief has asserted a conclusive position, those who are subordinated to him cease to be free agents in respect to the assertion of their own opinions.

If the Senator will bear with me for a moment longer, let me give him an illustration of what I have in mind. We had pending before the Foreign Relations Committee a treaty respecting certain concessions in respect to Panama and the Panama Canal.

We have reason to believe that until the State Department, with the authority of the President behind it, asserted that it was the policy of the Government that these concessions should be made, the Army and the Navy objected strenuously to these concessions, and felt that they weakened our authority over the essential control of the defenses of the Canal. But immediately after it had become an official purpose of the Commander in Chief that the treaty should be ratified, all objections were withdrawn.

I am not complaining that they were withdrawn. I am not complaining against the officers of the Army and the Navy. I think they are subordinate to the Commander in Chief. I am not asserting that the Commander in Chief exercises any improper coercion. It is his business to be Commander in Chief. All that I am saying is that when the Army and the Navy changed their opinion after the Commander in Chief had spoken, I do not think there is a great deal of authority to be ascribed to the opinion subsequently asserted by the Army and the Navy.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I think that when the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] becomes President, as he probably will if the Republicans ever elect another President, he will find that the clarifying speech he has just made will save him considerable trouble. I, for one, felt that his imputation prior to his last speech was that the President had acted improperly in having enforced his views as to the sale of airplanes to France.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, no.

Mr. NEELY. I probably misunderstood him in good faith. I am glad to have the matter clarified.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have approached the gate of priority several times. I now wish to open it. I shall undertake to show that the sale of the Douglas bomber was not a violation of the priority of the United States in any secret device whatever. On page 33 of the original hearings—

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. By the "original hearings" does the Senator mean the ones which were never released publicly?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am a little confused about this matter, but I believe these were released. These are the original hearings. I certainly understood that by vote of the committee they were released. I know that I heard the Secretary of the Treasury definitely state before the committee that every word he had said was free to the public, and that he did not want to delete a word.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should like a word of explanation. I have just returned from the Military Affairs Committee room, where I had asked for and received five copies of the original hearings when this matter was under discussion. I had those five copies, but because they were considered confidential I returned them to the Military Affairs Committee. I asked for them today and was told that the copies had been destroyed, and that they were not available to me, although I had had them once. I believe another Senator on the Military Affairs Committee still has copies in his possession, and has sent for them. I think it is important to know to which hearings the Senator is referring, because the contents of the original reports are far different from the contents of the reports which have been publicly distributed. One of the things which I think should be cleared up is that the same story has not been told all the way through, in the committee reports. One set has been destroyed, and we now have another for public consumption. It is time we knew the facts.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Does the Senator refer to the original testimony of Secretary Morgenthau?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. In the report we all have, beginning at page 206, I find this statement:

The testimony of Secretary Morgenthau given before the committee on January 27, 1939, is here set out in full, as follows:

The testimony then follows, covering six or eight pages.

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not think that answers the question. The question that I raised, if the Senator from Vermont will permit me another half minute, is that we had certain secret, confidential testimony by members of the Cabinet, by General Craig, and by General Arnold. That was one story and one picture. Even then, much of the important material was omitted from the record. The record was published and made available to members of the Military Affairs Committee; I for one—I cannot vouch for anybody else—returned my copies to the committee, because I did not want to be responsible for them. I am now told that copies of the original reports have been destroyed and are not available. I say that the original committee reports, which we have available today, are different from the documents distributed to the public and tell a different story.

Mr. AUSTIN. On that point I think the committee has changed its position from time to time; but whenever I have been in the committee the action has been that we would place before the public and make public the reports of the hearings as soon as the transcript was edited and corrected by the witnesses. I was absent one day, and I heard that I had violated the rule of the committee as of that day by telling the newspapermen what had occurred on another day. So I went to the committee room and looked at the original transcript of the record, and I found this resolution, which I copied. It is a true copy:

The CHAIRMAN. We have agreed that everything that has taken place today will be given to the papers and the record made public, as soon as it comes back from the people who testified, and the copies to be distributed will contain everything that took place except what we agreed on here today was confidential.

I believe that is the only day I missed hearing the resolution by the committee. All other days I certainly understood that the records would be made public when they were corrected and such things as were secret were deleted and the hearings put into print. I am using them on that theory. If anyone who hears me objects to their use, I should like to hear him object now or forever after keep still about it.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have great respect for the Senator from Vermont, and I am not taking issue with what he has said; but I should like to give my understanding of the situation.

We had these original documents, the original reports or records of the hearings. Even then much of the material, or at least some of it, was eliminated. They were printed and distributed to the individual members of the Military Affairs Committee. Each member was required to keep them confidential and secret. I returned my copies. I do not know whether or not others did so, but I did. Then we went over and rehashed certain of the testimony, which appeared in published form and which was generally distributed. The Senator says, in quoting, that all the material and all the testimony given was published. I know, because I was present at least at some of those hearings, that much of the material and much of the testimony that was given was not published in even the later hearings. It was secret, and it was held unwise to publish it. I do not think that the published hearings which we now have available tell the whole story by any means. They give only a partial picture.

Mr. CONNALLY and Mr. LUNDEEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator was in attendance at all times while the so-called first hearings and the second hearings were in progress, was he not?

Mr. BRIDGES. Not all the time, but part of the time.

Mr. CONNALLY. If there was any dark, traitorous, or corrupt action, the Senator knows all about it, does he not?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes; but I might not be able to say so on the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator can say anything he wishes on the floor. A vital thing which affects the integrity of the Government, the integrity of its officers, and our conduct of foreign relations, is among the most sacred cares of this body; and if the Senator from New Hampshire knows anything with relation to the subject that has not been told, it is his duty as a Senator to tell it, and to be as free with that information as he is with other things.

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not want to ask the Senator a question, but the Senator from Texas is not on the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. But the Senator from New Hampshire is. If I were on the committee I would discharge my responsibility, and would not go skulking around, making out that there is something crooked and wrong about the proceedings.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am not skulking around in back alleys. The Senator may skulk around, but I do not. Unless the Senator has obtained the information in an unethical way from some members of the committee, he knows very little as to what went on in the conference with the President.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know a thing about it. I am dependent on such Senators as the Senator from New Hampshire, who are on the committee. We trust them; and if there is anything wrong going on in the committee, which is against the interest of the Government, a little pledge of secrecy does not bind a man's conscience or his patriotism. If there is anything wrong it is the duty of Senators such as the Senator from New Hampshire, who are on the committee, to rise and divulge it.

Mr. BRIDGES. If the Senator went into a conference with the President of the United States with the understanding that it was a confidential conference and that he was bound to secrecy, would the Senator deliberately violate that confidence?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what the Senator from New Hampshire has been doing. He has been doing it in this way: The Senator from New Hampshire says he is bound, that he cannot say anything about what happened in the conference with the President. Yet in the newspapers, and now on the floor of the Senate, he says that what happened in the first conference, which was secret, and which he cannot divulge, is different from that which has been made public. If that is not, by indirection at least, breaking the pledge of secrecy and indirectly intimating that something took place other than what is published, I cannot understand the English language.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield further?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should like to say, Mr. President, that I, together with other members of the Military Affairs Committees of the Senate and the House, sat with Ambassadors Kennedy and Bullitt. I agreed with the others that that meeting would be confidential. I kept my part of the agreement. Apparently some other gentlemen were somewhat indiscreet in what they had to say. I sat in the conference with the President of the United States, and I kept my part of the agreement. I sat in the various hearings of the Military Affairs Committee, and I kept my part of the agreement. I will say to the Senator from Texas that some of the things that were told at those conferences were of an inflammatory nature, and, as a good American, I cannot stand on the floor of the United States Senate and tell them, because my first interest is for this country.

I believe the Senator will agree with me, and I tell the Senator that the reports which have been published and distributed do not contain all the information that the Military Affairs Committee has heard, by any manner of means.

Mr. JOHNSON of California and Mr. LUNDEEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. AUSTIN. I first yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. As an interested bystander, I merely wish to know what became of the reports or the printed matter returned by the Senator, as he suggests, to the committee?

Mr. BRIDGES. In answer to the Senator from California, let me say that I went to the Military Affairs Committee, there was there a major of the United States Army, who is an attaché of the committee, and I said, "Major, I return to you the five reports that were given me, which I had for the purpose of reading."

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. AUSTIN. I inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire if he has finished?

Mr. BRIDGES. I have not finished.

Mr. AUSTIN. I cannot yield to two Senators at the same time.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wish to suggest that I think I still have the five copies, if that be the correct number, of the original printing which were given to me, and I will bring them here in the morning and present them to the Senator from New Hampshire if he wants them, and he can find out what is in them for himself.

Mr. BRIDGES. If the Senator from Vermont will permit me further, let me say, in answer to the Senator from California that I was told by the major when I asked again about 10 minutes ago to have the five copies of the reports, that they had been destroyed and were not available. Under whose authority they were destroyed, I do not know. Whether the chairman of the committee knows, or whether the major or someone else destroyed them of their own accord I do not know, but I was told not over 10 minutes ago that somebody destroyed the copies which I returned, and they were not available.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Neither do I know, and neither does the Senate know.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

SECRET MILITARY CONFERENCES

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I cannot permit the challenge that came a moment ago to pass without saying that, so far as I understand the situation, the published testimony of the Military Affairs Committee is not exactly the testimony we first heard in that committee. There was much revision and much off-the-record conversation. That is my understanding. There has been secrecy; there has been a smoke screen thrown about this matter, and people are confused about it. The original testimony of the Military Affairs Committee is not before us now. I am sure of that fact.

CHALLENGE MAY BE ACCEPTED

If Senators on the floor continue to challenge us to speak openly and freely, we may find that it is our patriotic duty to speak out. I think each Senator fully understands and can determine for himself what is his patriotic duty. We may meet that challenge some day and give full publicity to these secret conferences, not only that in the Military Affairs Committee but that in the White House itself. I happen to know that several Senators made notes of the conference in the White House, and these notes are now in existence. If Senators want to hear it, let a resolution be passed to that effect; and if the American people ever learn what was said then, the Nation would be shocked and stunned.

Foreign affairs must not be conducted in deep and dark secrecy. Whenever we do that, we are at once entangled in the intrigues and quarrels of other continents.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

I am greatly interested in the action of Senators in reading from Washington's Farewell Address. I quoted from that great and immortal document 22 years ago, on April 6, 1917, in voicing my opposition to our entry into the World War. I voted against our entry into that war. We are now fully aware of the colossal blunder we made in that fatal hour. Then Members openly sneered at the words of Washington. They said, "Don't you know Washington died a long time ago? He's passé now. We're living in today, and not yesterday." Yet now, after more than 20 years have passed, we find that we did not put an end to all war. We did not "make the world safe for democracy." We did not outlaw war. We now find 12,000,000 unemployed, our foreign war debts repudiated and unpaid, and our business structure on shaky and uncertain foundations. Then we begin to read Washington, the great Washington I pointed to in 1917, in my youth, and whose foreign policy I have steadily adhered to all these years, and will ever follow—the Washington foreign policy, the North Star of our foreign affairs.

WE ARE AGAIN TURNING THE PAGES OF WASHINGTON

Yes; I am glad to know that Senators are again turning to the fathers and founders of this mighty Nation, I hope not too late. We are again turning the pages of the greatest state paper ever written by mortal man. If we will read and heed, we shall be done with foreign propaganda, foreign intrigue, and the quarrels of other continents. From Washington and Jefferson, Monroe and Jackson, down to Lincoln and the first administration of Woodrow Wilson runs a golden thread of a continuous foreign policy based on that famous Farewell Address. If we will give heed to the words of Washington, we shall once again move on to glory and greatness upon tried and true principles, tested by America's greatest statesmen of all time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to say to the Senate that I certainly ordered no papers to be destroyed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, what has occurred here by way of colloquy on the Senate floor illustrates the danger of undertaking to conduct public affairs in secret. At an early time in the hearings I tried to get the doors opened, but was unsuccessful. I did, however, secure somewhat of an equivalent by an agreement that, although the committee would hold what are called "executive sessions", the members were at liberty to express to the public and to the newsmen all that took place in the committee meeting. I understand that the committee were not consistent in that regard, although I did not then know it, for it seems that on the only day when I was absent from the hearings there was a somewhat different rule adopted, and I was found to be in violation of it the next day. That caused me to obtain what I have read here from the record with respect to publicity. I regret that this secrecy has occurred; I regret that we seem to be now in doubt about the evidence and about the things with which we are dealing; but I say to you, Mr. President, I am using that early part of the record under the belief that it is not secret; that by the action of the committee it was made public, and that I have a right to use it here and now. What I say is that there are a sufficient number of members of the committee here present to challenge me if I am not conducting the debate upon an ethical and correct basis. I hear no voice by way of challenge.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. In reading the hearings I notice in several places the notation, "Discussion off the record." Here is one page where there are three such notations, "Discussion off the record." It makes us wonder just what was discussed "off the record."

Mr. AUSTIN. There were matters which would probably have embarrassed the United States in its relations to other countries; there were matters that ought probably to be not printed or made public; and we understood that it was our duty as well as our right to have them off the record. So it will be found throughout the hearings that secret matter was not ever put in the record. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I merely wish to ask the Senator a question. Assuming that some of the officials of the War Department had testified as to the number and character of our different kinds of planes and what they would accomplish, I wonder if the Senate would want that to remain in the record for the benefit of foreign nations? Such were some of the statements that were marked "off the record."

Mr. AUSTIN. I presume that was part of the material that was "off the record," but there were other things, too.

Mr. President, I was just concluding the proof of the claim that procurement, which was one of the objections, turned out not to be an objection at all. I nearly overlooked something which seems to me to be probative of this point, and something that is free from any of the claim of secrecy at all, because it occurred in a public speech delivered by General Arnold, Chief of the Air Corps, on February 20, 1939, at the National Aviation Forum in Washington, when, in regard to procurement, he said this to all the world:

This new program will be carried out to the last detail on time if authorization and appropriations are provided. We are ready to start; our plans are perfected; our machinery is oiled; it but remains for Congress to throw the switch. I advise our Nation to arm for air defense immediately. France and England must now realize that they began too late. Let us not make that mistake.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

LXXXIV—131

Mr. AUSTIN. I do.

Mr. BARBOUR. With the Senator's permission, without entering at all into the discussion of our foreign policy or of the secrecy which has been referred to, I think it will be pertinent at this time in relation solely to the potential production of aircraft in the United States, to request the clerk to read, with the Senator's permission, two letters which I send to the desk and which I requested of the authors; one from the Curtiss-Wright Corporation and the other from the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America. I present these communications in order to show that there are very ample procurement possibilities in this country so far as ability to furnish great quantities of planes is concerned. Would the Senator object to having these letters read?

Mr. AUSTIN. I should be very glad to have them read; I think their reading would be very beneficial.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

AERONAUTICAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., March 1, 1939.

The Honorable W. WARREN BARBOUR,

The United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SENATOR: Replying to your inquiry as to the ability of the American aircraft industry to handle the proposed increase of aircraft strength, the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America, Inc., representing practically every manufacturer of aircraft, engines, accessories, and allied industry in the United States desires at this time to advise you that American manufacturers would easily be able to take care of the proposed requirements.

It is a fact that at the present writing many of the largest and best equipped aircraft manufacturing concerns in the United States are practically devoid of work. The proposed program now under consideration calls for the construction of approximately 1,650 additional airplanes per annum during the next 2 years. The actual estimated capacity of the American aeronautical industry is somewhere between six and ten thousand airplanes of all types, large and small, per annum. Only about 3,700 in all were produced during the year 1938. Thus it will readily be seen that the increase of 1,650 airplanes per annum is only a very small portion of the actual capacity of the industry. Furthermore, the opportunity for current and anticipated domestic and export business would in nowise be hampered by the production above referred to. On the contrary the proposed program would have the effect of stimulating the industry and enabling it more nearly to carry on a development program in competition with other world powers. Any reduction of the program would only have the effect of withholding such stimulus, which at the present time is sorely needed.

For your further information we attach hereto copies of press clippings which appeared in at least two New York papers under date of January 13, 1939.

Respectfully yours,

AERONAUTICAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF AMERICA, INC.,
By EDGAR N. GOTT, Assistant to the President.

CURTIS-WRIGHT CORPORATION,
New York, March 1, 1939.

HON. W. WARREN BARBOUR,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It gives me pleasure to put forth here certain pertinent facts in response to your recent inquiry relative to the effect of the Air Corps expansion bill on our productive output.

Although we are already large contractors to the Air Corps and Aviation Branch of the Navy and enjoy a moderate export business, we feel that without increasing our plant facilities we can increase our aircraft output by nearly 200 percent. Although our plant at Buffalo is now operating with a steady flow of business, we have two other plants, one at St. Louis and one at Baltimore which are practically idle. We are now producing three airplanes a working day at Buffalo, while at St. Louis we have only one experimental commercial transport airplane under construction. The factory at Baltimore is idle. The productive capacity of the St. Louis plant with a normal flow of business should be two airplanes a working day, and the Baltimore plant is capable of producing three airplanes a working day. In other words, we have the plant facilities to produce nearly three times as many airplanes as we are now putting out.

In consideration of any broad policy with respect to the national defense of this country and its ability to produce large quantities of aircraft in the event of a major emergency, we feel that these idle plants should be put in operation in order to provide a nucleus of trained personnel particularly skilled in the peculiar requirements of aircraft manufacture. It must appear obvious from the above-stated figures as to capacities that we can easily handle any orders which we might be fortunate enough to receive in the event of the passage of the expansion bill, as well as a continuing commercial and export business. As a matter of fact, it might be stated that our orders on hand at Buffalo are not sufficient to keep that plant going with full continuity beyond another 6 months.

I trust these remarks sufficiently answer your questions, and I shall be pleased to give you any further information which you may desire.

Very truly yours,

G. W. VAUGHAN, President.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do.

Mr. BARBOUR. If the Senator will indulge me further, I simply want to point out again that in having these communications read I am addressing myself at this time only to the one subject of domestic production which I think is very informing at this juncture of the debate. It is evidence which I hope will be helpful to the Senator from Vermont, the Senator from Michigan, and all other Senators in this particular connection; that is, the tremendous potentiality of aircraft production in this country.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator from New Jersey. It is helpful.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. There has been some talk going on in this body to the effect that the five secret reports to which I have just referred were destroyed. I have just procured from another member of the committee the loan of his copies. I have just examined part of one in a very casual way, but it is sufficient to indicate that they are different documents, containing different statements, than the public report which has been distributed in this body.

Now I want to go back to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], who said it was my duty as a United States Senator to divulge certain things. I call his attention to the fact that he had heard the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEN] stand up in this Chamber and say that this country would be stunned and shocked if it heard part of the conference that went on between the President of the United States and a member of the Senate Military Affairs Committee. I want to say that my first consideration—and I believe the Senator's first consideration—is what is best for the United States of America; and I tell him that it is best for America and it is best for the world that all the details of that conference at the White House never become known. I use as evidence the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota when he said the country would be stunned and shocked if it knew what was said.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I wish now to go on with the demonstration that the second objection considered against the sale of planes to France was found to be without foundation, and was no real objection, in order that we may dispose of the contention that there is something wrong about the sale of planes to France, that something furtive is really implied in the secrecy of the transaction; for, in truth, the evidence shows that there was nothing of the kind.

The second objection, as stated, was that the sale might deprive the United States of some of the newly discovered secret devices for use in national defense. Now it turns out that that was not so; that the sale would not deprive the United States of that priority; and I am pointing out the places in the testimony where that appears. You will observe that it appears in the testimony of the very man who raised the point, General Craig.

On page 33 of the original record, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] says:

I had another matter I wanted to ask you about, and that was whether our private manufacturers have been manufacturing for foreign nations in the past year or two planes and bombers comparable in any way to those you contemplate would be built if this appropriation was made?

That is the question of priority, is it not, stated in a general form?—

General CRAIG. Airplane manufacturers cannot export military airplanes without the authority of the State Department which does not grant such permission unless approved by the War Department. The War Department does not approve such action except in the case of planes which have been superseded by later and more effective models.

Senator SCHWARTZ. Well, the purpose of my question is not to raise objection to the practice or business of the kind, but I was wondering whether we might have available the cost charged by these private manufacturers for planes that go abroad, and that might give us some idea of whether or not we are going to have the costs we pay jumped up too high when we begin to manufacture our own planes?

General CRAIG. I do not believe that such a comparison would be of value since manufacturers cannot sell airplanes abroad until those of the same model which they have furnished the Army have no further military value to us.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] will observe that this is General Craig making that answer.

The same thought appears on page 35. General Craig, in answer to a long question by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], says:

As I have previously stated, such exportations cannot be made without the sanction of the State Department which, in practice, does not issue such authority without the approval of the War Department. Consequently, priority of manufacture can be controlled by the Army and Navy.

Mr. President, I have said that not only do we have these facts from which we should draw our own rational and sensible conclusion but we also have the express statement of the Secretary of War on this point. I call attention to page 113 of the last book, as follows:

Senator NYE. I am going to be very direct about this, because I think that is the only fair way to do it. I am somehow caused to believe that the War Department had been requested to afford the cooperation that was finally made available, but had declined—

There you have the issue—

or had discouraged the plan at all, and I want to satisfy myself whether that is true.

Observe that language carefully. It is in the past tense; and without a doubt the Senator from North Dakota was justified in asking that question, because the committee had heard enough to lead it to believe just what is assumed in the question that the War Department "had declined or had discouraged the plan at all."

I want to satisfy myself whether that is true—

He says. Secretary Morgenthau replied:

Well, Mr. Woodring is head of the War Department.

Secretary Woodring answered promptly:

At the conference that has just been mentioned we were all in accord that it would not only help the development and lower the cost of the plane to the American Government if it were decided to give a French order for the plane.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] then inquired:

Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Secretary one question? I think it will clear this matter up somewhat. This plane, as I understand it, was a plane which was to be entered in the spring competition, to be tried out on the line by the Douglas Co. Is that correct?

Secretary WOODRING. Yes.

So it will be seen that identified the subject matter.

On the next page we find a similar reference to the same thing—that is, that priority was decided not to be interfered with by this proposed sale of the planes to the French. I read from page 114:

Senator CLARK. That is what I say. If they had sold it to the French Government as a necessary matter of production.

Secretary WOODRING. Although we would rather that they would have sold it to the French Government than enter it in the competition. We would want them to do that, because in the manufacturing of the French order it would lower—if we gave them an order it would lower the unit cost to the United States Government.

I wish now to call attention to the fact that, independently of these witnesses, we have another reason for knowing that the transaction with the French Government did not violate anything secret, and was not a sale of things which it would be an advantage to the United States to retain; but, on the contrary, that the transaction was in every respect a transaction beneficial to our national defense. So I call attention to page 73 of the original transcript, the original record:

General ARNOLD. I wanted to make that a little bit clearer.

Senator CLARK. Let us declare an open session right now.

General ARNOLD. I want to make that a little bit clearer. New airplanes are not one man's idea. We read in the papers that Amiot, for instance, has a bomber that goes 295 miles an hour.

We look at a picture of that Amiot and we say, "Well, if he can do that, we can do it. We are not doing it now." Therefore we start out with specifications: Minimum speed, 270 miles an hour; desired speed, 325 miles an hour; load carriage, 1,200 pounds; range, 1,200 miles. That is what we give to the designer. There is no military secret in that. He builds an airplane in accordance with that, and until he puts in some of the gadgets, like bomb sights or something like that, there may not be a single military secret in the airplane that he builds.

Senator CLARK. But this man in this wreck out there was evidently, from the newspaper accounts at least—and I have got another one here in which the Douglas people deny that they knew who this man was. They said he was a man named Smithson, a mechanic, and apparently did considerable lying about who the man was. Apparently he was in the demonstration in the full panoply of an official.

General ARNOLD. I doubt very much if there was a bomb sight in that plane, or whether there were any of the other articles that we class as restrictive military secrets.

Senator CLARK. I never have been able to determine what you class as restrictive military secrets.

General ARNOLD. Such as bomb sights. We do not allow any foreigner to see our bomb sights.

Senator MINTON. What would keep the Douglas Co. from letting a Frenchman, Italian, or anybody else in the plane, as far as the Government is concerned?

Senator CLARK. That is exactly what I am trying to find out; whether there is any restriction.

Senator MINTON. The Government cannot restrict these companies.

General ARNOLD. Only as to good will. The Douglas Co. would ordinarily wire, "Are we authorized to do so-and-so?" And we would say "yes" or "no," but we could not stop them.

In this case a letter was transmitted to an officer at the plant to show the French mission this bomber, less secret devices or secret developments.

I now refer to page 127. Captain Kraus was the officer who went out with the mission to California, and on the point as to whether there was any secret device in this plane that was flown with the French member aboard, he testified as follows:

Senator SCHWARTZ. Will you tell us why the bomb-sighting device, the secret sighting device, was not on the plane at that time?

Captain KRAUS. Major Wolf advised me that it had been removed. It was a secret article.

Senator SCHWARTZ. Prior to the time the trip was made, there was a secret sighting device on the plane and that was removed before the trip was made?

Captain KRAUS. When I said it was removed, I will put it this way. I was informed that the bomb sight was not installed. Whether it had ever been installed or whether merely provision for its installation had been made from drawings or dummy I do not know. As I have explained to the committee before, it was not a naval airplane. I have never entered the airplane, have never seen its interior, and there was no occasion for my doing so. The order that was issued to Major Wolf, the memorandum signed by Captain Collins under date of the 19th of January, indicates clearly that the mission would be entirely in the hands so far as inspection of the airplane or the visit to the Douglas plant, the physical limits of the plant, would be entirely in Major Wolf's hands, which was a perfectly satisfactory method so far as I was concerned.

It was following that testimony, on page 129, that Secretary Woodring testified:

At the conference that has just been mentioned, we were all in accord that it would not only help the development and lower the cost of the plane to the American Government if it were decided to give a French order for the plane.

There is no doubt whatever that this is the identical type of plane which was the subject of that conference. Of course, that particular plane never was sold, because it was destroyed.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. On page 193 of the committee hearing General Arnold introduced a telegram from Major Wolfe, of the Air Corps, as to what took place in the inspection. He refers first to the designs, secrets, whatever they were, of the Douglas Co., which it puts on any plane it is manufacturing. This is what he says:

I certify that upon receipt of the decoded radio on January 20 I informed the Douglas Co. that they were authorized to demonstrate the seven B attack bomber to the French mission without restriction as to Douglas Co.'s design and manufacturing secrets. Inasmuch as this plane was not an Air Corps contract plane it contained no War Department secret or restrictive items of equipment. The airplane was demonstrated on this condition.

Mr. AUSTIN. That was signed by K. B. Wolfe, of the Air Corps, who was the officer to whom I referred previously. It is all connected up.

There is no room for doubt about these facts, as I see them, and, though I started off in the investigation of this matter with great skepticism, intellectual honesty alone requires one to come to the conclusion that there was nothing at all about that transaction with the French that was all wrong, excepting the great mystery thrown over it. I have often wondered the reason for veiling the transaction in mystery and exciting our people by so doing. I believe that probably it was that element which related to the Johnson Act, forbidding the granting of any credit to a foreign country which is a debtor of this country and which is in default.

It will be recalled that the Secretary of the Treasury stated that he was called in to pass on the question of the financing of this purchase, to say whether the financing would violate the Johnson Act, and that when he determined that, and the questions which were collateral thereto, he went out of the picture as a member of the Cabinet. There was no more interest in it for him at all.

Since our hearings, in an article by Arthur Krock, a well-known and respected newspaper writer, I have seen another and additional explanation. I read only a part of the column appearing in the New York Times of February 21:

Secretary Morgenthau actually leaned backward in the direction of strict official restrictions and perhaps was more rigidly neutral and exacting because of German and Italian state racial policy. Before he left on his January holiday—which was prior to the White House meeting on January 16—he declined to give the Treasury's assent to a French plan to set up a purchasing corporation over here, being determined to eliminate middlemen, and informed Jean Monnet, who was the French mission's financial agent, that unless immediate publicity was given to the presence and purpose of the mission the Treasury would lend no facility of any kind.

The reason why the British were able to buy their planes without any advance publicity is because of the superior technique they employed, which was partly made possible by their unquestioned ability to pay. They signed their purchasing contract in London and arranged for the fiscal transaction through the Bank of England and the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. After this had been done they announced the dispatch of their agents, since any need for secrecy had disappeared.

MORGENTHAU KILLS CORPORATION

If the French ability to pay had been as clear to American aircraft manufacturers, and if the contracts had been signed in Paris, the French purchases would have proceeded as smoothly as the British. If the French had not insisted on secrecy after their mission was in this country, and the President had not assented to their wish, the presence of the French air attaché in the Douglas bomber would not have surprised the country and caused the uproar in Congress.

M. Monnet wanted to set up an American corporation with his own capital to cover the cost of negotiating contracts and to permit incidental matters to be cleared through it. This, he said, was to cut red tape and do away with the necessity of referring every little thing to Paris. The corporation was to be given the plane-purchasing credit of sixty-five millions. But Mr. Morgenthau wanted one straight avenue running from the Bank of France through the Federal Reserve Bank of New York to the American manufacturers. Also, he saw in the proposed corporation a barrier to full publicity. He prevailed.

If that be true, and I assume it is true, it accounts for the extraordinary secrecy with which the origin of the French plane transaction occurred.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I wonder if the Senator will permit me to read just a short excerpt, two or three questions, with reference to the subject he now discusses and the Johnson Act.

I read from page 204 of the committee hearings:

Senator NYE. Was this mission evidencing any desire for a credit consideration in fields other than the one they were most interested in; that is the purchase of airplanes?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. When I asked them how they were going to pay for that, they informed me that the money had been provided in the French budget for that purchase, and that they would pay for the planes with the money out of the regular budget. I understood it was public information that the money had been provided for and voted in the budget. Having satisfied myself that the Johnson Act was not being infringed upon in letter or spirit, I felt satisfied. I wanted to make sure the money was available. They assured me it was in the budget.

The CHAIRMAN. They did not request a line of credit for anything else?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. No.

Senator REYNOLDS. Your interest was to get the cash for the United States, and you were not interested in extending them any credit?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Absolutely, Senator. I am familiar with the Johnson Act and am entirely in sympathy with it, both as to the spirit and letter, and I would resist to the last ounce of strength I had, anybody who was trying to break the spirit or letter of the Johnson Act.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator for that information.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I should like to ask the Senator if he would very briefly state how the payment for the planes was financed.

Mr. AUSTIN. According to Mr. Krock's article, directly from the Bank of France, through the Federal Reserve Bank of New York to the American manufacturer, paid for by the French Government, which was the contracting purchaser. I understand that to be the arrangement. Whether planes have been delivered and paid for under that contract I do not know. I presume not.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. And the Senator's understanding is that there was no intermediary at all?

Mr. AUSTIN. No intermediary.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wish to make a statement at this point. The chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], just called me to the Military Affairs Committee room and informed me that there must have been some mistake on the part of the major attached to that committee if he told me that the original confidential reports were destroyed, and he as chairman of the committee has just presented me with a duplicate set of the reports. I want to make that statement, because I originally stated that the major had said that they were destroyed. I have not seen the major again. I do not know what his position in the matter is, but the chairman of the committee has informed me that the major must have made a mistake; that the reports were not destroyed, and has presented me with copies of the reports. I make that statement for the RECORD.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask leave to put into the RECORD something which I would like to read if my voice were not getting a little bit weary, but which I briefly state shows the publicity given in the month of February with respect to contracts for the sale of military planes to Great Britain, to France, and to the Netherlands Indies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, February 11.—The State Department has announced the issuance of licenses in January for the sale of $4,471,471.50 of airplanes to Great Britain. Four million dollars of this was specifically for fighting planes.

The number of planes was not mentioned, but, on the basis of price, probably was not more than 100. The planes represent only a portion of British contracts for airplane manufacture in this country, which now call for 650 planes. The Department also announced the shipment of planes and other war materials valued at $1,443,199.13 to Great Britain in January.

During the same month, France took out licenses for $569,366.34 of war materials, mostly airplanes, and had shipped to her $1,289,746 in airplanes.

The Netherlands Indies were another large purchaser of American fighting equipment, receiving shipments in January totaling $704,168.10. The Netherlands Indies are arming in the face of trouble in the Far East.

January, the State Department announcement showed, was a good sales month of war supplies, the licenses issued totaling $6,271,030.86, and the amount of equipment actually shipped totaling $4,630,587.66.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to make one more point about the French contract which has seemed to stir up and muddy the waters upon which this particular defense bill has been borne, and that is that the plane sale to the French was beneficial to the national defense of the United States of America. Probably the best informed person as to the number of planes manufactured and sold by factories in the United States is G. Grant Mason, Jr., member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, who came to the Senate Military Affairs Committee at my request and gave us very helpful service. Among other things he was asked a question relating to $68,000,000 worth of planes that had been exported during a certain definite period of time, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] inquired:

What part of that was military planes and what part was commercial planes? Can you tell us that?

This appears at page 163 of the original record:

Mr. MASON. I do not have a break-down of that figure.

Senator BRIDGES. If you have not, can you give us just a general idea?

Mr. MASON. An indication; yes. In the 12 months ending November 30, 1938, according to the National Munitions Control Board, they issued export licenses for roughly $57,000,000 worth of military planes and armament therefor, and licenses for the export of approximately $30,000,000 worth of aircraft parts, engines, and other than military planes. Of that $30,000,000, it is very probably safe to say that a goodly portion of the parts were used in military aircraft. Assuming that the same ratio would apply to the calendar year 1938, it would appear that some $45,000,000 to $50,000,000 of last year's $68,000,000 aeronautical exports were for military use.

Senator AUSTIN. I want to follow that thought a little further, with reference to our national defense, and that is this: If we should fail to keep our airplane production current continually in the future, what would that failure mean so far as national defense is concerned?

Mr. MASON. It certainly would mean increased cost of research if we eliminate foreign markets. It would mean slowed down production, probably more inefficient aircraft, and certainly inability to produce as many in a hurry as we would if we had maintained the export markets.

I am omitting a part of this long answer, and reading again:

Senator AUSTIN. You have direct authority in your act, do you not, to contemplate national defense?

Mr. MASON. Very much so. In making rates, in granting certificates of convenience and necessity for air-line routes, we are to bear in mind—stated in four different places—the needs of national defense.

This witness also addressed the Joint Aviation Forum in Washington on February 20, and in the course of his address occurs the following, which he has given me permission to use, and which I want the Senate to bear in mind:

With an aviation experience of 11 years in Latin America and having returned not long ago from a survey of civil aviation in Europe on behalf of our Government, I can appreciate fully the vital need of maintaining and bettering our position throughout the world. This is especially true on the American continent where, by keen competition and startling methods, certain European countries recently have been making alarming progress in aeronautics. We must protect and expand our foreign markets for aircraft exports and we must improve and extend our own international air lines.

Several weeks ago the Authority completed a detailed study of all international air-line operations in Latin America. A serious situation was revealed. In various ways and to various degrees every single country in South America today is receiving international air-line service by German, Italian, French, or Dutch companies. German companies, for example, now are operating on the east and west coasts as well as across South America and fly on frequent and regular schedules over the South Atlantic to Europe. In fact, and unknown to most Americans the Germans now operate more route miles in scheduled air transport service in South America than do our own carriers. Italy intends inaugurating an air line in the near future from Rome to South America where it will connect with existing Italian services in the Argentine. We do not intend permitting the challenge to go unanswered.

He could have said more to the public about the relationship of the condition in South America to our plan for national defense. I can say what I believe to be true, that Germany today would have no difficulty in sending 1,700 bombers to South America. To be sure, they would have to fly light; they could not carry bombs. Imagine, if one cares to do so, the infiltration of South America by German planes, the establishment of German lines, and the establishment of depots spread over South America with parts for German airplanes to such an extent as to permit a German base to be established there. What would be the situation? The unplumbed depths of a wonderful ocean to defend the American shores? Oh, no. The situation would be that the cities of America would be exposed to flocks of planes filled with bombs, operating from bases to which they could return if they were successful in flying out of range of our national defense.

In illustrating the potentialities that we must confront when we undertake to create an aerial defense for the United States and for all this hemisphere, I choose no country of the world for illustration because it is an enemy of America. I am using Germany only as an illustration, not because I envision Germany as an enemy of this country, for I think she is not.

What is the effect of developing and maintaining our markets by sales to foreign countries, particularly to Latin-American countries? Consider Mexico. Today Mexico is so saturated with American planes that Germany, using that country only for illustration, cannot put through a barter agreement to trade German planes for Mexican oil because there is no market for German planes. It is all absorbed by American planes. It seems to me that is a perfectly clear, logical description. It is of benefit to the defense of this country that we should occupy those foreign markets with American planes. It is of benefit to the national defense of America that we should step up the capacity of America to produce planes upon any scale that the circumstances of the future require, and do it promptly.

So, Mr. President, I conclude what I have to say by apologizing for taking so much time. I felt bound to do it, having occupied the position I did in the committee. I conclude by saying that I am thoroughly satisfied. I may vote for certain amendments to the bill, but I am in favor of the general plan expressed in the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, and that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 17 and 18 to the bill.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress.

Mr. WILEY obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	King	Reed
Andrews	Davis	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Donahay	Lee	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I desire to express a few thoughts that relate themselves to House bill 3791 and to the subject of preparedness. I listened with a great deal of interest to the instructive and illuminating remarks the day before yesterday of the distinguished Senator from Texas, chairman of the Military Affairs Committee [Mr. SHEPPARD], and I listened also with a great deal of respect to the challenging talk of the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

And when the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] and the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] agreed in substance that the defense of the Monroe Doctrine did not involve any entangling alliances, I felt that the exchange of ideas was adding clarity to the situation in the thought of the people of this country.

From this debate I believe it appears so conclusively that there can be no question that there is practical unanimity in the Senate in the view that in our foreign affairs the advice of Washington still stands as a landmark and a guide and that the Monroe Doctrine is a vital landmark also in guiding our destiny.

Mr. President, I also listened with a great deal of interest to the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], whose remarks were very illuminating and interesting. He had no disagreement with what had been said by the distinguished Senators from Michigan and Idaho. He brought out with clarity Washington's principle as to the need of adequate defense, and that in the time of extraordinary emergencies temporary alliances are appropriate and according to our American concepts.

We all agree that in this period the need to be adequately prepared must be met, and, meeting it, we will provide an effectual means for preserving peace. As we look about the world, we see a situation that requires that we be on guard, on guard protecting our own. By that I mean our persons, our property, our institutions. With an adequate defense in times such as these, we will not provoke war. We will undoubtedly prevent war from breaking out, especially if our policy is certain and definite, and the stick is big enough so that irrational folks, who will not listen to reason, may see and realize the bigness of that stick. Mr. President, in calmness and reason, yesterday's and Monday's debate lifted a standard for the people. I must admit that today's debate in part probably was not so calm.

We are not Germans, or Frenchmen, or Irishmen, or Englishmen, or Italians, or Scandinavians, we are Americans. Of course, we are human beings, with the frailties of human folk. We have our sympathies, our blood ties; but also, thank God, we have something larger than those sympathies and blood ties—we have America! May I be privileged to read a little about this America of ours.

MY COUNTRY

My Country, there she stands—
Expectantly, confidently facing the future.
From many lands have come her brood,
And under her wings she has taken them.
Shepherdess of many flocks,
On guard she stands to protect her own.

Unafraid she surveys the world.
There is in her eye the look of one who has suffered much,
But grown strong.

Again and again she heard the cries of her children,
And war came and went.
And Freedom, threatened but triumphant, perched upon her shoulders.

Dark hours came, and through it all, a lifted brow—
Hopeful, triumphant—showed itself to the wondering world.
And now, strong, courageous, and beautiful,
She stands fronting the future.
Accepting the challenge the future holds,
And vowing nothing is impossible for her and her brood,
She confidently awaits the dawn.

And now she bids her brood conquer again,
Not with sword and fire,
But with the great spirit of peace.

And over all this great land
In the hearts of men—hope and courage and strength return.

Oh my Country—
Emblem of man's mastery,
Symbol of man's accomplishments,
Leader of men
To that great goal

Where man shall be free—
Free of hatred and of strife.
We of this generation pledge, like the Greeks of old,
"We will transmit unmarred to our children
The Freedom and Democracy we have received."

May I repeat a portion of the last sentence?
Senators, you and I pledge that—

We will transmit unmarred to our children
The Freedom and Democracy we have received.

Mr. President, I digress at this point to compliment the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] on the thought-provoking contribution he made to this debate.

We all agree that in the life of the individual as well as of nations it is a good rule to "mind one's own business." But we must be realistic and, as suggested by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], not forget that the world is our "market place." I would not have America go to war to collect the debts of her citizens, but I would give aid and comfort and assistance to America's children in every land, to the end that the pirates, individual and national, would understand the meaning and the worthwhileness of American citizenship.

I do not believe in turning the hands of the clock back and sacrificing the international law the centuries have builded. I do not believe in resurrecting the buccaneers and pirates, national or individual, of yesterday.

International law and order and good will and common sense are part of the world's heritage of which we are custodians. Let us not, as did Esau of old, sell our heritage for a mess of pottage. There is no need for us to play the traitor to the future.

The distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] made a constructive contribution to this debate. His résumé of the administration's position through the years in relation to the avoidance of foreign entanglements was clear and to the point. Being a new Member of the Senate, I was happy to get the information which he delivered so eloquently, and I am happy also that the people of the country may have the benefit of that information.

I must not fail to compliment the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] on his excellent address. He brought home to the Senate the great truth that we need have no immediate fear of war. He also raised the serious question, Do we need to spend as much as is contemplated?

I appreciate the able contribution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] made to the debate today, particularly with respect to our foreign relations.

Mr. President, on the subject of preparedness I desire to speak from another angle.

The distinguished and versatile Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] brought into the discussion the thought that we had enemies at home, and he mentioned the exponents of the ideologies of other lands—Germany, Italy, and Russia. I am not unaware of that situation; but there is another phase of this subject to which I must refer.

In the farming area, because of the break-down in our economic structure, we are letting millions of our best people be dispossessed of their farms. We are continuing a system that is breaking the morale of our best people, who have been the savers, who have been the builders, who have created the wealth of the Nation. It is well to build battleships and airplanes, and to be able to talk turkey, if necessary, to the buccaneers of the world; but it is more important that we rebuild the morale of our citizenship by getting off the detour on which we have been traveling and returning to the main highway.

We have been told in the debate that we have no entangling alliances with foreign nations. This was definite and certain. It is equally important that we cease having internal alliances with crackpot notions that have sapped the confidence and energy of our people.

In my own State, yes—in fact, in all the agricultural districts of America—a creeping paralysis has affected the greatest of all industries—the farming industry.

Wisconsin, the greatest dairy State in the Nation, with her lakes, her rivers, and her hills, with her forests, her cultivated stretches, her myriad flocks of purebred cattle, and her

3,000,000 souls, is looking to this Congress, that voted without blinking an eye $725,000,000 to help the unemployed, but now waits and hesitates to develop a plan to aid the farmers of America who are caught between the nether and the upper false economic millstones. The situation is the same in the Cotton, Wheat, and Corn Belts.

Mr. President, we can go on creating jobs in the Government; we continue to vote millions for warships and airplanes; but all of these will be worthless and useless unless we lift a standard for these people—the farmers of America. It is our business not only to protect America from attack but to save America from deterioration within.

The dairy interests and the farm interests of this Nation never indulge in a sit-down strike. Thank God the Supreme Court a couple of days ago clearly settled that issue.

If we permit the farms to be taken away from the farmers, if we permit this segment of our society to be broken, if we permit the backbone of America, the producers, to be broken, we will have no America.

What makes this Nation great is her people, their love of liberty and democracy, their love of freedom of speech and the press, their love of industry, and freedom of worship. In the birthright of every American is this value: For what he produces he shall receive a fair return.

When we speak of preparedness, let us prepare a way so that these great freedoms shall not be lost, by making sure that the farmers get a square deal, a fair return for what they produce—the lifeblood of the Nation.

Mr. President, I shall vote for adequate defense. Now that everyone agrees there is a need for adequate defense, there is, as I see it, only one question, or perhaps two, before the Senate in the debate on this bill.

Does the bill require that we commit ourselves to an expenditure of money that is greater than is needed? If so, I shall vote to cut the commitment. The address of the Senator from Vermont gave me a great deal of light on this very subject. I should like to have more light.

The second question is, Are we, in voting this money, making provision so that every dollar of it will go into preparedness? There are so many places where money is needed to help and encourage and influence constructively the life of our people that we cannot afford to waste the money which is to be appropriated. We must see that no exorbitant profits or graft are permitted.

There are so many needs for money that we had better be wise and careful as to the amount spent and the manner of spending it. I should like information on those subjects.

Mr. President, I could guess my way about the morrow, in Europe, America, or Asia; but no man knows the answer. We hate no nation or people. We defest only wrong.

All we can do is to use the light that is in our hands. We have a mandate from the people to use our judgment.

I have faith that guidance and direction from the God of Washington and Lincoln—our God, too—will be ours.

We rest in faith that man's perfection is the crowning flower, toward which the urgent sap in life's great tree is pressing—seen in puny blossoms now.

But in the world's great morrows to expand with broadest petal and with deepest glow,

The faith that life on earth is being shaped to glorious ends.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, some few weeks ago I left the prairies of Illinois to come to the Nation's Capital for the purpose of taking up my duties in the United States Senate. Prior to my leaving I stated that I hoped to be one of the best listeners in the Senate during the first year of my present term. However, I further said that should any vexatious or fundamental problems of government arise, wherein the general welfare of my country or the people of Illinois was involved, I should not hesitate to arise on the floor of the Senate and speak honestly and conscientiously on the merits or demerits of the proposal.

And little did I think that the time for this speech would come so soon. Yet, as I sat here yesterday afternoon, listening closely to the address of the able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] on the question now before the Senate, I confess that at least upon one occasion my pulses were quicken and I wondered if I had not misunderstood. Screaming headlines in the afternoon papers later in the day assured me that I had indeed heard right, and I found in the Evening Star a headline which I hoped I would not see, namely, "United States holds key to war, NYE asserts."

Under this headline, in bold, black type, was the subheading:

Senator NYE, of North Dakota, told the Senate today there would be no war in Europe until the United States gives the word.

Other newspapers expressed the same idea in varying style, and this morning, in the New York Times, we find the declaration that there would be no war in Europe this spring, this year, or next year until the United States encourages the democracies, the declaration being attributed to the Senator from North Dakota during the debate on the bill to expand the Army Air Corps to 6,000 planes.

Mr. President, I am not an alarmist. So that there can be no mistake about the statement which was made, I turn to page 2003 of yesterday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to read my worthy colleague's exact words:

I am more and more convinced that there will be no war in Europe this spring, this year, or next year, unless the United States encourages, urges, and eggs Europe on to it. There will be no war in Europe unless the United States shows a definite will to help out when war comes and an inclination to finance it. There will surely be a war in Europe when the United States gives the word "go" and gives Europe reason to anticipate that the United States will be standing by and ready to go on when the hour comes.

That is the statement that caused my pulses to quicken and which made me hope I had not heard aright.

That statement, if it be true, standing alone, without qualification or detailed explanation, is a shocking observation to hurl before a peace-loving nation. Quite obviously, the inference is that President Roosevelt and a Democratic administration will be responsible for any war that comes to Europe this spring, this year, or the next.

I wonder if the Senator from North Dakota fully realized the import of his implication that if or when a death-dealing holocaust of war descends upon the nations of this world, our United States of America will be responsible? Truly, my colleagues, this is a grave charge and one which, in my opinion, casts a blot upon the integrity and the national honor of our country.

It is my purpose here to deny the charge. I challenge not only the foundation of the statement, but I challenge the wisdom and question the motive of any Member of this body who deals so carelessly, so flippantly, and so loosely with the subject of cold and cruel war. That the statement comes from the lips of the junior Senator from North Dakota is strange, for he has a reputation throughout America as a disciple of peace.

It is my considered judgment, however, that that one statement will do more to drag this Nation into the zone of war hysteria than any utterance made by a responsible man in public life. Those who were on the floor yesterday will recall that some time elapsed after the Senator pried open the lid from his bucket of war paint and smeared by innuendo those who are today responsible for our foreign policy before the following colloquy took place:

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. A few moments ago the Senator made the statement that war would not come in Europe, either this year or next year—

Mr. NYE. That is my opinion.

Mr. LUCAS. Unless the United States of America in some way, through someone, said the word "go." Sitting here, listening to that statement, I consider it a very serious one; and I think the Senate as well as the country at large would be glad to have the Senator from North Dakota develop that statement.

I hope I did not misunderstand the Senator. If I did, I apologize to him.

Mr. NYE. No; I said it was my opinion that there would be no war in Europe this spring, or this year, or next year unless Europe had reason to believe that the United States would be ready to assist in the prosecution of a war if it came.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not want to disagree with the Senator's statement; but, as I recall, the able Senator from North Dakota distinctly said that there would be no war in Europe, either this year or next year, unless the United States of America said the word "go." To me that was a rather serious statement; and if the Senator has any information from anyone or from any source as to just how the United States of America or the present administration is going to give the word "go" I, for one, should like to know about it.

Mr. NYE. No, Mr. President; I am not prepared to say that anyone in America has intimated to Europe that the word "go" will be spoken; but I repeat my firm conviction that Europe is not going to have war this year or next year unless and until one side involved in Europe can have assurance that the United States is going to stand ready to assist them in that war.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. NYE. They are not able to finance a war. They are not able to carry it on. I do not believe the dictatorships want war any more than the democracies do; and yet the democracies, having suffered these humiliations of recent months, would be quite apt, if they could have the least bit of encouragement over here, to accept the next challenge and go to war.

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NYE. I yield first to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I think the Senator will agree with me that under no circumstances does the United States of America want to engage in a foreign war with any European power. If that be true, the United States is not going to give the word "go" nor is it going to do anything to encourage Europe in embarking on a war which will involve all the nations of that continent.

Mr. President, if ever there were a time in the history of this Nation when reason, logic, and a free interchange of ideas should prevail on the question of adequate national defense, it is in this hour of uncertainty as we debate a problem of world magnitude. This is a time when "the feast of reason and the flow of the soul" should prevail. This problem affects not only 130,000,000 of American people, it is at this moment the focal point of the eyes and ears of the world.

I submit, with all the sincerity and humility I possess, that this is no time for anyone to fire the imagination of people in any nation in the world by loose, prejudicial, alarming, and unsubstantiated statements. Responsible leaders in high governmental positions everywhere would serve their countries best by restraint in public utterance. It also is a time when men in high public positions, seeking to aid the solution of a foreign policy which, we hope, will be for our best interest, and ours alone, should remain calm, reasonable, constructive and fair, accurate and unprejudiced. Neither partisanship nor prejudice should be allowed to supplant solid facts.

When my colleague from North Dakota says we will not have war in Europe this spring, this year, or next year, unless America gives the signal to "go," I submit that in fairness to our Chief Executive, in fairness to our country, in fairness to the people of Europe, and in deference to our American tradition of high patriotism, we are entitled to have the facts upon which that statement was based. Nor is the statement mitigated by the qualification that it is only his opinion. The Nation as a whole will see only the screaming headlines, such as those which appeared in the newspapers of yesterday and today. And it is a reasonable assumption by the people of the United States to expect that a United States Senator, dealing with a problem which affects the continued existence of our Nation, our liberty, and the survival of our institutions of free democracy, deals not in the realm of speculation but bases his charges on solid and indisputable facts.

Mr. President, the direct question which I asked yesterday was not answered by the junior Senator from North Dakota. That question, which I repeat, is: What individual, or group of individuals, in this land of ours wields such power that the nations of the earth can be plunged into bloody and costly war? Just who is it in this Nation who controls the destiny of Europe? I would like to have names and facts cited to substantiate such a charge.

President Roosevelt stated that America hates war. In that blunt, bold declaration he echoed the sentiment of all America. And by his actions and his statements he has demonstrated that, hating war, America will go to extreme lengths to avert war. Ours is a glorious tradition of having entered no armed conflict in history save for reasons that our people were convinced were idealistic and humanitarian.

In the face of this tradition, it is difficult for me to understand or comprehend how any United States Senator, or any other person for that matter, can be so reckless as to place at our doorstep the blame for any conflict which may occur by saying that if such a conflagration shall take place it will be because this Nation gives the word to proceed.

No, Mr. President, I violently disagree with that premise and with that conclusion. Should there be in America some sinister, foul, and dreadful conspiracy which has the power to cause war in Europe—a premise which I deny—those same forces would obviously drag America into an European brawl. But, fortunately, Mr. President, it is the Congress of the United States wherein is vested the power to declare war. As a member of that body, I would like here briefly to state my position in respect to America becoming embroiled in European quarrels and entanglements.

I shall support the pending bill, believing that it is necessary for our own defense in a world which is filled with greed, envy, hate, racial jealousy, and the lust for territorial conquest. It is a mad world. It is a sad world.

It is a world filled with military despots who refer to us sneeringly as a "bellowing herd of democracy," who charge that our liberty is but a myth, and who have shown their willingness and inclination to stamp the lifeblood from liberty wherever liberty appears. An adequate national defense will keep our vast, rich, plentiful, and powerful Nation from being regarded with covetous eyes by many who, if America were an Ethiopia or a China, would have no reluctance to despoil it.

Yet let us not be totally blinded by this external display of force and conquest. Our internal problems are not trifling. We are annoyed by the trifling, ineffectual, yet bothersome activities of alien "isms" which seek to implant their strange and ungodly philosophies on our shores. Let us pass this national defense bill so that it may be a warning to those who live under our flag but who preach and teach other insidious doctrines foreign to our ideals of government, that the overthrow of this Government by any method other than prescribed by the Constitution will be immediately challenged with force.

Mr. President, I speak with the utmost sincerity when I say that in dealing with a foreign policy, these great foreign problems which are now being discussed, the Members of the United States Senate should divorce politics, divorce partisanship and prejudice in this discussion as we go along.

In conclusion, I should like to give the Senate some notion as to how my people in the State of Illinois, in my humble opinion, feel about entangling alliances with foreign nations.

During my campaign for the United States Senate, I visited almost every one of the 102 counties of Illinois, both in the primary and in the general election, and I discussed with the people the very questions we are now discussing. I made a pledge to the people of Illinois which I propose to fulfill in the United States Senate, in substance, that as the junior Senator from the State of Illinois I would vote for adequate national defense, billions upon billions of dollars, if necessary, to the end that no foreign intruder should ever place his belligerent foot upon American soil, but that I would never vote a single dime to send American boys across the pond to pull the chestnuts of some other nation out of the fire, irrespective of what nation that might be.

Mr. President, I believe I know something about the experiences of war. We entered the last war for the sole purpose of making the world safe for democracy. We were fighting a war at that time to end all wars, and there was many a boy who went into the service and made the supreme sacrifice believing that he was giving his all in the interest of humanity to the end that that would be the end of all wars. Oh, what a myth; what a sad story the history of the world has been since the last war. America has received nothing but grief and sorrow. America has received nothing but debts, one on top of the other, as the result of the World War of 1917-18.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am against any war of aggression. I shall go to the limit to sustain war waged for the defense of our shores, our people, and our property.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of Levi G. Bassett to be postmaster at Louin, Miss., in place of L. G. Bassett, which was ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord; our Lord, holy, holy, holy is Thy name and righteousness is the habitation of Thy throne. We pray not for ease but for the way, the truth, and the light. Let Thy word be a lamp to our feet and a guide to our path.

Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord.

Teach us, Heavenly Father, that this priceless heritage is perfect in its character and perpetual in its obligation. Neither time nor age can wither nor breathe upon it. We pray Thee to let the day come when it shall shine forth as the sun in Thy kingdom on earth. Let it radiate in pure noble deeds in the common walks of life for the love of mankind. May the Christ and His spirit be our daily inspiration. In His holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 4630) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 112), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order against the bill.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, following the legislative program for the day and any special orders that have been entered, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next following the legislative program for the day and any other special orders that may have been entered, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSRON] may address the House for 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. POWERS. With the indulgence of the Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania when he expects to call up the War Department appropriation bill and what he has in mind as to the time to be allowed for general debate; in other words, details as to the entire procedure.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, the majority leader tells me that we may call the bill up tomorrow after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk. I suggest that general debate run throughout tomorrow, to be finished tomorrow if possible, but if not, that general debate close not later than 2 o'clock on Friday; that we then start reading the bill and pass the bill before we adjourn on Friday.

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman, of course, intends that the time for general debate be equally divided?

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly.

Mr. POWERS. That is satisfactory.

Mr. RAYBURN. Let us not at this time make any agreement about having 2 hours of general debate on Friday. It may not be wanted.

Mr. POWERS. I think that is entirely satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. There is no parliamentary question pending before the House.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein the testimony I gave before the Committee on Military Affairs this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$557,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 17 and 18.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendments Nos. 1 and 2, relating to the American Battle Monuments Commission: Waives usual procurement procedure, at the discretion of the Commission, with respect to supplies, materials, and equipment purchased in Europe, and waives provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, when amount involved does not exceed $500, as to procurements in the United States, all as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 3 to 8, inclusive, relating to the Civil Aeronautics Authority: Makes the appropriation for salaries and expenses of the Civil Aeronautics Authority available for administrative expenses of the Air Safety Board in connection with duties imposed upon such Board by clause (5) of subsection 702 (a) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as proposed by the Senate; earmarks $557,000 of the appropriation for salaries and expenses of the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the branch of Authority set up under the law for handling technical development matters, instead of $1,000,000, as proposed by the Senate; specifically provides for the payment of fees and mileage of witnesses by the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board, as proposed by the Senate, and provides specifically as to the Air Safety Board for the payment of rent and expenses incident to the operation of field offices, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 9: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the supplemental appropriation of $75,000 proposed by the House for the fiscal year 1939 on account of the Mount Rushmore Memorial, as such additional amount is included in the first deficiency appropriation bill, 1939, now pending.

On amendment No. 10: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, authority proposed by the House to employ after March 31, 1939, such amount as may be necessary of the appropriation proposed under the Social Security Board for grants to States for unemployment compensation administration to augment such appropriation for the current fiscal year, as provision to meet the current fiscal year deficiency is included in the first deficiency appropriation bill, 1939, now pending.

On amendments Nos. 11 and 12, relating to the Tennessee Valley Authority: Appropriates $39,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $21,797,000, as proposed by the House, and makes the appropriation available for Gilbertsville Dam, and for construction of a dam at or near Watts bar on the Tennessee River and for preliminary investigations of a site for a dam at or near Coulter Shoals, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 13: Inserts a heading, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 14, 15, and 16, relating to the Federal Housing Administration: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the additional availability of $2,500,000 proposed by the House for the current fiscal year. This additional availability is provided for in House Joint Resolution No. 185, passed by the House and Senate on February 27, 1939.

In disagreement

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following amendments of the Senate:

On amendment No. 17: Denying reenlistment gratuities to enlisted men of the services encompassed by the Joint Military Services Pay Act of 1922.

On amendment No. 18: Correcting a section number.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 21]

Allen, Ill.	Douglas	Johnson, Lyndon	Pierce, N. Y.
Allen, Pa.	Eaton, Calif.	Keefe, Wis.	Rabaut
Bates, Mass.	Elliott	Keller	Robertson, Va.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 350 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEAVY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill now under consideration disposes of everything in the bill with the exception of the matter inserted by the Senate as amendment No. 17, denying reenlistment gratuities to the enlisted men of the military services, including the Coast Guard. In other words, the adoption of the conference report will dispose of everything with the exception of that one item, which will be called up as soon as the conference report is disposed of. So far as I know, there are no items in the conference report to which the conferees agreed or took final action about which there is any controversy with the exception of matters affecting the Tennessee Valley Authority.

With reference to that matter, the conferees agreed to the Senate amendment which reinserted in the bill matters reported out by the Appropriations Committee of the House and subsequently stricken out by the House. So that matter stands before the House again in the conference report.

Some suggestion has been made that the Members of the House are not being given an opportunity to vote on this controversial question, because the matter is brought back in the conference report. That is not theoretically accurate. The parliamentary situation is this: After something like an hour's debate, practically all of which will be devoted to this item, and I shall yield half of the time to Members who are opposed and half to those who are in favor, I shall move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report. If a majority of the Members of the House present and voting wish to vote separately on any item in dispute or any Senate amendment, and the conference report is voted down, the Senate amendments will be in order for consideration. That is the parliamentary situation.

Mr. Speaker, insofar as the merits of the Tennessee Valley item are concerned, may I say it is not a question now of whether or not you approve of the Tennessee Valley Authority development. That has long ago been decided and millions of dollars have been expended in that development and invested by the Federal Government in the project.

It is no longer a question whether or not we wish to approve the building of a dam at Gilbertsville, because that matter was very deliberately considered in the last session of Congress and the Congress authorized the commencement of construction at Gilbertsville. More than $5,000,000 have been spent on that project. So the question is whether or not, having begun construction at Gilbertsville, it is now the part of wisdom to throw away the amount of money so expended and abandon that important link in the whole Tennessee Valley project for flood control and navigation.

Mr. Speaker, there is not a dollar in this bill nor a dollar involved in the present consideration of this matter for power development at Gilbertsville. This dam, we are told, is necessary for flood control and navigation. The hearings are here. Whether they are right or wrong, you may take either side you wish; but, I repeat, there are no funds in here for power development at Gilbertsville. Whether or not some future Congress will put dynamos in the dam being erected there and generate power is a matter I cannot say any more than you can say, but certainly, I can assure you there is no power involved in the present bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, for three successive times, and probably four, this question has been presented to the House, and it has each time been definitely decided against the construction of Gilbertsville Dam.

Before I enter into a discussion of the matter I want to express my appreciation of the fine way in which the chairman of the committee has stated the parliamentary situation and his apparent fairness in letting the House be advised as to how it may consider this matter and vote upon the question, relating to the Senate amendment of the provision for Gilbertsville Dam.

I started out with the consideration of the first bill that created and set up the Tennessee Valley Authority. At that time the only question under consideration by the Congress was the question of navigation and national defense. I am proceeding at this time in opposition to the action of our conferees with respect to the Gilbertsville Dam because of the destructiveness of this proposed dam.

Let us see what it does. It will destroy, before it is completed, $150,000,000 of the taxpayers' money. It will destroy and take out of production from four to six hundred thousand acres of the most valuable land in the Tennessee Valley. It will destroy thousands upon thousands of homes of contented citizens throughout this area of 184.6 miles that will be covered by the reservoir of water. It will destroy over 100 miles of hard-surfaced roads. It will destroy railroads, railroad bridges, and highway bridges. I am afraid it will help destroy the Democratic Party. At the end of all this destructiveness it will be a menace to navigation, and not an aid. It will be of little, if any, aid to flood control.

If you will read in the RECORD a speech inserted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], chairman of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors—and the gentleman has made a lifetime study of these questions—you will find that in dealing with a small lake on the upper Mississippi River known as Lake Pepin, less than 30 miles in length, they have had several great disasters, including one in which there were 100 lives lost and valuable property destroyed. The program of the T. V. A., devoted largely to the production and marketing of electricity, is a program of a punitive nature, intended by its promoters to destroy by ruthless competition the privately owned power industry; but in addition to that it is a direct competitor of the bituminous-coal industry, a very large labor-employing industry, while hydroelectricity is not a labor-employing industry. The coal industry vitally affects the railroad industry as one of its best revenue producers. It fills the pay envelopes of the coal miner and the railroad employees, while the T. V. A.'s hydro dams will do neither. I am opposed to its further expansion on these grounds, and for the far more important reason that it is socialistic and destructive of the principles of democracy and human liberty. The Government has since the time of the Lake Pepin disasters been building havens of refuge for boats upon that lake, which is less than one-fifth the length of the proposed reservoir to be created by the Gilbertsville Dam.

In addition, it has developed that the average Mississippi Valley barges and boats cannot be operated on that small lake in times of ordinary storm. The lake to be created by the Gilbertsville Dam will be four or five times as long and at least twice as wide, and more in many places. Then it becomes a matter of fact that it is destructive of navigation.

They propose to spend what they admit to be $112,000,000 in order to provide flood control, but that is not all. The gentleman from Virginia, when he stated a moment ago that we might as well make up our minds that the Tennessee Valley Authority is an established fact, undoubtedly is right in saying that the T. V. A. as a whole is an established fact, but they have under construction now two major dams and plan a half dozen more, including Gilbertsville. They not only have those in plan but they have projected a scheme by which they propose to cut a canal from the Tennessee River several miles over into the Cumberland River. After they get that done they propose to go down into the Ohio River below the mouth of the Tennessee and build another high dam, and by doing so they will cover up and destroy five navigation dams that have already been built by the Army engineers in the Ohio River. In other words, that is Dog Island, and, if we let them go on, the next thing we know they will have us in the dog house. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, all of us in discussing the development of the Tennessee Valley go back to the one document that is considered the authority on the development of that valley, a study made by the Army engineers by direction of Congress and their report to the Congress submitted in 1930. In this study the matter of low dams and high dams was gone into thoroughly. It is true they reported that this project could be developed in either manner, either by the use of 32 low dams or a series of high dams. When the T. V. A. was created it studied this report and as a result adopted the plan of a series of high dams. Gilbertsville is simply one of the high dams necessary to complete the system.

Let me read you just a few extracts from this report of the Army engineers:

It is possible to provide a 9-foot waterway—

Remember, that is the responsibility this Congress placed upon the Tennessee Valley Authority, to create a 9-foot waterway to Knoxville. It is the injunction from Congress to the T. V. A. This is what the Army engineers have to say:

It is possible to provide a 9-foot waterway by means of low-lift dams, but such a waterway would be inferior to the high-dam developments and would not permit the economical development of power.

In another place the report stated—

It is evident that the full utilization of the resources of this river for the public benefit requires its improvement by means of high dams built for the joint development of power and navigation.

It is to carry out the recommendations of the Army engineers that the T. V. A. has adopted this system of high-lift dams.

I know we are all interested in flood control.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Is not that report signed by Patrick J. Hurley, Secretary of War in the Hoover administration?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I presume it is. The report was issued in 1930.

Let us talk about flood control. If you replace the high dam at Gilbertsville with a series of low dams such as those who are fighting Gilbertsville want to put in there you will not have 1 foot of storage capacity for flood control. I do not believe anyone would dispute that the Tennessee Valley development is to be taken as a flood-control project, in view of the statement of the Mississippi Flood Control Commission only year before last that it is one of the most important projects controlling the flow of water in the Ohio River and its tributaries.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is it not also true—and the question has been investigated by the best engineers of the country, in the Army and out—that the most economical dams that can be built are the maximum-size dams?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Absolutely.

Mr. RAYBURN. Further, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] talks about covering up valuable land. That question has been passed over, because everyone knows that if you are going to build a dam anywhere and back water up it is going to cover up land. The point is that if you cover up a few thousand acres and save a million acres, then the building of a maximum-size dam is justified. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman is absolutely correct. Gilbertsville is the closest point to the confluence with the Ohio River that it is economical to build a dam.

May I say further that out of the 12,000,000 acre-feet of storage capacity in the Tennessee Valley, 4,600,000 is behind Gilbertsville Dam. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, the argument of my colleague, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] relative to the fact that the Army engineers have recommended this dam, should have absolutely no weight in the consideration of this matter. After all, I would remind the membership of the House here today that the Engineer Corps of the United States Army is not the appropriating body of the American Nation. [Applause.]

Neither has the question relative to the size of the dam any importance. We are not opposing this matter because of the size of the dam, we are opposing it because we are opposed to extending the activities of the T. V. A.

When I consider the methods that the T. V. A. is following today it puts me very much in mind of a little story. At one time a man was walking down a boardwalk and found another man poking a ten-dollar bill down through the boards. He said, "What in the world are you doing?" The man replied, "My friend, I just lost a nickel down there and now I am putting $10 there to make it worth while for me to pull up the boardwalk to get the nickel. [Laughter.]

This is the way the T. V. A. has been operating all the time. They come in here for an appropriation for a certain purpose and at the same time they ask for a small appropriation to start another project and then 2 years later or 1 year later they come back to the Congress and say, "Well, we must have an appropriation of $200,000,000 in order to prevent the $2,000,000 you appropriated last year from being lost." [Laughter.] This is exactly the situation that we are up against today. Every time they come back to the Congress asking for an appropriation for a dam, at the same time they are wise enough to ask for a small appropriation for initial work which will make a larger appropriation necessary in the future.

This is not a question of the size of the dam, it is simply a question of whether or not the Congress is to allow the T. V. A. to reach out all over the United States, wherever they may desire to go, and take under their authority whatever they desire. As far as this is concerned, there are many other sections of this Nation that are just as much entitled to projects of this or any other nature as is this one section. I was in favor of the T. V. A. to start with, back in the days when T. V. A. was put over as a measure for national defense, a flood-control measure, and a measure to manufacture fertilizer for the farmers; but the original objectives of the T. V. A. have been lost sight of entirely. So far as I have been able to determine they are making no nitrates to be used in national defense, and so far as I have been able to learn, the fertilizer that they have been manufacturing down there is almost nil. They are devoting themselves to building up a gigantic empire of power. They are devoting themselves to a socialization program that was never intended under this act.

I am sure all the members of the Committee on Military Affairs who were on that committee when the T. V. A. came back to them a second time for authority to extend their domain, granted them such authority with the most extreme reluctance. At that time we could see where this question was leading us. We could see that they were taking the inevitable path of a bureau in reaching out and accumulating unto itself more and more and more power all the time.

Now, I hope the Members of this House will vote down this conference report in order that we may have an opportunity to vote singly on the various items involved here, and I hope that when they do that they will put a check to this extravagant agency that is spending the money of the people, when this Nation is getting so very deeply in debt.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman recalls that when the amendments of 1935 that gave them the power to extend their transmission lines and destroy the power industry came up that they stayed in the committee 3 months and then came out by one vote.

Mr. FADDIS. Exactly so. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] in the opening statement at the beginning of this argument, clearly stated the issues. It is not a question as to whether we will commence the construction of a dam at Gilbertsville, nor is it a question now of whether we are going to permit the T. V. A. to continue its activities. It is a question of completing a mighty undertaking, after the Government has authorized an investment of hundreds of millions of dollars and has proceeded for some 5 or 6 years and has demonstrated to any fair-minded person who will go down there and spend as much as 3 or 4 days that here is a practical, feasible, and successful undertaking. The proof is uncontrovertible that Government was warranted in entering upon this great undertaking; it is a question now as to whether or not it shall be completed. It is merely doing that which American greed and profit undid; that is, restoring a great empire down there.

But my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] says they entered into this work for the purpose of developing fertilizer for the farmer. I spent some time personally looking into that. They have done a marvelous work there in that field, and no friend of the American farmer should hinder that activity. I wish time would permit me to detail at length what some of the accomplishments are in the fertilizer field by T. V. A. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says it is an extravagant agency. Has not a committee been investigating it, a committee made up in large part of men who are adverse to it, which has for months been trying to find something bad, and yet not one single thing have they been able to give this Congress or the American people that shows either extravagance or dishonesty.

The opposition to the T. V. A. comes from three sources—those who believe the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam will not further navigation and flood control. I respect those who have such convictions on that subject, but I state that if you will carefully examine the conflicting evidence pro and con you will find far the greater weight of it on the side of this being an essential navigation and flood-control dam on T. V. A. Then, opposition comes from a group who represent the coal-mining districts, and I accord to them the right to express the views of their own constituents, but I fear they are blinded by prejudice. The facts are—and they appear in the RECORD on page 2970 of February 27, through a statement made by the Federal Power Commission—that coal consumption for the production of electrical energy in the T. V. A. region has increased more than 100 percent in the last 6 years. It is not threatening that industry; it is stimulating it. It is teaching the American people the value of the use of electricity and bringing it to them at a price where they can use it. It will call into being numerous industries that do not now exist there which will make use of coal to generate electricity which can never be produced by falling waters, as they do not have possibilities sufficient to meet the future needs.

The third objection is partisan in a large measure. Gentlemen will remember the vote on the Republican side of the House a few days ago when we walked by the tellers. With few exceptions the vote was almost unanimously against it, while on the Democratic side many Members were not present; and, if they had been, we would not have this problem before us now, because it would have carried then. This is not a partisan measure, but has been made such by the minority. The amendment that struck it when the bill was first before us was offered by a Member on the Democratic side, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS], it is true, representing a coal district, and for the purpose of giving it a nonpartisan complexion. I am too charitable to charge that any Member in this body is here as the direct advocate of the private power interests of this country, but I do assert as a fact that many of us are here in spite of the money spent by private power interests to defeat us. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PEARSON].

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I must confess to the Members of the House that I have said about all I know to say in behalf of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and certainly nothing new of much value could be said with reference to it today in the short period of 4 minutes. If there is any one thing that is of value to every individual Member of the House as a result of his experience here I think it is the fact that he learns to get away from provincialism, from provincial influence, and raises his sights, so to speak, to consider questions that arise on the floor of the House not from a sectional or a district viewpoint, but rather from a national viewpoint, and strive to do his full duty as an American citizen toward any project which has as its objective the upbuilding of the Nation or any integral part of the Nation. Certainly, my friends, the objectives of the Tennessee Valley Authority as they were conceived by the Members of this body 6 years ago are of national interest and will bring national benefits, and I appeal to the Members of the House on both sides of the aisle to consider this question not from a sectional standpoint but from a national standpoint; and if you will do that in all good conscience, in view of what has been done by this great governmental agency, I shall have no misgivings in the world as to your attitude or your vote on this particular measure. I think the Tennessee Valley Authority has justified its existence from every standpoint of conception of those who made it possible. It was created as an instrumentality to promote our national defense, flood control, and navigation; and if you gentlemen, as Members of the House, could have an opportunity to go into that vast area which this organization serves and see to what extent it has greatly accomplished those objectives and the benefits which it is bringing to a group of people who have never enjoyed governmental benefits before, I would again have no misgivings about your attitude and your vote here today. It has justified its existence in every essential element for which it was created.

Congress has created it. It has made it possible. It is our own brain child. We have set up the program. It remains now for Congress to see to it that the T. V. A. carries out its program to its ultimate completion. Otherwise, we have created a child and murdered it, so to speak, by declining and refusing to permit it to carry on these things which we said when we gave it existence we needed throughout this Nation.

I cannot believe that sensible men, thinking men, would permit this Government to launch upon a project as vast as this and spend $250,000,000 of the people's money and then decide, perchance because some features of it we may not like, we will throw away our investment and discontinue the program. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7½ minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, as you all know, I am not accustomed to making very many speeches. It is only on such an occasion that I feel called upon to make remarks. I requested that I be permitted to address this House for a few moments upon this vital question. This is an unusual situation. Three times, or possibly four times, this House has spoken in no uncertain terms with respect to the T. V. A. and the building of Gilbertsville Dam. The proposition here today is not to destroy the T. V. A. set-up. The proposition presented here is whether or not you are going to build Gilbertsville Dam and continue this sort of governmental activity.

The Congress has spoken. The conference committee has met. While I have the greatest regard and respect for my good friend from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], we today have been placed in a very unusual position. I have rendered service on conference committees, and it is the first time I recall where such a situation has arisen, when this House has spoken so pronouncedly upon a question of this magnitude. You are confronted now with the position that you have to vote down this conference report in order to get at this evil, Gilbertsville Dam.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. I do.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. You do not have to vote down the conference report. You only have to vote down the previous question.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. I mean the previous question.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. I yield.

Mr. TABER. I understand from the Parliamentarian that a vote against the previous question would simply prolong the debate and that the only way we can get at this situation is to vote down the conference report completely.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Yes. Now, we are placed in that unusual position. This House is turning itself over, body and soul, to the Senate. [Applause.] Why, I cannot answer.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. I have some other things I want to say.

Mr. MAY. The House is not turning itself over to the Senate. It is the conferees who have turned the House over.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Be that as it may, it resolves itself into the same thing.

Now, I want to speak about a few things that have not been mentioned here today—West Virginia's riches and its possessions is in coal. There is not a single man here who has coal fields in his district who can afford to vote for the Gilbertsville Dam, because that is the entering wedge which will destroy the value of your coal lands. You men from coal regions think about that. If this policy is carried to its finality, it means simply that coal lands and the coal industry will be worthless. It will take out of taxation the coal properties. It will throw into bankruptcy every coal operation. I do not mean now. I am not talking about right now, but it is the entering wedge that will destroy forever your coal properties in this country.

Now, let me speak a little further. In our State and in other coal regions there are thousands and thousands of miners who live by mining, by birth and training, they are wholly unfit for any other service. When you destroy the coal mines of this country you will take out of employment those laboring people who are unable to earn a living in any other way, and thus increase our relief rolls. That is one thing that we must consider seriously.

What are you going to do with the railroads that are in the red? The other day before our deficiency subcommittee we had evidence that before very long the airplanes will be taking care of all the passenger service as well as the light freight. What are you going to do with the railroads? The only way the railroads can exist is by carrying freight. Your freight is coal. It means in the end, Mr. Speaker, that the Government must take over these railroads or put them in a position where they will have to ask for subsidies. We cannot get along without railroads. What are you going to do with the people who are employed by the railroads? They will go out of employment and on to the relief rolls.

So I speak for labor; I speak for the railroads; I speak for the life of these coal-bearing sections. Now it is up to this House whether it shall say for the fourth time and impress upon the conferees and the Senate that we propose to stand by our guns and we do not propose that the Government shall go into as a general policy, the development of hydroelectric power.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. By voting down the conference report and then going back to the items in question, namely, Gilbertsville and others, this Congress would not destroy that which has been done in the Tennessee Valley.

It has been my purpose to cooperate, insofar as possible, with the programs which mean future prosperity for this Nation. But I am strongly opposed to the ever-encroaching power which in this instance seems to have determined a course which would be detrimental to certain proper business in areas close by the proposed development.

My record will clearly indicate that on every occasion I have supported the program for rural electrification. I shall continue to speak and vote for this meritorious development.

The objectives of T. V. A. have been worthy, and I have aided insofar as I could the work, which has been progressing. On the Gilbertsville Dam I find myself unable to feel it is desirable to provide funds. The gentleman will agree that no harm will come if we stop this construction in view of other considerations.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. I concur in the gentleman's conclusions. It is to stop this thing where it is now and not to spend another dollar in the development of this project, which will destroy labor, railroads, and values in our coal fields. That is what it is. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. It seems to me that in 1929, 1930, and 1932, when there was no T. V. A., the coal business was in bad shape.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. That is unfortunate, but it will be a great deal worse if you permit this development to go on.

Mr. Speaker, this is a serious matter. It is not one we should pass by lightly. Oh, I know what a terrific fight has been made; I know it only too well. I know that certain Democrats will be charged with being irregular because, perchance, some of the good Republicans over there look at this thing the same way we do and will vote with us rather than we voting with them. This is a serious matter, my friends, too serious to pass by lightly. [Applause.]

I appeal to those who are in sympathy with the laborer employed in this great industry. I appeal to those interested in saving our railroads and those millions who labor by day and by night in the operation of our railroad systems. I appeal to those who want to save and preserve our great coal fields and the value of these properties to the end that our taxable properties may be held intact and the industry may continue and thrive.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, there is some confusion about the parliamentary situation. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to submit a parliamentary inquiry, and that it not be taken out of the time that has been allotted for the consideration of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it has been stated upon the floor by myself, and I think it was the general understanding of the rest of us, that in the event the previous question on the conference report were voted down the Senate amendments would then be open for separate consideration. Pursuant to the statement just made a few moments ago by the gentleman from New York, I discussed the matter with the Parliamentarian, and, as I understand the matter now, it appears that the only way the House could get a vote on this amendment would be to vote down the conference report; that then each Senate amendment would be before the House for separate consideration. My parliamentary inquiry is whether or not that is correct.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman has very clearly stated the parliamentary situation. The mere voting down of the previous question would not afford an opportunity to the House to open up a conference report for amendments. In other words, the Chair, under the precedents, is clearly of the opinion that the only way in which a separate vote could be obtained upon any Senate amendment would be to vote down the conference report; that voting down the previous question would not afford an opportunity for such consideration.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. So nothing will be gained by voting down the previous question.

The SPEAKER. It would merely extend the time for debate on the conference report.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, may I submit a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. If the conference report should be voted down, would it be in order to ask unanimous consent to dispose of the other amendments than the T. V. A. all in one block in accordance with the conference report so that they might be disposed of and we might get at the T. V. A. question by itself?

The SPEAKER. In answer to the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from New York, the Chair will state that if unanimous consent should be given by the House to vote on the amendments en bloc, aside from the one in dispute, that such action could properly be taken and would dispose of all items except the ones in dispute.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

ENEMIES OF T. V. A. ON A SIT-DOWN STRIKE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. JOHNSON] complains that the extension of this program would interfere with the coal business and the railroads; yet coal is being mined with electricity and steam machinery, instead of human labor, and the railroads are now running their trains by electricity—some of the very railroads that run right through the coal belt.

Now I want to appeal to you gentlemen who are fighting this proposition on account of the power question.

You were elected last year because of two things: Low farm prices and dissatisfaction with the sit-down strikes. The Supreme Court has finally dug up the Constitution and outlawed the sit-down strike. [Applause.] Now it seems that a lot of you newly elected men—led by the Republican Old Guard—have gone on a sit-down strike here in the House. Let me warn you now that you are sitting on a live wire, and we propose to turn on the heat as time goes on. [Laughter and applause.]

Twenty-three millions of your constituents pay overcharges for electric lights and power in their homes. Remember, the one you are sitting on reaches into the homes of the people you were sent here to represent.

Whenever the housewife complains to her husband, "Dear, the lights are going dim, my electric iron won't heat, the radio is silent, the water pump has failed, and the refrigerator has gone dead," the old man will say: "Dearie, our Congressman is on the line." [Laughter.]

The people of this country are being overcharged 100 percent for their electric energy, or more than $1,000,000,000 a year. I am going to put those figures in the Record and break them down by States.

The T. V. A. has already helped to reduce electric light and power rates by $556,000,000 a year, and all of your constituents are reaping the benefits.

I am going to put in the Record a schedule which shows the overcharges in every congressional district in the United States, so that when the old man comes in and says, "Look here, dear, with all the trouble we have had with our lights, they have overcharged us 100 percent for our electricity. Look at this bill. It is double what it ought to be." The wife will say, "Yes, dear, the same thing is going on; our Congressman is still on the line." [Laughter.]

But this is not a power issue so much as it is the carrying out of the program for navigation and flood control. Everybody knows that Gilbertsville will generate very little power if it ever generates any at all, but you are killing flood control and navigation both if you kill Gilbertsville Dam, if you vote down this conference report; because the floods will destroy, as they have in the past, the people and the property from there down to the mouth of the Mississippi River, and the river will be dead so far as navigation is concerned because of the want of an entrance.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. Has it not been stated on the authority of Dr. A. E. Morgan, former Chairman of the T. V. A., that the Gilbertsville Dam is designed for flood control alone?

Mr. RANKIN. Absolutely. We talk about national defense. The coal-minded gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], my coal-minded friend from West Virginia [Mr. JOHNSON], my coal-minded friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. And the beer-minded gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER]. [Laughter and applause.] I am sorry I cannot yield.

They all complain that the T. V. A. was started for national defense purposes—as well as that of flood control and navigation—and yet they would all vote to kill this conference report, which would paralyze this great project so far as navigation and flood control are concerned, and forever destroy its usefulness for purposes of national defense.

If they could do it, they would destroy the T. V. A., which as I have said, is the greatest development of ancient or modern times, and the most profitable investment the American people have made since the Louisiana Purchase.

I appeal to you as patriotic Americans, as responsible Members of Congress, in the name of 130,000,000 people whose interests are involved, to vote for this conference report. Do not permit the enemies of this great project to cripple or injure the Tennessee Valley Authority, which is not only the outstanding achievement of this administration but the leading accomplishment of its kind on this earth. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I may not be present when the vote is taken on this conference report, but if present I would vote for the conference report and for the Tennessee Valley Authority, and I shall pair accordingly.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, we are witnessing a repetition of the same old stereotyped attack on T. V. A. that we have seen carried on during each session of Congress since the T. V. A. was established in 1933. I believe these attacks that are being made today on T. V. A., however, are without justification, more so than at any time since the T. V. A. was authorized.

We have listened to the same doleful predictions today, so far as the coal industry is concerned. I represent a coal district. I have investigated the subject thoroughly and I am convinced that the completion of the Tennessee Valley project will be a great auxiliary to the coal industry. Navigation on the Tennessee to Knoxville will certainly afford a new market to the coal industry of my section. In fact, only a year or two ago I recall that the president of the United Mine Workers of my district made a speech in one of the local hotels in Knoxville, and speaking of the T. V. A., he said that the United Mine Workers were not going to stand in the way of progress, that they believed in the T. V. A. That was a magnanimous position for the president of the United Mine Workers to take for which he is entitled to credit.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I have not the time.

Mr. Speaker, I realize there has been a tremendous prejudice aroused throughout this country, due to a merciless and malicious propaganda which has been carried on by the power companies against the T. V. A. I hope that today you will dismiss from your minds any poison or prejudice you may have toward the T. V. A. and consider the proposition on its merits. That is all we who favor this proposal solicit at your hands.

I concede there was a time when there might have been some justification for my friends on the Republican side, who do not believe in Government operation of business, to oppose the T. V. A., because at that time T. V. A. was producing electric power in competition with local power companies; but that question has been eliminated due to the fact that T. V. A. has recently purchased all the power interests in the Tennessee Valley and there is no longer competition between the T. V. A. and the private power interests.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I cannot yield.

Mr. Speaker, I concede that perhaps the T. V. A. has made some mistakes. The T. V. A. is not infallible or impeccable any more than any other industry or any other individual. I believe a careful investigation of the activities of the T. V. A. will demonstrate that it has been carried on in a businesslike manner or as much so as any other Government activity that has ever been set up. A careful investigation of T. V. A. by a joint congressional committee has failed to show any material mismanagement and certainly no dishonesty or graft.

This comes to us from the Appropriations Committee. It came first from a subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, then from the Committee as a whole. The items were struck out in the Committee of the Whole, and due to the parliamentary situation we were denied a roll call. In 1935 we authorized by act of Congress the Tennessee Valley Authority to carry on this development, build these dams, and canalize the Tennessee River from Paducah, Ky., to Knoxville, Tenn. This is one of the dams necessary in order to carry out this mandate of the Congress, which is similar to the mandate which Congress gave several years ago to an Ohio River Authority to make the Ohio River navigable from Cairo up to Pittsburgh. It took several years to carry out this authorization of Congress but it was finally completed after 50 dams had been completed.

Now the Congress of the United States has authorized by solemn act the Tennessee Valley Authority to build these dams. Most of them have been built. There are only two dams that have not been started as yet. The Gilbertsville Dam has been begun and $5,000,000 has been expended on it. Let us carry out this mandate of the Congress of the United States and complete the program, which will mean in the final analysis the greatest asset, especially from a national-defense standpoint, this country has ever possessed. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I represent one of the largest coal-mining districts in the country and I have yet to see one letter opposing the Tennessee Valley Authority. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7½ minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would be well to get a bird's-eye perspective of what has happened and what is about to happen. In March of 1933 the Tennessee Valley matter was before this House, and it was defeated by some 30 votes. When the conference report came back on the 25th of April it was adopted by only 7 votes in a late afternoon session.

When the present bill came to the floor of the House on the 8th of February this year we struck out Gilbertsville and the dam construction language before it went to the Senate. We struck this language out first by a division vote and later by a teller vote. It has since been restored by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, two questions are apparent here today. First, are we going to surrender to the Senate or are we going to reaffirm the independence and dignity of the House and assert the position that we have heretofore taken. [Applause.] That is one matter before us this afternoon.

Secondly, there is more here than meets the eye. If this language is left in the bill, it means an added expenditure for 1940 of $17,203,000. It virtually commits this Congress to an expenditure of over $201,000,000 to be expended at Gilbertsville, to be expended at Watts bar, to be expended at Coulter Shoals, and to be expended on tributary streams such as the Little Tennessee.

This matter does not involve a repudiation of what has already been done in the Tennessee Valley, but it does involve the question of whether the Tennessee Valley Authority shall go hog wild and extend a program for which there is no clear justification and which falls with great weight upon the Public Treasury and upon the taxpayers of the Nation.

But this matter goes even further than that. I am going to use some of the data that were inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the 27th of February by one of the most beloved Members of this House. He is sitting right over here. I refer to the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. MANSFIELD]. He has at one time been a member of the Committee on Flood Control and for 7 or 8 years has been chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I know of no student of the problem who equals him insofar as introspection and discernment are concerned. Let me quote from the remarks the gentleman placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD just a day ago:

As soon as Gilbertsville Dam is an assured fact, Congress will be called upon to extend the authority of the T. V. A. to the Cumberland, and nearby section of the Ohio, in order to complete the designated "Gilbertsville-Dog Island project," as described in the T. V. A. booklet entitled, "The Unified Development of the Tennessee River System." That last word, "system," has a significant meaning.

They intend under their unified program to go across the Cumberland, then across the Ohio, and, in the judgment of this very distinguished and lovable Member, who is chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, that program will cost over $392,000,000. If you do not vote down this conference report today so we can take a further look at T. V. A., you are inferentially committing yourself to an auxiliary program that will run up to $392,000,000 or more, in addition to what will be spent in the Tennessee Valley proper.

This is a very edifying report from a man who knows his stuff in the matter of navigation, flood control, rivers, and harbors. If you want to follow authority and expert direction, you can find it from our beloved colleague over here, so you might very well follow the direction he has indicated in the statement which he inserted in the RECORD.

You are going further, then, than the mere expenditure of $17,000,000. This is going to embrace Gilbertsville, Watts bar, Coulter Shoals, and all the rest of the proposed dams, and there will be an astronomical expenditure asked of this Congress in future years. Under these circumstances, should we not stop and look and listen and get further information on this project before we commit such a huge sum of the taxpayers' money?

In my judgment this appropriation is not necessary at this time. There are in operation by the T. V. A. at the present time 26 generators at the dams that are completed. Eight dams are completed in whole or in part. Mind you, they have built stalls for 26 more generators at these same dams. Why have not these generators been installed? What is the trick? What is the mystery? What is the reason for wanting money to go ahead with the program of construction of dams when they can get all the power they need by filling the empty vacant stalls for which generators might be provided at the present time?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I should like to have an answer to that question, but not from my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will yield, I will answer it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I should like to have an answer from the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. RANKIN. I will answer on their part.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I hold here the Budget estimate which they submitted to the Subcommittee on Appropriations. I am simply quoting their figures. You may go through this and take one dam after another. There they tell you the provision that might be made. But I am curious to know why they want to commit us to another $201,000,000 of expenditure when they can purchase 26 generators and fill the vacant stalls. We have not had the answer to that yet, and until that time I respectfully suggest that we vote down the conference report so we will have an opportunity for further discussion of the proposed Gilbertsville language that was inserted in the bill by the Senate. Then the House can determine in regular form and at its leisure what it wants to do.

Finally, I get just a little tired of knocking out something like Gilbertsville here year after year, and then have it restored in the Senate, and then go over and have to surrender. In the name of common sense, is this House ever going to make a response to the mandate that came on the 8th day of November, and stand up on its hind legs and show a little intestinal fortitude? [Applause.] This is the day to do it. Let us vote down the conference report once and for all.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. After this House has repeatedly and unmistakably voiced its opposition and registered its protest to the Gilbertsville Dam, what justification under heaven is there for the House conferees to capitulate without first firing a shot and then bringing in a conference report forcing us to swallow the whole hog or none? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, three points have been raised by the opposition in this debate:

First, the question of the effect of the Tennessee Valley Authority program upon the coal industry.

Second, the question of the need for additional power installation; and, third, there has been injected extraneous matter with reference to the so-called Dog Island Dam.

Taking these up in their order, insofar as the effect upon the coal industry is concerned, I wish to give you some statistics which have been furnished by the Federal Power Commission. Before I give you those statistics, however, I want to call to your attention the fact that the ground lost by the coal industry has not been lost in the courts or in the Congress or in the T. V. A. program, because the coal industry was a sick industry long before the T. V. A. program came into being.

With reference to the consumption of coal, I call your attention to this fact. In the seven valley States in the T. V. A. area, in 1937, 2,569,700 tons of coal were used for the production of electricity, an increase of practically 40 percent over the 1,837,500 tons used in 1929, which was the peak year of production in the United States. This increase is all the more remarkable when it is remembered it took 3.20 pounds of coal to produce a kilowatt-hour of electricity in 1919, whereas it took but 1.43 pounds, or less than one-half that much in 1937.

There was no such increase in the rest of the United States; in other words, although there had been an increase of more than 40 percent in the T. V. A. area in the consumption of coal in 1937 over 1929, in 1937, insofar as the rest of the Nation was concerned, the Nation had not reached the 1929 figures of consumption. In 1929 the total for the United States was 44,934,000 tons, in 1937 44,766,000 tons. Therefore there is no foundation in fact for the statement that the T. V. A. program will hinder or hurt the coal industry because that is irrefutably answered by the statistics furnished by the Federal Power Commission.

The Gilbertsville Dam, as presently contemplated, is solely for navigation and flood control. It is the key structure for the interrelated program of navigation and flood control for the whole T. V. A. system, since it will afford a 9-foot channel from just above the mouth of the Tennessee to Pickwick Dam 104 miles above. It is necessary to construct this dam in order to release the products of the upper and middle Tennessee Valley region to the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys and to the Great Lakes region. It would be a waste of funds to stop this project now since we have a 9-foot channel from Pickwick to Chattanooga, and upon the completion of the Chickamauga Dam this year we will have a 9-foot channel to Watts bar. From the standpoint of navigation, therefore, Gilbertsville is absolutely essential to release the upper Tennessee and connect it with the outside world.

The trial court in the recent T. E. P. litigation found—

Boats and barges which are now in general use on the interconnected inland waterways of the Mississippi River system will be able to navigate the Tennessee River where improved by the projects of the Authority without change of design or extent of loading.

This finding of the court was based upon expert testimony given by competent transportation experts and engineers. Colonel Watkins, district engineer in charge of the preparation of House Document 328, stated as follows:

It is my opinion that the winds will interfere with the movement of commerce in the low-dam system much more than the waves in the high-dam system. In my judgment the low dams do not have any advantage for navigation, as compared to the T. V. A.'s high-dam project.

Mr. Brodie further testified that "a deep, long, slack waterpool is much more easy to traverse, much more dependable, than any other kind of inland waters."

With reference to the need for additional power installations, no such installations will be made in Gilbertsville until the need arises and the Congress appropriates money for installing turbines and generators. Your attention is invited to the fact that the use of electricity in the Nation from 1929 to 1937 increased only 22 percent, while such use in the Tennessee Valley area during the same period increased 43 percent. With legal barriers removed, with a market already developed, there will be need for all the power which can be developed in the 10-dam system planned by the T. V. A. With the legal barriers removed, there is no longer any problem disposing of power, but rather the problem of providing capacity to meet the growth and the demand for power. The 10-dam system referred to will have an installed power capacity of 1,400,000 kilowatts. With the completion of the system it is estimated that the annual revenue will exceed $20,250,000, leaving a margin of $16,000,000 after deducting operating expenses assignable to power. The rates charged by the T. V. A. will cover all costs. Power operations in the area have caused no unreasonable losses to legitimate investors, and the public will enjoy the benefit of the savings to the tune of more than $40,000,000 per year in the Tennessee Valley area. The country as a whole will benefit, and has benefited, because of rate reductions already effective throughout the country as the direct result of the T. V. A. power program.

With reference to this Dog Island project which was mentioned in the course of debate by two of the distinguished gentlemen who preceded me, in the very same report from which they quoted, had they read further, they would have found these words—and I quote from the report of the T. V. A.:

Before the Dog Island Dam or any other dam in the Ohio River could be constructed, additional legislation would be necessary, and this may await the development of national policy. It is outside of the scope of this report to recommend construction of any project on the Ohio River.

I hold here a telegram which I received this date from the Honorable John B. Blandford, Jr., general manager of the T. V. A., which I quote in part:

I am instructed by the Board of Directors to state that it has no intention now or at any time in the future of recommending the construction of the so-called Dog Island project. The board bases this statement upon completed investigations made incident to the planning and design of the Gilbertsville Dam.

This is an answer to the contention with reference to that extraneous matter injected in the course of the debate.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. I desire to call the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama to the fact that just as you cannot remain horse-minded in an automobile age, so you cannot remain coal-minded in an electrical age; civilization and progress must go on, and I understand that 97 percent of the people of the South who have been the beneficiaries of the T. V. A. insist upon its going on and upon its development for the future.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

The T. V. A. is a conservation program. The destiny of this Nation lies in the proper utilization and conservation of its natural resources. In these seven States we have the widest variety that may be found anywhere in the whole wide world of those elements of nature necessary for the happiness and welfare of mankind.

The Congress, after due deliberation, embarked upon an interrelated program looking to the proper conservation and utilization of the matchless resources of this region for the benefit of all the people of this great Nation of ours. This program envisions flood control, navigation, the production of cheaper fertilizer, a correlation of the work of the T. V. A. with the national defense of this country, the reforestation of denuded and bleak hillsides, so that they again may become productive. I submit to the Members of the Congress that the T. V. A. has been carrying out that mandate given to it by the highest law-making body of this Nation in a manner unparalleled, despite the fact that it has had to meet opposition in the courts, opposition from the power interests of this Nation, and political opposition throughout the course of its career. Flood control by means of reservoir dams on tributaries and multiple-purpose dams on the main stream have already been of inestimable value to the people in the Tennessee Valley and in the lower Ohio and Mississippi Valleys. The pulse of commerce has been quickened by improved navigation facilities and there is a two-way traffic in the valley reaching out to the Ohio and Mississippi Valley regions and even to Corpus Christi and other points on the Gulf of Mexico. A higher grade and cheaper fertilizer has been developed for the benefit of our farmers. And the power installations are of vital import to our national defense. Millions of trees have been planted in this area, which not only will have a commercial value some day, but which will also help to control floods on land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The gentleman from Illinois said a moment ago that after the T. V. A. project is completed they would move on to the Cumberland River. Is there any justification for that?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Absolutely not, because it would take additional legislation on the part of Congress before T. V. A. could move out of its designated area, the Tennessee Valley Basin.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am advised by reliable authority that engineers were there last week making test drillings at Dog Island. They are not representatives of the War Department. Can the gentleman tell me who they are?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I cannot. I have read to the House and to the gentleman a telegram from the general manager of the T. V. A. containing the positive declaration on their part that they have no idea of going into that area.

I have had an opportunity to observe this agency in its work, since its inception, and I can state that I do not believe there is a single agency of the Federal Government in all the history of this Nation which has operated in a more economical and efficient manner than has the Tennessee Valley Authority. I believe they have followed clearly and unequivocally the mandate of the Congress, and that this House should sustain the action which it has taken in the years past and sustain the action of the conferees by voting the previous question and the adoption of the conference report. Let me assure the House there has been no surrender on the part of the House conferees from any precedent in this matter. We are merely following the action the House took last year. Insofar as surrendering our prerogatives is concerned, it would be a useless proceeding to call for a conference between the two legislative bodies unless there was some yielding on the part of one or the other in the conference chamber.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the appropriation for Gilbertsville Dam, which is so necessary to the establishment of a yardstick against which to measure reasonable cost to the consumer of electric power. I feel that such a yardstick is the only way in which reasonable cost can be ascertained and that the determination of reasonable cost would result in substantial savings to consumers of electricity throughout the Nation.

My realization of the need for such a yardstick arose largely from a knowledge of the situation in cities of my district—large, densely populated cities. For many years I have felt strongly that the cost of electric power to consumers in these cities has been excessive. In recent years this feeling has found strong support in the figures published by the Federal Power Commission, which show that charges for electricity to all classes of consumers in Boston and surrounding cities are among the highest in the Nation, and this despite conditions peculiarly favorable to cheap generation and distribution of electric power.

I have supported the establishment of a power yardstick since the inception of my service in Congress, and I support this appropriation for Gilbertsville Dam with increased conviction in the light of the findings of the Federal Power Commission and the statements made in an editorial from the Malden Press, of Malden, Mass., which I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial is as follows:

HIGH ELECTRIC RATES—SWOLLEN PROFITS

We do not doubt that the Malden Electric Co., and its gigantic parent, the New England Power Co., hire about the best brains in electrical engineering and accounting to work for them, but for all their brains, these people have never been able to hide the fact that 23 cents on every dollar the electric company takes in is net profit.

These are a lot of pennies, if you realize that in 1937, a "normal" year for the Malden Electric Co., this prosperous local concern took in over three and a quarter millions of dollars and reported a net income, after payment of taxes and other charges, of nearly three-quarters of a million dollars—$717,871.07 to be exact.

These are a lot of pennies, too, if you consider that this enormous profit was substantially reduced by costs that are puzzling, to speak conservatively, but which poured additional cash into one and the same pocket—the pocket of the New England Power Co.

As simply as any puzzle can be explained, here is the explanation: The New England Power Co. cut into the profits of the Malden Electric Co. four different ways in 1937.

(1) As a power selling agency, it made a profit on the sale of electricity to the Eastern Massachusetts Electric Co., the "middleman" which sells current to the Malden Electric Co. The Eastern Massachusetts paid the New England Power Co., which owns it, some $880,000 for electricity in 1937 at the rate of slightly more than seven-tenths of 1 cent per kilowatt-hour.

(2) The Eastern Massachusetts Electric Co. made a profit by selling this same power to the Malden Electric Co. at a rate slightly more than 1½ cents per kilowatt-hour. In 1937 the Malden Electric Co. paid the Eastern Massachusetts some $1,185,000. Since the Eastern Massachusetts is a child of the New England Power, the New England Power also profited in this transaction.

(3) The New England Power Co. owns the New England Power Service Co., and this concern received management fees from the Malden Electric Co. in 1937 to the tune of $71,248.43.

(4) Since the New England Power Co. owns the majority of the stock in the Malden Electric Co., it also profited to the extent of the 20-percent dividend that was declared by the local company in 1937. This dividend totaled, in cash on all outstanding stock, $704,880.

The point to remember is that the nearly 50,000 household consumers of electricity in Malden, Melrose, Everett, and Medford are paying for these management fees, middleman's fees, and 20-percent dividends in their monthly electric bills. All these fees and dividends add up to a large piece of the gross business of the Malden Electric Co., and that is why the householders of this district are paying among the highest electric rates in the country.

Only the roar of public disapproval, backing up the efforts of the city government committee which will strive to get lowered rates for consumers, can shatter the present set-up of rates which, in the light of profits made by the Government-protected electric company here, are truly scandalous.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia) there were—ayes 171, noes 165.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 184, nays 175, answered "present" 1, not voting 73, as follows:

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye." I was paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BOLTON, who, I understand, would vote "no." So I would like to withdraw my vote and be recorded as "present."

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. BARNES changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 17: On page 68, beginning in line 1, insert:
 "Sec. 6. No part of any appropriation contained in this or any other act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, shall be available for the payment of enlistment allowance to enlisted men for reenlistment within a period of 3 months from date of discharge as to reenlistments made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, notwithstanding the applicable provisions of sections 9 and 10 of the act entitled 'An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service,' approved June 10, 1922 (37 U. S. C. 13, 16)."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia moves that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 17 and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

"Sec. 6. Hereafter no enlisted man shall be entitled to or be paid an enlistment allowance for reenlistment, notwithstanding the applicable provisions of sections 9 and 10 of the act entitled 'An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service,' approved June 10, 1922 (37 U. S. C. 13, 16)."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. IZAC].

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, 83 years ago we placed in the basic law of this Nation a provision for the payment of reenlistment gratuity amounting to between $100 and $200 a year per reenlistment for every enlisted man of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Coast Guard, provided within a limited period of time that man would reenlist. We continued this payment of the gratuity all these years until 1933, when, under the Economy Act, we deemed it advisable, apparently, that we should not pay it any more. The Economy Act of 1933 took away from the enlisted man this reenlistment gratuity. If it were being paid at the present time, it would amount to about $5,000,000 a year for all of the services. That is not as much as we are paying every year for the training of new men, which, as far as the Navy is concerned, amounts to $256 for the first 3 months of their enlistment. So you can see it is not an economy measure. It is just one of those things that is left over from the Economy Act, for which there is really no good reason.

Let me show you how we have been treating the Regulars in the past. For instance, if a Regular is disabled and has to be retired or pensioned, his pension is $45 a month, provided he is totally and permanently disabled. A war veteran receives $100. Let us suppose he does not suffer as much, being only a Regular. Let us look at his mother. If he is killed in action, his mother gets $15 a month, if you please. If a disabled Regular dies, he is not even awarded the Stars and Stripes for his casket. The war veteran is. We pay him a wage while in service that is far below the standards set up by the Wage and Hour Act passed in the last session, and we work him possibly 24 hours a day, if need be. His pay has not been materially changed since 1908, and since 1922 we have taken it as the basic law of the land that every enlisted man, because of his greater experience, is entitled to his gratuity on reenlistment. As I have pointed out, it amounts to from $100 to $200 per reenlistment.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. These payments all go to the privates and noncommissioned officers?

Mr. IZAC. These are the lower-paid brackets of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I take it the gentleman's point is that if we have this reenlistment allowance it will make up, in some degree, for the very poor pay that the regular gets; is that it?

Mr. IZAC. It permits those enlisted men to go home every 4 years and see the old folks. Now you are depriving them of that. They have tried time and again to take this gratuity away from the enlisted men. The Army and Navy Departments have begged them to put it in our bills. Every year this committee of Congress comes here, and by ruse or subterfuge, takes it out.

I believe the time has come when this Congress should assert itself and say it will give to our enlisted men the thing that the law provides, the thing to which they are entitled. It is no more than justice for the enlisted man.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. GEYER of California. Is it not the gentleman's opinion that at this time when war is so prevalent we cannot do too much for these boys who are our defense?

Mr. IZAC. I thank the gentleman. We are spending hundreds of millions of dollars—yes, billions of dollars—for guns, planes, and other material of war, but we are not doing anything for the flesh and blood that make it possible for these guns and planes to be properly manned. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment offered by the gentleman be voted down and that the House insist upon its position.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, this is the sixth year running in which this matter has been brought before the House in a fashion which ought to make every Member of this House sit up and listen. Time and again this same item or its equivalent has been knocked out in the House on a point of order, being legislation on an appropriation bill; but time and again the Senate reinserted the item and it has come back here in a conference report.

Up to this date from 1933 the effort has been made to rob these men of this item of their pay which is provided for in the pay law by doing it year by year with the favorite device of saying that none of the money appropriated in this or any other act shall during the ensuing fiscal year be used to give these men the pay to which they are entitled under the statute. The situation before us today is somewhat different; in fact, it is very, very different; for while the Senate has inserted into this conference report the provision which would keep this pay from these men for 1 year, the gentleman from Virginia now moves that this provision be changed, and as has just been read from the desk, he asked the House to vote for a permanent change in the pay law. Hereafter, he says, these men of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps shall never get this pay. This can be done apparently under the rules. Here on a moment's notice there can be shoved before the House of Representatives in a conference report dealing solely with appropriations, a piece of permanent legislation without any consultation with the standing Committee on Military Affairs, without any consultation with the standing Committee on Naval Affairs, who have jurisdiction over legislation governing the pay of the enlisted men of the armed services. This may be technically within the rule, but it is an outrage as a matter of legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us how we are to vote if we want to do justice to the men who reenlist in the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Vote against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California has told you almost all of the story. Let us look at it for a moment; let me review it if I have time. In the Economy Act of 1933 all the servants of the Government took reductions. Members of the House took reductions in their salaries, Members of the Senate, of the Cabinet, all the civil servants, all the enlisted men of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, all the officers—even disabled veterans—took a cut. Since that time every single cut has been restored except the cut inflicted upon the enlisted men of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, and this is that cut.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. Is not this the same principle I have been discussing on the floor of the House, objecting to the Appropriations Committee doing something that the legislative committee had probably previously passed upon and come to a different conclusion upon? If this be the case, I say to my friend that he ought to convince his brethren on the right-hand side to vote with him at this time, as I propose to do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope to convince him, whoever he is. I did not catch the gentleman's name.

Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of military policy. This term "gratuity" is not an accurate description. It is not a gratuity that we are giving to these men or should have given to these men for the last 6 years, it is a part of their pay and is an allowance that has been paid for over 80 years in the Navy and for something like 40 years in the Army. It was renewed in the Pay Act of 1922.

As a matter of important military policy we want good men to continue to reenlist in the Army and the Navy; we want them to stay and rise to the grade of sergeant and first sergeant; we want them to stay and rise to the grade of chief petty officer. It is an old, old truism—and every veteran of this House knows it—that the men with 15, 16, 18, and 20 years' service are the most valuable servants in the whole Government. They are the backbone of our military forces. If you discourage reenlistment you will, as the gentleman from California says, have to enlist more recruits each year; and to train a recruit costs far more than to reenlist a sergeant and give him this reenlistment allowance. These men have not been treated fairly. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, we have said a lot during this session concerning national defense, and in that discussion we have mentioned the privileges and benefits that the commissioned personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps are entitled to. Very little, however, has been said about the soldier, the sailor, and the marine. I want to speak about the man who enlisted in the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps prior to the passage of the so-called Economy Act. He entered the armed forces of his country with the understanding that he would make this a profession and, further, with the understanding he would receive upon reenlistment a gratuity. He so planned his life.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. And he never considered it a gratuity, did he?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. He did not. Along came the Economy Act, denying that man who decided to make the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps his profession this reenlistment allowance. If you want to make a contribution to our national defense, I say give to the men of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, the enlisted men—the sailor, the private, or the marine—this reenlistment gratuity.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois. Mr. KELLER. Is it not true that the whole idea of the Economy Act was that it would be temporary?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Exactly.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. It has been admitted that it cost anywhere from $6,000 to $8,000 to train a man in industry.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. To train a man in the Army would undoubtedly cost a figure approaching that amount?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. Then it is not economy at all.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. No.

Mr. Speaker, may I conclude by saying that when a man enters the United States Navy, after getting out of the training station he is an apprentice seaman and receives the grand pay of $21 a month. Should he reach the rank of first-class petty officer his pay is $85 a month. After completing 4 years in the Navy he is surely entitled to a reasonable allowance upon reenlisting for another 4 years.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman tell us how much money this means each year?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; I am going to tell the Members of the House what this involves in the way of an annual charge.

Mr. Speaker, for 6 years we have had this question rise with reference to the payment of a reenlistment gratuity to the enlisted men in the several services affected. Each time the Congress has said there was no justification for continuing this gratuity, and I say "the Congress," because the ultimate act of both bodies is what the Congress does, brushing aside all of our preliminary maneuvers. What finally is accomplished is what the Congress does as a whole.

Mr. IZAC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I should like to speak a little while.

Mr. IZAC. May I direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the last session of Congress we passed an act to pay the men of the Army this allowance by a good margin.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am speaking about what was finally done. No such proposition was passed by both bodies. This allowance has not been paid for 6 years. There is not an enlisted man in the armed services today who enlisted with the slightest idea he would get this Christmas present from the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman apply the same remark to the enlisted men who have been in the service for more than 6 years?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And who came in with the distinct understanding that the law would give this allowance to them?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I apply it to them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And being caught in the service, cannot get out.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I apply it to them. If he is in the Army, he reenlisted not more than 3 years ago. If he is in the Navy, he reenlisted not more than 4 years ago. So there is not an enlisted man today who can say that when he enlisted under his present enlistment he was promised any gratuity by the Government.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it not true that after the Supreme Court declared those contracts we had with the farmers illegal, we went ahead and appropriated money as a matter of honor to pay them?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We have never appropriated any money to pay these gratuities.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am referring to the farmers who had contracts with the Government, which the Supreme Court held were illegal.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am surprised the gentleman did not say something about sit-down strikes or Attorney General Murphy.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Congress is sitting down so far as these enlisted men are concerned. There is no question about that.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. I would like to ask the gentleman how much this maneuver will save?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It will save between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 a year.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman answer this question: How much would it cost to send new recruits by rail to take the place of these men presently in the service? Would it exceed $6,000,000?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not know what it would cost to send new recruits to take their places. Any figure necessarily would need to be a guess.

Mr. IZAC. If the gentleman will yield, I will give him the exact figures.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I grant the gentleman may know more about this than I do, but unfortunately I have to make a few remarks.

What was the reason for this gratuity in the beginning? The reason was to try to induce men to reenlist in the Army and Navy, in the days when it was difficult to recruit our armed forces, so that we would have soldiers, sailors, and marines in numbers appropriated for by the Congress.

What is the situation today? Applicants for enlistment are standing in line at every recruiting office in the United States. The Government can pick its men and does pick its men.

There is no justification under the high heavens for offering a bonus, a Christmas present, a little wrapped-up package in tinfoil, to men who enlisted 3 or 4 years ago with no assurance or promise of any kind that this gratuity would be given to them.

Mr. Speaker, there is something like $6,000,000 involved in this proposition. How are you gentlemen over here going to explain to your relief constituents when you go back home that in order to try to curtail Government expenses you voted to reduce relief money but voted a gratuity—a raise in pay, so to speak—to people already on the pay roll?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Did not the gentleman just promote a raise in waste on the T. V. A.? [Applause.]

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield briefly to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. I understand this gratuity has been given for 40 years in the Army and 80 years in the Navy. Does the gentleman desire to penalize the patriotism of men who are ready to die for their country and who were deprived of this gratuity through the Economy Act?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; this gratuity has not been given for 6 years. I do not wish to start it again when there is no reason for it. The original reason for giving these gratuities does not exist today.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. What is the comparative rate of pay as between an enlisted man in the Army and a man on W. P. A.?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Of course, there is no comparison at all between the enlisted service man and the man on W. P. A.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Certainly our good friend from Virginia does not want to penalize these men $6,000,000 in order to apply it on the $112,000,000 Gilbertsville Dam?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; I should not put it on that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman believe this is the time and place to legislate permanently on this question?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not care what the House does with it. I have no interest in the matter. There has been a joint Army and Navy board engaged upon studying the question of pay and gratuities and allowances of officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then why hurry?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We have been meeting the matter every year in this way.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not in this way.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Every year for 6 years we have by parliamentary maneuver suspended the payment of reenlistment gratuities.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; that is just so; parliamentary maneuver.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I say, let us see whether or not Congress wishes to continue paying these gratuities. If it does, all right; and we shall have to put $6,000,000 more in the bills affected. If you do not wish to do it, we can vote our views here and now; that is all.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. In view of all these gratuities and the way we have been spending money in these appropriation bills, where are you going to get the money?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We are going to save some of it in the Interior Department appropriation bill when the gentleman brings it in here.

Mr. RICH. We will if we can, I promise the gentleman that.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Is it not true that in the present statutory law, which an enlisted man can see when he enlists, there is a provision for reenlistment pay?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; assuming a recruit looks up the statutory law.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. If he looks at what is posted in the enlistment office, he will find he is promised by laws passed by Congress that he will get this gratuity if he reenlists.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No such promise could have been posted since this gratuity has been suspended.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. It is a promise right there in the law, is it not?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It no doubt appears in the statutory law, but Congress each year has suspended the law.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Then how can the gentleman say that the men who reenlisted did not rely upon laws that were passed by the Congress?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Because Congress for 6 years has refused to provide for the payment of this allowance; that is the reason.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Does the gentleman look at enlistment as a contract with the Government?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Suppose a man enlisted in the Navy in 1927 expecting to receive a reenlistment gratuity at the end of 4 years, and in 1933 along came the Economy Act voiding the contract. Does the gentleman believe that is fair to the individual concerned?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If the man reenlisted since the Economy Act, certainly he did it with notice that Congress had withdrawn that gratuity.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman said a moment ago men are standing in line to join the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. Can the gentleman pick out of any line before a recruiting station a radio operator or a man who is an expert on a 16-inch gun or a man who is an expert on signals? It takes years of training to make such men.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. I would just like to ask that the gentleman hear the gentleman from California, who really knows the facts regarding the economy in this case.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yielded time to the distinguished gentleman from California, and he was the first man to whom I yielded time, but I yield to him again if he wishes to make another contribution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes in order to get this information.

Mr. IZAC. I understood the gentleman to say he would like to have the exact figures on the cost to the Government of training these men.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. IZAC. It costs $256 on the average to train one young bluejacket at a training station for the first 3 months. Multiply that by the number of original enlistments and you have many millions of dollars more than the five to six million dollars you are actually saving by not appropriating it in this bill.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Is it not true that the training a young gob gets in the original training camp to which he goes when he enlists does not begin to finish his training, inasmuch as he is under training for not only the next 6 months but the entire year to come?

Mr. IZAC. I should say it would require more than the 4 years of his first enlistment to make a good torpedoman. We have to have them serve more than one enlistment.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. I wonder if the gentleman realizes that this allowance has probably contributed more in the past to the efficiency of our noncommissioned officers than any other thing done in that connection?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; and I do not believe there is any foundation whatever for such a statement for this reason: The cold facts show that the percentage of reenlistments now is just as great or greater than it was when we gave this little gratuity to the enlisted man.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to recede and concur in the Senate amendments with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia) there were—ayes 29, noes 131.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-nine Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the amendment and on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia) there were—ayes 21, noes 156.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 18: Page 68, line 13, strike out "Sec. 6" and insert "Sec. 7."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1939

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 14, 15, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment before the period insert the following: "Provided, That the amounts claimed and allowed, respectively, in item numbered 95, page 12, of such document, are hereby changed to $7, and that the amount allowed in item numbered 5, page 25, of such document, is hereby changed to $16.15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 10, 13, 16, 17, 18, and 23.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended as to each of such amendments in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On amendments Nos. 1 to 6, inclusive, relating to the Senate: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $10,000 to pay the widow of a deceased Senator, $15,000 for miscellaneous items, fiscal year 1938, $150,000 for miscellaneous items, fiscal year 1939, and $100,000 for expenses of inquiries and investigations.

On amendments Nos. 7, 8, and 9, relating to independent establishments: Appropriates $75,000, fiscal year 1939, for continuing work on the Mount Rushmore Memorial, and appropriates $9,000,000 additional, fiscal year 1939, for grants to States for unemployment compensation administration, all as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 11, relating to New England hurricane damage: Extends the matching provision proposed by the House to include besides the States the political subdivisions thereof, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 12: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, specific mention of white fringed beetles in the text of the appropriation relating to the control of insect pests and plant diseases, Department of Agriculture.

On amendments Nos. 14 and 15: Appropriates $215.47 for payment of damage claims, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 19, 20, and 21, relating to the Navy Department: Appropriates $9,474.92 for payment of damage claims, and $100,000 for the purchase of land, Dahlgren, Va., as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 22: Appropriates $549.58 for payment of damage claims growing out of the operation of vessels, Coast Guard and Public Health Service, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 24, 25, 26, and 27: Appropriates $1,832.22 for the payment of damage claims under the War Department, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 28 and 36: Makes a textual rearrangement, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 29 to 55, inclusive, relating to judgments and authorized claims: Appropriates a total of $1,323,969.70, as proposed by the Senate, and makes two corrections in one of the supporting documents (S. Doc. No. 9).

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments Nos. 10, 13, 16, 17, 18, and 23.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 10: On page 4, in line 23, strike out "$3,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000,000."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia moves that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 10.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McCORMACK moves that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 10.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, my motion brings clearly to the House the question as to whether or not the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget of an appropriation of $5,000,000 to meet the New England situation with reference to fire protection which developed as a result of the hurricane that visited that section of the country last year shall be agreed to. The Budget recommendation was in the sum of $5,000,000. The Department felt it needed, I think, in excess of $8,000,000. The Budget recommendation was a direct appropriation upon the part of the Federal Government. The House Committee on Appropriations reported out $3,000,000, provided the States affected matched that money. We have no controversy with that aspect of the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, and that is not in dispute between the two Houses. I offered the amendment in the House increasing the amount from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000, and it was defeated by a close vote in the Committee of the Whole. The Senate has increased it from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000. If ever there was an appropriation of $5,000,000 warranted to meet an emergency situation, it is this appropriation that is now before the House. If the necessity of appropriating $3,000,000 is recognized, as the House has recognized it, certainly if the evidence is overwhelming that $5,000,000 is necessary, I submit we should appropriate the $5,000,000, and I submit that my amendment should be acted upon favorably.

The argument that the appropriation of $3,000,000 for all practical purposes means $6,000,000 is a weak argument. The amendment also provides that if any one of the States has already appropriated money, and it has been used, that that can be taken into consideration in meeting the matching provisions of the pending bill. Therefore, it necessarily follows that $6,000,000 is not directly or indirectly available. It is considerably less than that. The fact also remains that New England needs in excess of $5,000,000, substantially in excess of $5,000,000, to meet the immediate situation that confronts us. We have over 14,000,000 acres of land with fallen timber in New England, in parts of Maine, in all New Hampshire, and Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and Long Island. All of those States have been visited by the worst hurricane that ever visited any section of our country in its history. We have helped those in the Dust Bowl. I voted to help them and the argument was made that this is a precedent. It is not essentially a precedent. That was the main argument made when this matter was before the House, after it was reported out of the Committee on Appropriations. We have helped the victims of other hurricanes by helping the States, and then the States helping private owners.

We have recognized the necessity of making appropriations to help communities that have been visited by some terrible catastrophe, from the angle of fire protection and sanitation. I have never refrained from voting for such an appropriation, and no matter what the outcome may be of my motion at the present time, as long as I am a Member of this honorable body, I will not refrain from voting for appropriations where any community of our country is visited by a great catastrophe, whether it be dust, flood, hurricane, or fire. This is a reasonable appropriation. Five million dollars is necessary. I just voted to help out those concerned with the T. V. A. I question no man who voted otherwise, but from my angle, viewing it as I did, I felt that the national considerations involved warranted my vote. I voted against it last year, and why? Because it was a 100-percent Federal contribution and other sections of the country were not getting 100-percent Federal contributions. I reasoned that if it is right to give Gilbertsville 100-percent Federal contribution, it is right to give California, it is right to give Ohio, the Mississippi Valley, Pennsylvania, or New England a 100-percent Federal contribution on flood control. I have assisted others and I now ask that the case being made out for New England, that the House vote to recede and concur, giving to New England the $5,000,000 originally recommended by the Bureau of the Budget, and which it so badly needs to meet the fire hazard that constantly exists throughout the area visited by the hurricane. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time in support of the motion of my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]. I shall be very brief.

First, as to the severity of the storm: I hold in my hand a scientific article appearing in Harper's magazine for the month of January. It is written by a professor of astronomical physics at Princeton University. The article emphasizes the extreme difficulty of anyone appreciating the damage done by this hurricane if he has not come in close contact with it. I quote two sentences from this article:

As regards loss of human life, it (the hurricane) stands apparently fourth among similar storms in the United States. As regards property damage, it was far and away the worst in all history.

What is the purpose of this appropriation? I want to cut away some mental underbrush if I can in that respect, because I think there is much confusion in the minds of many as to just what this sum of money is to be used for.

This money is not asked for hurricane relief. It is asked to eliminate the tremendous hazard of fire which has grown out of that hurricane. It is asked to minimize, if it cannot eliminate, that great hazard growing out of the September hurricane which swept over New England, smashing down its forests over miles and miles of territory, piling great trees on top of each other like jackstraws.

One quotation from a letter to the President by the Acting Director of the Budget, Mr. Bell:

It is intended by the proposed direct Federal action merely to reduce the worst of the emergency hazards created by the storm to a point affording reasonable insurance against disaster following disaster; to reopen blocked roads; clear roadside strips; restore fire detection and communication facilities; and supply temporary essentials of fire prevention, such as patrols and posting.

That is the purpose, and the sole purpose, of this appropriation which is now in question.

The Forest Service made a very careful survey and recommended a Federal appropriation of $8,750,000. A hearing was held before the Budget Bureau. The sum recommended was cut by the Bureau of the Budget to $5,000,000. The matter came to the House. The House further reduced the amount to $3,000,000 and placed the appropriation on a matching basis. The bill went to the Senate. The Senate restored the Budget figure of $5,000,000, but left it on a matching basis. Every dollar put up by Uncle Sam must be matched dollar for dollar by one of the six or seven States involved in this appropriation.

All that we ask at this time is the allowance of the Budget figure of $5,000,000 on a matching basis. We ask it, Mr. Speaker, in the hope of eliminating a fearful fire hazard, which today, with the approach of spring, literally menaces towns and entire communities in the New England States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of the advice given to me by the late Honorable Harry Fenn, who was a Member of the House. He said:

When dealing with a problem that involves a certain section of the country, go to the Members from that section of the country and get their advice, and ninety-nine times out of a hundred follow that advice.

For that reason I want to record my part of Connecticut as very much in favor of this increased appropriation and say to you that of all of the New England States we, fortunately, had the least damage.

Visualize New England with its dirt roads leading up into the midst of a wood lot, and in that wood lot in many cases hospitals and sanatoria, one that I vision with 200 crippled children, with acres and acres of down timber surrounding them. I say to the Members of this House that if next summer we have a dry summer and a fire starts in that area the loss of life from that fire will make the loss of life from the hurricane as nothing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to state to the Members, because there has been some misunderstanding about this appropriation, that not a penny of the appropriation goes to the farmers. It will be used entirely in taking care of the fire hazard, under the direction of the Federal Government with Mr. Silcox, head of the United States Forest Service, in charge. In building fire towers, making fire roads, and lanes in every fire prevention way.

I wish to bring out the fact that while the calamity occurred primarily in New England, it is a national calamity in scope, and if New England is wiped out, or parts of it, by fire, the purchasing power will be tremendously lessened and the whole Nation will suffer. Industries will be injured and thousands will be unemployed.

I also wish to point out to the Members, as the last time some of them did not understand, that there is much more fire hazard when the timber is down. If any of the Members care to look at this picture, they can see by this that the fire by the down timber is already laid, and only a match or a lighted cigar or intense heat will start the tinderbox, which is New England today.

Mr. Speaker, again I wish to emphasize the fact that the forests are scattered here and there, and if a fire starts in one piece of forest land, it can jump to another, and practically the entire State of Massachusetts might really readily be devastated.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] has spoken of the number of sanatoria that are in the midst of woods. It has been said before also that there are many hospitals in those wooded sections. I have them in my own district. I have here an article which appeared in Collier's of June last. The expert is asked in that article how fast can fire travel. He states that he was standing 1 mile away from a fire. It did not look as if that fire would spread. In only a moment's time the fire was where he was standing. With a high wind, with everything dry as it will be in the spring, with Massachusetts a tinderbox, with the timber down and the fire laid, you can well see what will happen.

I wonder how many of you have been near or in a forest fire? Those who have been realize the tremendous heat from that fire. I repeat we are in a very congested area. This is national in scope. It will affect every one of you all over the country. You with farm lands, you with your industries in the West and in the South. We are not pleading alone for New England. We are pleading for the entire United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, after the pleas that have been made by my colleagues for the larger amount carried by the Senate amendment, it perhaps is unnecessary for me to add anything to their arguments. All I can do is to repeat the need for the larger sum we are asking as represented by the amount the Senate voted and which the Budget recommended.

We are making this plea, Mr. Speaker, not on the ground of aid to the people who lost money through fallen timber, we are asking it to provide protection against the terrible hazard of fire.

I know of no better authority than the Forest Service. Mr. Silcox and his able assistant, Mr. Tinker, in correspondence with several Members and in their testimony before the Appropriations Committee have been very insistent on the actual need for $5,000,000. They say that even this amount is not sufficient to obviate the entire fire hazard, but it will suffice to give protection to various affected areas to an extent that will be a material aid. This is the plea that is being made to you today.

The timber actually down in the New England States covers 150,000 acres, and the estimated cost of removing the fire hazard of down timber is $7,968,000. The area to be protected by this appropriation is 14,000,000. So you see the actual area protected is very great.

Reference has been made to the congested condition of New England. I am sure all of you realize the situation. We have not the broad areas of the West, the area in New England is very congested. Mr. Silcox in his testimony before the committee brought out the fact that he himself saw a children's hospital almost surrounded by this fallen timber. Unless this fallen timber is removed before the fires that may come in the spring dry period, the hazard to hospitals, public institutions, and homes is tremendous. Whole towns may be destroyed with serious loss of life.

The department is absolutely frightened at the prospect of what may happen in the dry period of the late spring.

This money is to be used to cut roadways through these areas, to establish fire towers, and to afford all the protection possible within the limited appropriation. The department at first was figuring on $8,000,000. They asked for $7,000,000. This was cut by the Budget to $5,000,000, and the committee saw fit to reduce it to $3,000,000. So, if we accept the sum recommended by the House and do not adopt the Senate amendment we will be getting only three-sev-enths of what was actually asked for by the experts of the department, who know their business. Mr. Silcox has been through forest fires in the West. He knows the possibilities by experience, and certainly we can ask for no better counsel. We should follow the advice of such men as Mr. Silcox and Mr. Tinker.

It is on the ground of humanitarianism that we are asking for this larger sum, even though that itself is too modest. Nevertheless, in cooperation with the States and municipalities directly affected we are going to try to overcome some of the difficulties that have arisen as the result of the hurricane. Those of us who represent the sections through which this hurricane passed, as I do, and as does my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts—we represent the directly affected areas—and really we are not exaggerating when we tell this House that unless very definite aid is secured the hazards of the next spring and summer are simply appalling. We are unable to face the situation alone. We ask, therefore, that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and concur, as moved by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSEN].

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very deeply the need for this appropriation, but may I call to the attention of the membership at this time the fact that while New England needs this $5,500,000 to rehabilitate that territory, we out in the Middle West also need something, my friends, that is in the next section of this bill, and that is the item for the control of grasshoppers. I do not care at this time to couple the eradication of grasshoppers with the relief of human misery in New England, but I do ask the Members from the New England area to remember that while I am supporting them, and while other farmers from the Middle West are supporting them in their request, we would like their protection against the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] in his attempting to strike out the next item that was inserted by the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, up to the present time we are on record in the House as having appropriated in the neighborhood of $4,000,000,000 so far in this session of Congress. Of that huge sum practically none has been directly appropriated for agriculture, the most important one business in America today. Now we have before us the Senate amendment to give the Department of Agriculture sufficient money with which to combat the grasshopper infestations which do millions of dollars of damage to farm crops every year.

What is the reaction of the administration to this needed help for the farmer of the Nation, and for the first direct appropriation asked for agriculture? We have the answer in the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] in seeking to lower the amount allowed by the Senate by more than 60 percent.

Yes, they can spend money freely in behalf of extra T. V. A. dams, entailing eventually over a hundred millions of the taxpayers' dollars in this very same bill. They can appropriate millions for a new Census Building to add to the vast accumulation of masonry here in Washington, D. C., instead of cutting down on some of the multitude of bureaus that are unnecessary. We have also helped New England to rehabilitate its area destroyed by the hurricane of last fall. But, Mr. Speaker, when we farmers of the Middle West ask for $5,000,000 to help save a hundred millions in crops this year, we do not even receive the courtesy of a roll call on the floor of the House.

When will the majority in control of this House wake up to the fact that, until agriculture prospers, we will never have lasting prosperity in this Nation? When will the present administration realize that they are selling the American farmer down the river in order to appear good neighbors to the rest of the world?

We see our own people losing their farms by foreclosure simply because no farmer can farm and stay in business unless he has a little profit for his work any more than a businessman can do so. We cannot compete with products produced by oriental labor earning 25 cents per day and shipped into this country to take away our own American market to which farmers, laboring men, and businessmen of this country, their own country, mind you, should have by all moral rights the first chance in which to sell our goods and not have to rub elbows with coolies while so doing.

What can we do to again put agriculture on its feet and enable the farmer to again purchase the millions, yes, billions of dollars' worth of manufactured products he needs and would buy if he but had his proper share of the national income?

First. We can close our ports to any agricultural commodities or manufactured products that can be grown or produced in sufficiency by our own people.

Second. We can guarantee cost of production to the farmer for that portion of the commodities grown by him consumed in our own country. The bill to accomplish this is before the Agriculture Committee at this time and, with a few minor amendments, can be made to accomplish what the Soil Conservation Act has failed to do, and that is to give us as farmers the same break that today our Nation gives industry and is attempting to give to the laboring man.

Third. Let us give to every farmer an opportunity to own the farm he operates. It is disastrous to the well-being of our Nation to have an annual migration of renters or tenants from one farm to another, often in connected circles.

Fourth. Thousands, yes, tens of thousands, of farmers have hanging around their necks old Federal seed and feed loans, mostly from the drought period. I ask of you Members of the House whether or not it would be best to consider these loans as relief and have them canceled. Many a farmer is still trying to keep off of W. P. A., and a little help right now might help keep a lot of them paying taxes rather than having the taxpayers support them.

You Members of Congress need only to take a trip through the great States of Iowa, Minnesota, Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio to see what is the matter with our great Nation today. Once prosperous farms, now with buildings unpainted, fences run down, and a general appearance of dilapidation, testify mutely that the farmer has his back to the wall. W. P. A. could be wiped out and these men could again get the jobs most of them want if the farmers of America but had the money to buy the paint, fencing, autos, radios, new machinery, new clothes, and every article under the sun that can be thought of which they badly need. The wheels of industry would begin spinning again, our mounting public debt would start the downhill slide it surely needs very shortly, and America would again be America and not the laboratory to cure all the ills of the world, with the farmer being used as the guinea pig for untried experiments in new dealism.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations recommended $3,000,000 under this item because of the damage occasioned by the New England hurricane. This allowance was recommended by the subcommittee and by the full committee, and was ratified by the House when the bill was under consideration. The Senate increased the amount approved by the House to $5,000,000. I should like, before we go on record for this increased appropriation, for all of us to understand just what is involved. In the first place, there is involved no question of relieving human misery; nothing of that kind is involved. In the second place, to make any appropriation at all, as we are proposing to do here, is to set a precedent that I am afraid will plague us in the future.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not right now. In just a few moments I shall yield.

Mr. Speaker, we have had disasters in other parts of the country and the Government has extended aid, but never such aid as is contemplated by this appropriation. We had a great flood out in the Mississippi Valley and in the Ohio Valley, but in neither instance was the Government ever asked to go in and rehabilitate private property.

That is what we are proposing to do in this pending proposition.

Let us see what has happened. This was a great disaster and there no doubt is need for rehabilitation work in New England. What has the Government done thus far to meet the situation?

In the first place, we provide in this bill $500,000 for the Forest Service to clean up Government-owned lands up there, and it is appropriate that the Government should remove fire hazards which exist upon its own property. That amount is in the bill as it passed the House and has not been disturbed by the Senate.

In the second place, we have put at the disposal of the damaged area 41 C. C. C. camps, which have been operating up there, and we are told they have done a splendid work and are doing a splendid work in removing the fire hazard and cleaning up the land.

In the third place, we have put at the disposal of that stricken territory more than 15,000 W. P. A. workers, and we are told by these gentlemen representing the New England area that in this instance, at least, the W. P. A. has been doing a swell job.

In the fourth place, through the medium of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the Government is guaranteeing to the owners of property in that territory, whose timber has been laid upon the ground by the storm, 90 percent of the value of their timber in the form of loans.

No other disaster has occurred in which the Congress has been more liberal and more considerate than it has been in connection with the disaster that has befallen this splendid, fine territory. Further than that, let me say that if a mistake has been made at all it was the mistake of putting into this bill any money for going upon private property at all, whether it be in New England, Virginia, or any other place in the country.

In this bill the House provided $3,000,000 for cleaning up the debris on private land.

Mr. McCORMACK, Mr. HEALEY, and Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that on June 7, 1924, we passed an act, section 2 of which authorized the Congress to appropriate money to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of protecting timber and forest lands against fire.

Last year we appropriated $2,000,000, which was spent. We have been appropriating many millions of dollars all these years, which is a complete precedent. Certainly this is in line with that.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman has stated that the W. P. A. and C. C. C. enrollees have been used in cleaning away this brush and timber. The Chief of the Forest Service states it is necessary to supplement their work, that there are not enough men in those organizations adequately to take care of the situation. He so told the gentleman's committee.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. He so stated to our committee, and we provided $3,000,000. We further provided that these funds should be matched by the States. So the $3,000,000 provided by the House, matched by similar funds put up by the various districts affected, gives $6,000,000 instead of $5,000,000, and by putting in this other $2,000,000, to be matched by the States, you are making available twice the amount the Budget estimated was necessary to take care of the stricken areas.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will there not be a great amount of salvaged timber or lumber up there which will be valuable?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Should that not be taken into consideration?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I should think so.

Mr. HEALEY. May I say to the gentleman it is not the timber itself. It is the brush that is heaped up on acre after acre that constitutes the fire hazard. It is necessary to remove this brush in order to guarantee that there will not be a greater calamity than there was at that time, should a fire occur.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman did not state that this is to be used for fire towers and roads. In the West you have fire towers and fire lanes in your forests. You have protection. We have no such protection in New England. Also our houses are built in the timber, as well as our hotels and some of our industries. There will be a great loss of employment if we have a big fire up there. This is all under the supervision of Mr. Silcox, of the Forest Service. We have not a thing to say about it, and the farmers do not receive a penny.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Last year in my section three men lost their lives fighting a fire. There would be human misery up in that country if a fire broke out. May I ask the gentleman this question: Do they grow grasshoppers on private land?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think so, and I still think my idea of trying to get grasshoppers up there in New England to eat up this hazardous debris is a good one.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HULL. In answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, may I say that there may be grasshoppers on private lands, but that is because the breeding places are on the public lands out in the Far West.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman can get thousands of acres of this slash for whatever he may think it is worth, if he will just take it away.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I feel that the services which the Government has put at the disposal of this fine part of the country in which our friends naturally are so much interested, supplemented by $3,000,000 out of a depleted Treasury, is certainly very liberal treatment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia) there were—ayes 101, noes 41.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and nine Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 202, nays 147, not voting 84, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 13: On page 5, line 25, strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$5,417,000."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia moves that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 13 and concur therein with an amendment as follows: "In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert '$2,250,000.'"

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this amendment.

Mr. Speaker, the history of this matter is as follows: The Bureau of Entomology, which has to do with trying to destroy what is perhaps one of the worst menaces with which the West is confronted, after very careful study, estimated it would require the sum of $6,000,000 to take care of the situation properly. You must bear in mind that emergencies arise within 24 hours, when thousands of tons of poison have to be secured at once, and the Bureau needs the money available. This Bureau may be trusted with money, as is shown by the past, because they have on hand the sum of $700,000 that was unexpended. This shows they used the money only in case of necessity. One can never tell when an emergency may arise.

Some facetious remarks have been made on the floor of the House with reference to grasshoppers and the damage they cause, but if you ever saw a field of grain that was destroyed by pests such as grasshoppers and Mormon crickets you would realize the importance of what I am speaking about. The Bureau of the Budget recommended in excess of $3,000,000, yet in the face of what seems to me uncontradicted testimony the committee arbitrarily cut this figure down to practically the figure called for by the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. The Senate of the United States raised that figure to the amount estimated by the Bureau of Entomology to be necessary, and that amount we should have.

This problem is not local to the West but affects every State in the Union.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Is it not a fact that the great breeding places for these crickets and grasshoppers are on land owned by the United States in the gentleman's State and in my State?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. Thanks for this contribution. Then when these pests get hungry they come over into our fields and eat our grain and put our farmers on relief. It is just as long as it is short. We had better vote these few millions of dollars and give them to the Bureau of Entomology to take care of an emergency if it arises. In my own State alone, in the eastern end of Montana, because of lack of sufficient funds to buy poison over $6,000,000 damage was done within 48 hours.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. Is it not a fact that the Bureau of Entomology has made examinations for the last year or two and, based on the number of eggs it has found, estimates there is going to be a more severe infestation of grasshoppers this year than there has ever been in the history of the Nation?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is my understanding.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. DEMPSEY. What is the gentleman's suggestion with reference to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am glad the gentleman mentioned it. If you are in favor of providing this Bureau with sufficient funds to take care of this situation, you will vote down the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is another motion to be offered?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have here a preferential motion to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 13.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is it not true that the amount suggested by the gentleman from Virginia is totally inadequate to do the work the Bureau desires to do, and that we in the West know must be done?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Absolutely; not only that, but you cannot anticipate just exactly what is going to be needed. These grasshoppers come from the public lands into our fields and destroy our grain, then eat up our alfalfa. When they destroy our crops we have to come on our knees to Congress and ask money for relief. I ask the Members of this House who believe in giving us a chance to protect ourselves against menaces such as these crickets and grasshoppers to vote down the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, and then we will take up for consideration the motion I have at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The chairman of the committee made the statement to the Members of the House that one of the reasons for cutting the amount of the appropriation is that all the money provided last year was not used. Nevertheless, on several occasions last summer, I telephoned long distance from New Mexico to the office of the Secretary of Agriculture and was advised that there was no money available—that it had all been used. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor against this increase and I am from the land of grasshoppers. I am a member of the Appropriations Committee and I am here primarily to help save expenditures. I am glad to take this opportunity to make my first speech at this session on reducing on a thing that is right in my back yard. Some economize just on things that apply outside. It is disturbing that this $5,000,000 went through for New England. I did not like the idea of grasshoppers and New England going together for $5,000,000 each in the other body. I do not agree that we need this $5,000,000 for the destruction of grasshoppers as we use it, and I hope it will not be voted. They had $700,000 last year that was not used. Farmers get the poisoned feed and apply it. That is the only way it is used.

The Senate insisted on their position in our conference and a Member of that body said, "We do not want any of this appropriation if we cannot have $5,000,000 and exterminate the grasshopper." This shows how unfamiliar he is with the program. Nobody is trying now to extinguish the grasshoppers. Climatic conditions alone will have to do that. All the Government does is to furnish certain feed and the farmers use that and they had $700,000 for feed that the farmers did not use last year. So what is the use of appropriating $5,000,000? I am against it, and I think we ought to begin to economize.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I am sorry. I am tired of hearing this wild hysteria for extended national defense and every other thing in the 2 months that we have been in session here. There should be economy in the expenditure of Government money. What did the election teach us? Did it not teach us that we should cut down Government expenditures? When are we going to start? Let us start now, whether the menace is at our back door or not. Let us start to save money, especially when we do not need to spend it. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, there is not much of a grasshopper infestation in my own congressional district, but there is a very distressing condition in two of the adjoining districts, and there must be some relief given these people.

I am surprised at some of the statements made by the last speaker, the gentleman from Kansas, who said that on account of the fact they had not used $700,000 of the last appropriation we do not need what is asked in the Senate provision. Mr. Speaker, that is the very reason why you can safely vote this $5,000,000, because under the language of the bill it will not be used unless it is needed. [Applause.] If there is again a $700,000 excess appropriation, then under the language of this bill itself it will not be spent. Every dollar of the money will be spent with economy and with wisdom and in view of what is actually needed.

Now, what is the condition? For years you have been appropriating small sums of money to take care of grasshoppers and similar infestations. But you have not stamped out the infestation. The proposal now is that you shall try to stamp it out and quit making further appropriations. So then I speak for economy. I speak for those who wish to finally end the threat of a calamity that is destroying the safety and security and happiness of the lives of many farmers in the West. It is cheaper to stop this menace at the source than it is to pay doles and relief and the expense attending economic disaster.

Did you ever see a cloud of grasshoppers spread over a county or a community so wide and so thick and so deep as to obscure the noonday sun? They come like a thief in the night, like the "Assyrian who came down like a wolf on the fold," as you read in your old fifth reader, out in Iowa. They come, apparently, from nowhere and they settle down upon your farms and your homes and they devastate whole communities and counties. In an hour everything is gone and the fields are as bare and brown as the top of this table. Then the people come back here asking for relief. Oh, go out there, as I have done, and see some of these places. You will see cornstalks no higher than an inch or two because the grasshoppers have eaten every green thing. There are no crops. The poor devils out there, and I use this word as a term of endearment and love, have nothing to live on. Babies, children, old, and young are hungry and ragged and they come down to this Congress and ask it to give them a little dole so that they can get a few crumbs in order that they may eke out a mere existence through the winter, and then hopefully try again next spring to raise a crop.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOPE. How much does the gentleman feel this appropriation should be?

Mr. GILCHRIST. Well, the Senate put it in at $5,417,000, following the advice of the Committee on Agriculture and the Bureau of Entomology. Now, my friend from Montana is proposing that we stand by that figure for the present; and I just wish to say that this $200,000 that the gentleman from Virginia is raising the present appropriation will amount to nothing at all. The gentleman is proposing to raise the present appropriation from $2,000,000 to $2,200,000. Why, that extra $200,000 will not accomplish anything. We are crying for bread; do not give us a stone. The pending motion ought to be voted down in order that a decent appropriation can be made for this purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, there have been some statements made here which would lead one to believe that in the minds of some people this matter of grasshopper infestation is something funny. I live in northern Colorado. We were not specially injured in my particular part of the country. However, they had an invasion of crickets in southern Wyoming, about 60 miles from my place. I made a trip over there, and I want to tell you that after these crickets had passed over that grassland it was as bare as this floor, and where you generally would be able to drive from 50 to 60 miles an hour you were compelled to drive down to 20 to 25 miles an hour because the road was filled with crickets, and they made the pavement so slippery that you could hardly drive at all. They say that $700,000 was left. That is true, and I will tell you why. In the State of Colorado we used all our appropriation plus nearly half a million dollars of the farmers' and the counties' and the State's money, and that money was left because we did not receive it until it was too late to use it. Once the grasshoppers have started to fly it costs from 10 to 15 times as much to kill them as when they are small or not yet hatched.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Will it not cost the Government more money for relief if this is not granted than if we allow $5,000,000?

Mr. CUMMINGS. At an expense of $500,000 last year in Colorado it is estimated we saved $10,000,000 worth of crops, and of course when the crops are killed they must go somewhere. I saw grass 6 or 8 inches high, and when these grasshoppers passed over that grass you could see them on the ground just as plainly as you can see the glass on this table. There is nothing left. We are not asking for money to waste, and I venture to say for every million dollars invested there will be fifteen million or twenty million saved. I am not trying to be an alarmist. I am telling what actually exists. Men who know about them dug in the ground and have counted the eggs and say that the infestation this year will be the worst in history.

Mr. DOWELL. The argument of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] that because there may be a surplus crop we ought to permit the grasshoppers to travel over some sections of the country and take all of it in order to reduce that surplus is not a very safe or sound argument in the interest of the farmer.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am one-quarter Scotch, but I think the gentleman from Kansas must be about six-quarters Scotch.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, in the last session, when this bill was before the House, I spoke for a few minutes. To you people who have seen only the destruction by fire or flood, it may seem that grasshopper destruction does not mean very much; but I say to you, as one who has seen all kinds of destruction by the elements and other malignant forces of nature, that I feel destruction by the grasshopper is the most deadly thing I have ever seen. In New Mexico some 200,000 acres of agricultural land, insofar as crops and grasses were concerned, were totally destroyed last spring. I personally called the Agricultural Department and pleaded with them to give us some additional money in New Mexico. We were spending much more from State and private funds than the Federal Government provided, and I was told by the Secretary of Agriculture's office that there was no money available; that the money had been expended. Now I find that some $700,000 was unexpended, and the reason they told me it was unavailable was that it could not be used for pests of a known character. In other words, it was held back for some emergency with which they had had no previous experience. That is the information I got from the Department. The Director of the Budget disagrees with the Committee on Appropriations, the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine disagrees with the Appropriations Committee, and certainly we men, representing the States affected, disagree with the committee. As the gentleman from Connecticut told you here today, we in the States affected by these destructive forces should have more understanding of the problem than someone who has never come in contact with it.

There is not a man from a State affected who is going to use any of this money personally; none of us wants any money wasted; we are not going out and just spread this money around. We will spread poison to eliminate the grasshoppers, and, unless we get a sufficient amount, we will have to come back here next year, the year after, and the year after that, until the Congress recognizes that the battle cannot be won through halfway measures or efforts handicapped by parsimony.

Mr. DOWELL. And is it not true that this pest is worse in some seasons than in others?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Very much worse.

Mr. DOWELL. And it may be a great deal worse this time than when all the money was not expended?

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is true.

Mr. HOPE. Is it not true that the estimates of the Bureau of Entomology in the past have been remarkably accurate as to the amount of grasshopper infestation for each of the last 5 years?

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is true; they are specialists.

Mr. HOPE. Is it not true also that they estimate this year the area of infestation will be greater than in previous years?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; that is the estimate based on observations and surveys made by experts who fully understand this problem.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, there has been only one argument really advanced against this proposal by the Senate, and that is the argument that there was something left in the fund last year. That is an unfortunate argument, because it would serve notice on the Government departments that if they failed to use money appropriated we will cut them down the next time. As a matter of fact, that kind of argument should never be used against an appropriation which is for the prevention of disaster. Nobody can tell in advance how much money will be needed under the conditions that may develop during the year. Last year they did not use $700,000 because some of the anticipated emergencies in some areas cleared up. The fact that they had this money left is the best possible argument that there is a bureau which will not spend money unless it is needed, and if it is developed that they really need the full amount, they will have it. You cannot call a special session on notice of grasshoppers.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Is it not a fact that if the money is appropriated, if the infestation comes it will be there, but if not appropriated there is no other way of getting it?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Absolutely. It must be appropriated at this time.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. I am for the gentleman's proposal and I am very much interested in it, but I want to ask the gentleman whether he has noticed that in recent weeks we have been served these Kansas grasshoppers down in the House restaurant as Maine lobsters? [Laughter.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will come where I have been, I can show him some Mormon crickets that will be a better brand for serving.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Is it not the gentleman's understanding that the Department of Agriculture is in favor of this appropriation?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes; absolutely. They requested it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the motion which is pending adds $250,000 to the amount previously reported by the House, and is supported by a Budget estimate on account of white-fringed beetles. I am not particularly familiar with that form of insect, but that seems to be a new one that has been found, and a Budget estimate has come up for that. So we are proposing funds to combat them.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST], appealing somewhat to our emotions, wanted to know if we had ever seen a dark cloud of grasshoppers flying over. I would like to remind you of a dark cloud hanging over the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not right at that point; no.

We are appropriating money that we have not got. Maybe that ought to make a little difference. Not only that, here we would be appropriating money that is not needed.

Now, what are the circumstances? We went all over this thing in the last session of Congress. The grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and chinch bugs descended upon us just as they have today. We appropriated $2,000,000. Our beloved friends from the West came back late in the session and got a Budget estimate for $950,000 more and told us if we did not do something about it the grasshoppers would eat them up entirely. So the heartless Appropriations Committee and the heartless Congress cut that $950,000 to $700,000, and we appropriated it. Not one red copper penny of it was needed or used.

I do not know what the Department of Agriculture told the distinguished gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] but the money was lying there in the Department of Agriculture, available if they needed it. Two million nine hundred and fifty thousand dollars is available under this bill for the control of these insects. If the Department of Agriculture will take it and use it early in the season they may be able to control them. They cannot exterminate them. They never have made any effort to do that. At least, they never have been able to find anything that really would exterminate them. They say that nothing but adverse weather conditions would do that. This amount of money in this bill, this early in the season, is all that is needed by the Department of Agriculture.

May I remind you just in passing of another thing. That is, if it is not enough, if the grasshoppers should get by, every bushel of wheat they eat is insured by the United States Government.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes, I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. About 228,000 wheat farmers in this country have their wheat insured and are the only ones who are in the soil-conservation program and are eligible for insurance. So a small fraction of the farmers are insured.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They will be the lucky ones. Possibly they will encourage others to take advantage of this opportunity the Government has given them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia) there were—ayes 118, noes 96.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks for the yeas and nays. Those who favor taking this question by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-four Members have arisen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that a quorum is not present, which is always a constitutional question. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty-one Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been previously demanded and refused. The demand is out of order.

The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, amendments Nos. 16, 17, and 18 relate to the same matter, the administration of the wage-hour law, and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 16: Page 6, line 19, after the word "division", insert "to be expended under the direction of the Administrator."

Amendment No. 17: Page 6, line 21, strike out the word "it" and insert in lieu thereof the word "him."

Amendment No. 18: Page 7, line 2, strike out the words "Secretary of Labor" and insert the word "Administrator."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia moves that the House insist upon its disagreement to amendments of the Senate Nos. 16, 17, and 18.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COCHRAN moves that the House recede and concur in Senate amendments Nos. 16, 17, and 18.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this is one amendment that does not involve money. [Applause.] As the bill left the House the money appropriated for the administration of the wage-hour law was to be controlled by the Secretary of Labor. The Senate amended that provision so that the money would be in charge of the Administrator.

In making this motion I want it distinctly understood I cast no reflection upon the Secretary of Labor.

Last year we were told by the businessmen of the country that if we passed the wage-hour bill we would be further interfering with industry, we would ruin business. The President selected as Administrator a very able man. I had never heard of this man prior to his selection, have never met the gentleman up to this hour, but if ever a man taking charge of a new office conducted himself in a way to win the admiration and confidence of business in this country, it is Mr. Andrews, in charge of the Wage and Hour Act. [Applause.] I say this man is entitled to have charge of the appropriation allocated by Congress to carry out the work of his division.

There is nothing else I can say, but I again want to impress upon you that I am not casting any reflection upon the Secretary of Labor. I am asking that this man who is responsible to the Congress for the conduct of that office, to have charge of the appropriations we vote to run that office.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As I understand the gentleman's motion, it would put the money in the hands of the man who administers the wage-hour law.

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes. The money would be expended subject to the decisions of the Administrator and not subject to the instructions of the Secretary of Labor, if my motion is adopted.

Mr. MAY. Does this appropriation bill leave it in the hands of the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. COCHRAN. The Senate amendment does not. If my motion is agreed to, then the House accepts the Senate amendment, which means the money will be placed in the hands of the Administrator, Mr. Andrews.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. Is that not a well-established practice under the law and applicable to other departments as well?

Mr. COCHRAN. There is nothing established in this House. You do something today and change it tomorrow. There is no well-established practice here. [Applause.]

Mr. DINGELL. Is not the same thing applicable to the Bituminous Coal Commission?

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not know. We are dealing with this office, not the Bituminous Coal Commission.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. NORTON. Is there any good reason why this change should be made with regard to the Wage and Hour Division any more than with any other division under the Labor Department? How about the Immigration Division?

Mr. COCHRAN. The Immigration Bureau is an entirely different set-up.

Mrs. NORTON. In what way?

Mr. COCHRAN. In my opinion, it is an entirely different set-up. I repeat what I said twice before. I am not casting any reflection on the Secretary of Labor, but I do think when a man has a record in this new office such as Mr. Andrews has made, he should be put in charge of administering the funds that we appropriate.

Mrs. NORTON. The Administrator has been in charge of that particular division only a very short time, and while I have the highest regard for Mr. Andrews' ability, nevertheless, I fail to see why his division should be singled out any more than any other division within the Department of Labor. There is no conflict between the Department of Labor and the Wage and Hour Administrator.

Mr. COCHRAN. My answer to the gentlewoman from New Jersey is that he has made such a record that he stands out as a public official, one who has gained the confidence of legitimate business. That is my reason.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with my good friend from Missouri when he says this does not involve some money. We do not do many things here that do not involve the expenditure of money. This does involve the expenditure of funds, but that is not of primary importance.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Members may vote upon this in a somewhat impersonal way. May I just put the cards on the table, speaking in the parlance that most people understand. If you wish to take the opportunity here to take a crack at somebody, I cannot stop you from doing that. [Laughter.] My good friends over on this side laugh. If the Senate amendment is concurred in, they are going to laugh louder than that, because it will be construed that our party is repudiating a Cabinet member, the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. May I state the way it appears to me? For a great many Members of the House this is a rather embarrassing situation. If the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is agreed to and the bill goes back to conference, does not the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] believe that in all probability the conferees can agree on language that we may vote up or down, without the embarrassment of having personalities brought into the matter?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not think there is any doubt about that. I wish to follow that by making another statement, if I may. I have before me the Fair Labor Standards Act. If you will read it, you will find that from section 4 on through there is no doubt about the fact it gives complete control of the management of this division to the Administrator of the Fair Labor Standards Act, which is as it should be. For the purpose of budget accounting the funds are carried through the Department of Labor.

I think there is much merit to the proposition that the Wage and Hour Administrator, Mr. Andrews, should have very large if not complete control of the funds under which he operates. I agree with the statement that he has made a fine record. He made a very fine impression on our committee.

Mr. Speaker, if my motion to insist on the House's disagreement to the Senate amendments prevails, I feel very confident that when the conferees go back into conference they will be able to work out language that will give the Wage and Hour Administrator control over his funds, which he should have, and bring the matter back to the House for its consideration. I may say further I will promise that you will be given the same opportunity to vote upon it as you have had to vote upon it today.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that last year those who opposed the wage and hour bill did so originally on the ground it placed too much authority in the hands of an administrator, and for this reason it was placed under the control of the Department of Labor? Now they are assuming a position in opposition, which is in direct contradiction to their attitude taken when the bill was originally pending before the House.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think the gentleman is correct in his statement.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Is not the position of the gentleman from Missouri completely out of line and out of harmony with his theory of reorganization that we will hear so much about in a few days?

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Is the gentleman taking the position that the adoption of the pending motion means a vote of lack of confidence in the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not want to take that position, but the gentleman knows what construction will be placed upon such a vote.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman in his own mind any doubt but what that would reflect the true attitude of the membership of this House?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would not wish to say that; no. I may say to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia that the fact the Secretary of Labor has budgetary control over these funds is because the Congress put it there. It does not lie with very good grace for any Member to come in and cast aspersions on or vilify or censure a Department for doing a thing that the Congress itself has charged it by law with the duty of performing. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Did I say a word that cast an aspersion upon the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Of course, the gentleman did not. I was speaking generally, not personally.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Administrator of the Division under the Department of Labor, Mr. Andrews, has never asked for this power?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not that I ever heard of.

Mr. RANDOLPH. There is no controversy between him and the Secretary of Labor, as far as the gentleman knows?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not know of any, personally.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Further, is it not a fact that although Mr. Andrews, as all of us agree, is doing a good job, there is no necessity in this instance of turning aside from the regular procedure? Does the gentleman believe there is any such necessity?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I believe it should be done more deliberately. I believe the conferees can work out language that will settle this intradepartmental conflict between the Wage and Hour Division and the Secretary of Labor in a manner, I am confident, that will be satisfactory to those Members of the House who wish to see it settled, because obviously it is not now satisfactory to some.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. What I am concerned about is not personalities as between the Secretary of Labor and the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division but is this a different attitude than we have pursued with respect to all other departments, if we do not give Mr. Andrews control of the funds that are necessary to operate his division?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman will find there are many departments in which divisions are given control of their own funds. In some departments they are and in some they are not. In this instance, however, Congress gave the Department of Labor budgetary control of the accounts. One reason for it was that the Department of Labor has an accounting department and a budget department. If you put this all under Mr. Andrews, certainly you will have to set up a division for budgetary control.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. The Administrator is well qualified and can be trusted with the control of this money?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. The gentleman sees no reason why he should not have the control of expenditures?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I believe this can be worked out so both will be satisfied, if the House will give the conferees a chance to do it.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were—ayes 122, noes 105.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Speaker appointed as tellers Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia and Mr. COCHRAN.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 137, noes 93.

So the motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPARKMAN). The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 23: On page 9, beginning in line 8, strike out all down through line 17.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the House placed in this bill an item of $3,500,000 to construct a new census building. It was not necessary, and the matter was debated here in the House at the time. It is apparent that this organization by crowding into buildings that will be open to it by the time it will need them can find space enough to take care of its activities. There is one set of buildings over on Twenty-fifth and C Streets out of which the Public Health Service will move before the Census Bureau will need space for its activities. This space will be larger than the entire space the Census Bureau had in the old buildings over here in the Mall at the time of the 1930 census. Under the circumstances, it seems to me it is absolutely ridiculous for us to spend $3,500,000 to take care of a temporary activity employing perhaps 7,500 persons for 6 or 7 months, when we could just as well get along without this expenditure.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Could this Census Bureau building be completed in time for the 1940 census?

Mr. TABER. They tell us it will be completed in time for them to put into it some of the overflow in 1941 and 1942, when they are doing their compiling. It would be mostly in 1941.

The idea of this is just to erect another building which there would be a demand to fill with governmental employees after the temporary employees were out of service, and we should not do it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It seems to me they are building only another temporary building.

Mr. TABER. It is a cheap type of building. They claim it is more of a permanent building than some of the temporary buildings that were put up at one time. This will be a steel building, I may say. However, I do not see any possible excuse for building it at this time.

I hope the House will today show some evidence of a spirit of economy and accept the Senate amendment. The Senate has shown a disposition on this bill to do one thing that is right. It has thrown out the appropriation for this $3,500,000 building. It is absolutely ridiculous for us to try to put it back. I hope my motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment will be adopted and that we can save this $3,500,000 for the Treasury.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, here is an opportunity for the House to rectify to some little extent some of the mistakes it has made earlier in the day; in fact, it is a chance to save a few of the dollars we have appropriated unnecessarily today. Maybe we all have had a hand in that.

Mr. TABER. Not I. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Well, my friend from New York is the only perfect Member here, I am afraid.

The idea of putting up another building in Washington! That is an easy and a trite thing to say, but our friends over here on the left-hand side cannot take any credit for trying to keep buildings out of Washington. All this development on the Mall here started under a Republican administration. I think you deserve credit for it rather than censure. I think this is the greatest Capital of the greatest Nation in the world and I think we ought to have nice buildings and a nice city.

We are renting today in Washington 120 different buildings, for which we pay $3,432,000 a year rent. Now, I know what the immediate reply to that will be—wipe out all of these unnecessary departments or bureaus and you will have plenty of room, but that is not true. [Applause.]

Now, get a good fill of that applause, because that applause comes from a feeling late in the afternoon of good nature when you are fatigued and not thinking clearly. [Laughter.]

We paid, under the last Republican administration, 25 percent more for rented quarters for Uncle Sam than we pay now. Now, applaud that.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. RICH. I just figured out here from the Government statement, and you have been going in the red since July 1 at the rate of $384,114.16 every hour since that time. Now, it is time to stop a lot of these Government propositions, such as constructing buildings and creating bureaus and everything else of that sort. You promised to do it—why do you not do it? [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Now, after this rude interruption I should like to proceed. [Laughter.]

There is not a businessman in this House today who, if confronted with the same proposition the Government is confronted with today, would not go out and put up this building. We have got to have the census. I say we have got to have it; we certainly should have it. It cannot be compiled anywhere except in Washington. It is one of those activities that must be carried on at the seat of government. Social security and railroad retirement, for instance, are dependent upon an accurate census. Space is needed for this purpose. After this work is over, and I hope that we may be able to disband some of these unnecessary independent agencies—and I am ready to vote to cut the unnecessary ones out—but even if that were done, a cheap, utilitarian type of building of this sort is badly needed by the United States Government.

It has been shown in our hearings that we have stored in expensive office space, for which we pay more than $1.25 a square foot, files of the Government that ought to be moved out of that space and into buildings of this type.

This type of building, to cost three and a half million dollars, is not a monumental building. It is a utilitarian type of building, to be erected down here in southwest Washington, at the back of the Mall, where it will be convenient to the various departments, and when the census gets through with it we shall be able to move other departments into it and stop the payment of some of this expensive rent being paid in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is not this the first instance within the recollection of the gentleman where the Senate has ever actually reduced an appropriation made by the House?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Well, they do not do that very often, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Is the gentleman aware that due to the fact there is no such space in Washington, it is necessary for the Census Bureau to rent an eight-story building in New York to do this work?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that.

The department has had a careful survey made and they testified before our committee—and no one has challenged this statement—that there is not any space in Washington that can be obtained for this purpose. The only alternative is to build a building of this sort, and I may say that the cheapest bid they could get on furnishing such space was $400,000 a year.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. TABER. I called attention to the Public Health buildings at Twenty-fifth and C Streets that will be vacant in time for this operation, which would give ample quarters.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Those old buildings up there are firetraps.

Mr. TABER. They are fireproof.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Oh, the gentleman knows they will not be available for this purpose and that they would be entirely inadequate, and even if they were available, it was testified before our committee that there was not a foot of space in Washington that could be obtained to augment that space, because the Government has rented so many buildings.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 117, noes 125.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 172, not voting 104, as follows:

Mr. LEMKE changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion was rejected was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

RIVERS AND HARBORS COMMITTEE—PERMISSION TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF HOUSE

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House tomorrow and next day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, Mr. STARNES of Alabama, Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. THOMAS F. FORD, and Mr. O'TOOLE were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a minute and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, the practical issue involved in the Tennessee Valley Authority, of which this Gilbertsville project would become a part, is as simple as it is tragic to the citizens of my district. But the tragedy of T. V. A. is by no means confined to the people and the industries of my district. The people and the industries of many other congressional districts suffer as a consequence of this uneconomic folly, which is a wholly unjustifiable drain on all the American taxpayers.

Coal and railroads constitute two of the great industries in my district. A majority of my constituents are dependent, either directly or indirectly, on these two great industries. And the T. V. A. is one of the most menacing of the many unequal and economically wasteful competitors of these industries, which already are confronted with a desperate situation.

Through the T. V. A. the Federal Government is deliberately destroying the property and the jobs of thousands of citizens of my district and many other districts in Pennsylvania and other States. Under the guise of doing a public service, the Federal Government, through T. V. A., not only is destroying properties valued at millions of dollars without compensation of any kind but is destroying thousands of jobs without any compensatory benefits to the men and women made jobless in consequence of this short-sighted policy.

The T. V. A. is just another example—a glaring and tragic example—of the cockeyed New Deal policies which have knocked the Nation's economy galley-west and crooked.

There can be no justification for the destruction of an industry and the jobs dependent upon it, in one section of the country, for the benefit of the citizens of another section. And to make matters worse, this is being done at the expense of the taxpayers in every section of the country. Such a proposition is so fantastic that it seems almost unbelievable. Yet that is exactly what you propose to promote by this provision for another costly extension of T. V. A.

Something far worse than insult is added to injury. In destroying the properties of the bituminous coal mine owners and the investments of the security holders, the Federal Government, through T. V. A. naturally is destroying the jobs of thousands of miners. Jobless miners and their families, in want and privation, are being thrown on the relief rolls in increasing numbers. That imposes an uneconomic and unnecessary burden not alone on the citizens of my district but on the citizens of the other 434 congressional districts in the United States. The same thing applies in a lesser degree to the railroad properties, the investors in railroad securities, and the railroad workers as well as the American public generally.

It is beyond my comprehension that Democrats, whose districts are just as dependent upon the coal and railroad industries as my own, should stand on this floor and not only defend T. V. A. but vote for this proposal. And that statement applies especially to the Democratic Members from Pennsylvania, whose districts and whose people are so adversely affected by T. V. A.

I trust these gentlemen realize that the taxes paid into the Federal Treasury by their constituents will be used to destroy the industries upon which they depend for a living. When Democratic Members of Congress vote to use the money of their own people to destroy themselves, I believe we have reached the height of absurdity. In view of that, I believe we can very well ask, Do these gentlemen represent the people of their own districts, or are they merely "rubber stamps"? We will have an answer to that question when the next election rolls around.

Thus, in the name of so-called cheap power, is it proposed to destroy an aggregate of hundreds of millions of dollars in invested capital and wages. It is proposed to threaten the very existence of thousands of workers on the railroads and in the mines in order to make this present to the citizens of a few Southern States. There is no justification for such procedure.

This new business venture of the Federal Government in generating and distributing cheap electricity began with Boulder Dam. Then came T. V. A. These were followed by a trio of immense hydroelectric power projects in the Pacific Northwest and scores of lesser publicized hydro power schemes, either promoted or financed by the Government.

The Federal Treasury—which means the American taxpayers—has been tapped to the tune of a thousand million dollars, paid out or promised, in pursuit of the New Deal's spectacular experiment of putting the Government into business. It is called cheap electricity, because half, and often more than half, the capital cost is written off the books under the pretense that it is for navigation, national defense, flood control, or fertilizer. It is called cheap because the project managers do not have to reckon the interest, and little, if anything, in lieu of taxes.

When it comes to a question of the national defense, the railroad and the coal industries form a far more vital part of that than T. V. A. and the rest of these hydroelectric projects combined. And yet, if the Federal Government continues to foster the unequal and economically wasteful competitors, through direct appropriation or subsidies of some sort not enjoyed by the coal and railroad industries, these industries will be weakened, if not destroyed, when this country is confronted with a war emergency, of which we hear so much now. Looking at the T. V. A., which is the question before us today, we find that when Congress launched this experiment in 1933 it turned over to this new agency properties which have cost more than $127,000,000. The T. V. A. was given $50,000,000 out of the Treasury. Many in Congress and the country thought that fund was to be T. V. A.'s working capital and T. V. A.'s total cost to the taxpayers. It was then presented as a self-supporting and self-liquidating enterprise.

But year by year, the President and Congress have added to this huge outlay. Now Congress is called on again to thrust its hand into the taxpayers' pockets for T. V. A. The pending conference report carries $39,000,000 more for T. V. A.

If the House accepts this conference report, it will make T. V. A.'s total cash from the Treasury to date $270,000,000, over and above the Wilson Dam and the other property at Muscle Shoals, which had been built and paid for before T. V. A. was ever conceived by the New Deal.

But the end of tapping the Treasury for T. V. A. is nowhere in sight. If we agree to the $17,000,000 now at issue, to proceed with the Gilbertsville Dam, to commence the Watts bar dam, and to initiate a dam at Coulter Shoals, we do so with the full knowledge that T. V. A. will require $150,000,000 of additional funds in the years to come to carry these dams to completion.

This additional $150,000,000 will be over and above the money Congress will be called upon to appropriate for T. V. A. next year and more and more every year for a program to which no end is in sight, and for activities outside its electric-power division.

T. V. A.'s profits from its electric-power division are like this administration's balanced Federal Budget—it is just around the corner, always next year.

The T. V. A.'s power system, according to T. V. A.'s own figures, has operated at a loss from the beginning down to date. T. V. A. now claims it will be out of the "red" this year, but it arrives at that happy conclusion through book-keeping and hocus-pecus that would do credit to Insull.

T. V. A. writes down its investment in electric-power facilities to something less than 50 percent of their true cost. Then it omits entirely any charge for interest on the investment. Its allowance for depreciation would be a joke, if this were a laughing matter.

T. V. A. figures its electric-power business operated at a loss of $310,172 in the 12 months to last June 30, and a cumulative total loss of $748,665 since it commenced operations.

T. V. A. figures its electric plan investment as of last June 30 at $68,000,000. Interest at the rate of 3½ percent would be $2,383,441, so with interest added, the operating loss last year was roundly $2,700,000.

T. V. A. projects an operating profit this year of $1,361,000, without interest. But the moment you include the interest, this profit disappears, and instead there is a loss of nearly $2,000,000.

So much for this "noble" experiment for the benefit of one section of the country at the cost of another and at the expense of all the American taxpayers.

I wish to present this data. In a memorandum in opposition to further funds for additional hydropower dams, presented to Chairman WOODRUM, of the House Appropriations Subcommittee, it was stated:

The extent of this displacement of coal by T. V. A. hydropower and the resulting loss in jobs and in wages is a matter of very simple arithmetic. The coal equivalent of 1,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity is 710 tons. That is the quantity of bituminous coal (at the rate of 1.42 pounds per kilowatt-hour) required to generate that quantity of electricity.

T. V. A. reports that it sold 806,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy in the last 6 months of 1938. But that is only a starter. It projects its annual output upon the completion of what it describes as its 10-dam system at 8,100 kilowatt-hours. Simple multiplication, 8,100 times 710 is 5,751,000 tons of coal prospectively displaced by T. V. A. hydropower.

It has been estimated—and the estimate never challenged—that 1 ton of bituminous coal, by the time it reaches its final destination, represents 1 day's work and wages for one man. At that rate, T. V. A.'s complete electric output in terms of coal will destroy 5,751,000 man-days of employment annually.

At all events, we know for a certainty that the coal tonnage, as above stated, represents more than $11,000,000 to the producers, of which 60 percent is labor pay rolls, and almost $13,000,000 in railroad freight revenues, of which 44 percent is labor pay rolls. So what we are dealing with in this situation is a potential direct wage loss of more than $12,000,000 annually in the mines and on the railroads.

In a supplemental statement on T. V. A. to the Senate Appropriations Committee it was said:

We wish to point out also that T. V. A.'s prospective $80,000,000 purchase of the facilities of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., as currently reported in the press (February 14, 1939), adds to T. V. A.'s system five hydropower dams and three steam generating plants heretofore owned and operated by the private company.

In the light of this development, there would appear to be less reason than ever for the construction by T. V. A. of the three additional hydropower dams which are at issue in the present appropriation.

A little further along, this memorandum continues:

So far as the bituminous-coal industry is concerned, it stands to lose a quarter of a million tons annually, at a minimum, in consequence of T. V. A.'s acquisition and prospective shut-down of these steam plants in Tennessee. This is something over which we have no control, but the fact remains that if more T. V. A. hydropower dams are hereafter constructed it will aggravate a situation that, from the standpoint of the coal industry, is already tragic.

The victims of this situation are the thousands of coal miners and railroad employees in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, and West Virginia, whose jobs will be permanently destroyed by the permanent displacement of this coal tonnage. But the whole country suffers through the resulting loss in purchasing power and the intensification of the pressure upon the unemployment relief rolls.

The people of my district are too well aware of the "intensification of the pressure upon the unemployment relief rolls." That states the case altogether too mildly. In one of the counties in my district in which coal is the chief industry, 40 percent of the people are on relief because of the depressed conditions in the coal industry—conditions which have been brought about and aggravated in consequence of unregulated, subsidized, and Government-owned competition.

These miners have no jobs because the markets that made them jobs have been destroyed by Federal-fostered projects, such as T. V. A. These miners have no money to buy food, much less power generated by T. V. A. or other projects.

And sadder still is the fact that many of these miners find it next to impossible to fill other jobs than the one they were trained for since their youth. It is difficult to transplant the bituminous coal miner and start him in another industry. I would be shirking my duty to the men, women, and children of my district if I failed to oppose this provision with all the vigor at my command.

God knows the plight of the coal miner and the railroader is desperate enough now. Let us not further aggravate this condition by pouring more millions into T. V. A. and similar projects until the coal industry and miners' jobs are utterly destroyed. Let us call a halt on this program to destroy the industries and the jobs in one section for the benefit of another section. Let us end these subsidies which result in unequal and economically wasteful competition, which have brought about a crisis in the coal and railroad industries. Let us give these industries what opportunity they have left to stand on their own feet and give jobs to American citizens whose greatest desire is honest work that will make them self-supporting.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, 3 days ago each Member of Congress received a copy of the book Secret Armies, by John L. Spivak. In the same mail each Member received a letter from Walter Winchell, columnist and radio commentator, under a New York Mirror letterhead, which read as follows:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN —: In my column of Thursday, February 16, I said: "Orchids to Secret Armies (Modern Age is the publisher). * * * Every Congressman and Senator should read it—and wake up!"

Upon reading parts of it again, I decided, as part of my effort to preserve our American form of democracy, that I should send a copy to you. It is going forward to you under separate cover.

On a broadcast recently I said: "If you have fascism or communism on your mind, you cannot have Americanism in your heart." If only all of us felt like that!

Good wishes.

WALTER WINCHELL.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have read Secret Armies and find it full of distortions and fabrications. In short, it is filled with Communist trash. I am surprised that Walter Winchell would lend himself to the spreading of such propaganda in America.

I do not doubt Mr. Winchell's patriotism or his intentions in placing Secret Armies in the hands of this Nation's legislators. In fact, I confidently believe him to be a splendid citizen who has used his talents and facilities to promote patriotism and Americanism in the past. Therefore, it is amazing to me that he would distribute such a document as Secret Armies. I can hardly imagine Mr. Winchell becoming a messenger for "red" propaganda.

My purpose in taking the floor today is not to spank Walter Winchell, but to inform Members of Congress regarding the author and publishers of this book. The gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] on Monday suggested that the Congress "should find out a little bit more about the matter," meaning, of course, the distribution of the book Secret Armies. I have undertaken to obtain this information, which I herewith place in the hands of Congress.

John L. Spivak is a writer for the Daily Worker, official organ of the Communist Party in America. He is a writer for the New Masses, another Communist publication; writer for the South Today, Communist publication; writer for Sunday Worker, Communist organ. Spivak is also listed as contributing editor of Negro Liberator, a Communist publication, the editorial board of which is made up of James Ford, Communist Party candidate for Vice President in 1936, Harry Haywood, William Patterson, and Robert Minor, all notorious Communists.

Spivak is notorious for his attacks on all patriotic societies. He is a member of the Communist Party and served as a member of the so-called Committee of Professionals to support Browder and Ford, Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates, respectively, on the Communist ticket in 1936. He is a member of the National Committee for Defense of Political Prisoners—defenders of "red" aliens ordered deported from the United States.

Spivak is a sponsor of the Jewish People's Committee, organized by Mike Gold, Communist leader in New York City, supporter of the National Committee to Aid Victims of German Fascism in 1934, members of which included Alfred Wagenecht, Henri Barbusse, and Robert Dunn, in addition to other notorious Communists.

Spivak once toured the country as a lecturer, his subject being Europe Faces the Barricades. He traveled with William Browder, Communist, and Ben Myers, Chicago secretary of New Masses. Tickets for his Chicago lecture were advertised for sale at the Communist bookstores in that city.

Spivak wrote Georgia Nigger, which was challenged by the members of the Georgia State Prison Commission. The Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution, leading newspaper of the South, in its issue of November 22, 1932, carried a statement by Judge Vivian L. Stanley, secretary of the Georgia Prison Commission, charging that Spivak bribed "a Seminole County prisoner to pose for the photographers" in order to "portray allegedly inhuman treatment to Georgia convicts." Judge Stanley also charged, according to that newspaper, that "Spivak posed as an agent of the Federal Government to obtain a blanket pass to all our convict camps."

February 17, 1937, Spivak lectured in Chicago under the auspices of the Communist movement. His subject was the Significance of Violence in Industry.

Among Spivak's diatribes against patriotic societies was an article in the American Mercury magazine in which he attacked the American Red Cross. The charges made by Spivak were denounced as absolute lies by officials of that organization. He also attacked the American Legion in several of his lectures, claiming that the Legion would be found in the front ranks of the Fascists.

Some of Spivak's lecture subjects were Plotting America's Programs and Rich Jews Who Finance Anti-Semitic Organizations. The information used in these lectures was published in the Daily Worker and New Masses, with Spivak as the author. These lectures were delivered before Communist audiences and the funds raised at the lectures went to New Masses.

Spivak will begin another lecture tour tomorrow, March 2, for the Communist International Workers' Order, which has been denounced by the Dies committee. The lectures will continue through March 19. Spivak's schedule will take him to Allentown, Philadelphia, West Brownsville, New Kensington, Scranton, and Pittsburgh, Pa.; Youngstown, Cleveland, Akron, Toledo, and Canton, Ohio; Newark, N. J.; Brooklyn, Buffalo, and Rochester, N. Y.; and Detroit, Mich. The title of his lectures will be "Secret Armies." His tour is being widely advertised in the Daily Worker, beginning with the February 21 issue. His schedule appears in a large space in the issue of February 21.

Last year Spivak appeared before a special commission named by the Massachusetts State Legislature to investigate un-Americanism. At that time he posed as an international correspondent and a representative of religious, labor, and fraternal groups. During his appearance before the commission Spivak made similar charges to those printed in his book, Secret Armies. Among those attacked were Henry Ford, who was described as being in the pay of Hitler; Walter S. Steele, of the National Republic magazine, and others.

The Massachusetts commission reported, however, that "when pressed for sources," Spivak "fell back upon the privilege of a 'newspaper man' to protect his sources," and "from the quality of his testimony, and considering his background as a Communist propagandist for years past, there is no doubt in the minds of this commission—Massachusetts legislative committee—that he was brought here—Boston—specifically to make statements he could not support."

The report also accused Spivak of appearing before the committee "to create a definite break to divert attention from investigation of communism and to provide sensational publicity." It further charged that "sometime ago Spivak went to Cuba and wrote for Communist publications a series of articles concerning Communist organization and activity in the Caribbean."

The commission's report further stated that—

Probably as scurrilous a thing as Spivak has yet written was an article on the American Red Cross, which appeared in a nationally circulated magazine, the American Mercury. By suppression of material facts and by distortion he sought to prove this great humanitarian organization to be other than it is, and to be a form of money-getting racket. The charges and insinuations which Spivak made in the article have been disproved.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to enlighten those Members of Congress who have read Secret Armies on Modern Age books and their publishers.

Modern Age books are advertised in all Communist publications and find a wide market among the "reds" in America. The official organ of the Young Communist Pioneers, the New Pioneer, contained a page advertisement of Modern Age books in its issue of May 1938. In that issue an appeal was made to the Communist International Workers' Order to obtain subscriptions to the Modern Age book service. The advertisement states that the "Modern Age book service has become a sensation."

Another advertisement for Modern Age books is found in the Communist publication Soviet Russia Today, December 1938. Among the books advertised are those by John Strachey, the British "red," who was recently halted at the gates of America by the Department of Labor; School of Barbarians, by Erika Mann; I Like America, by the avowed Communist, Prof. Granville Hicks; One-fifth of Mankind, by Anna Louise Strong, editor of the Moscow News, a Communist publication printed in Moscow, Russia; Japanese Terror in China; Practical Birth Control Methods; From Spanish Trenches, the Wall of Man, favoring the Spanish "red" front. Labor Spy Racket; Red Feather; and Adventure in Steel.

Ersine Caldwell, who has openly supported Communist candidates for public office in the United States, author of Tobacco Road, is now trying his luck with Modern Age books in Have You Seen Their Faces? an insult to the South.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this book, Secret Armies, which Mr. Winchell has so willingly and solicitously placed in the hands of Members of Congress, is an attack on the Nazis. I have no objection to anyone reading it, but I believe that when they do they should know the background of the author and publishers.

In fact, I believe we should get all the facts as to what the Nazis and Communists and all other un-American organizations are doing in America. I feel the same as Winchell:

If you have fascism or communism on your mind, you cannot have Americanism in your heart.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] has introduced in this Congress a bill to prohibit the arming, drilling, and disciplining of all foreign groups. It should have the support of every Member of Congress.

This legislation should also have the valuable support of Walter Winchell and other radio and newspaper commentators.

It is to be regretted that Walter Winchell has become a ballyhooer of "red" propaganda in advertising Secret Armies over the radio and in his newspaper column. He should withdraw his endorsement of "red" Spivak's latest book and should inspire support of the bill offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] instead. With Walter Winchell's assistance, directed in the right channel, Members of the Congress can be "awakened" by the folks back home.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a resolution on the war debts adopted at a mass meeting held in Philadelphia, Pa., on February 19, 1939, under the auspices of the Irish Republican War Veterans of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE CENSUS BUILDING APPROPRIATION

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Chicago Daily News.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, as stated in my remarks on this appropriation of $3,500,000 for a census building in Washington which I made in this House on January 20 last, I am opposed to the appropriation not only for the reasons then stated, but also for these additional facts as follows: This is a matter of dollars and cents and should also be one of common sense. There are some interesting and incontrovertible elements which, although technical, we should all keep in mind in considering this measure.

If Uncle Sam goes ahead with the construction of a census building—overlooking for the moment the questionable wisdom of providing a permanent structure for a temporary need—this is how we would come out in the matter of operating and maintenance costs.

The total cost of the building—$3,500,000—included $330,000 for the land; cube, 7,190,000 cubic feet; gross area, 540,248 square feet; net, 417,000 square feet.

Computations—similar to the Experience Exchange Report of the National Association—on total operations for the census building, give us a figure of $1.486 per square foot of net rentable area. In arriving at the total for this building, it is kept in mind that the Federal Government pays no direct local taxes, so an estimated figure is used. Congress appropriates $5,000,000 per annum toward the expenses of the District of Columbia or at the rate of 38 cents per square foot on the 13,121,738 square feet of office space which the Government owns here. This figure is therefore used for the tax.

Water is not included as the District of Columbia supplies it without charge to Federal buildings. Insurance is carried by the Government itself, so allowing for commissions, the estimate is computed on two-thirds of the cost of such insurance to privately owned office buildings in the District of Columbia.

Now $1.486 a square foot multiplied by 417,000 feet of rentable area is a lot of money to spend year after year when there are 36,000,000 feet of vacant office space around the country.

According to the hearings in the committee's report on page 23, Mr. Guthridge stated for the Government that they had received bids and that the low bid was in the amount of 93 cents per square foot. In other words, private capital here in Washington could build and rent to the Government for 55.6 cents per foot less than the Government's cost, as shown by the above figures. Furthermore, on page 26 of the hearings, the witness stated that our average cost for rented space here in Washington is 95 cents, although further on he states that office space costs the Government about $1.50 per square foot.

However, and this is important, the Government figures show their average cost for space rented outside of Washington from private parties costs only 74 cents per square foot. Why not avail ourselves of this space, of which there is now nearly 36,000,000 square feet available in the larger cities throughout the country?

Under leave to print in the RECORD, I wish to insert an editorial from Col. Frank Knox's Chicago Daily News, under date of January 31, 1939, as follows:

HOUSE THE CENSUS HERE

Because an expanding bureaucracy has exhausted all Washington housing facilities, Congress is asked by the New Deal to appropriate $3,500,000 for a new building to accommodate 7,500 temporary census employees. These workers are needed to compile the reports turned in by 150,000 field workers in next year's decennial census.

The Capital's housing situation has long been acute. Despite the administration's $100,000,000 building program, emergency agencies are now quartered in private buildings of all description, from banks to garages. There is no denying that, if 7,500 additional employees are to be quartered in Washington, new facilities are necessary.

But, of course, it is equally undeniable that these employees could be housed elsewhere. There are plenty of cities in which no such acute housing shortage exists; cities which, like Chicago, could fit 7,500, or for that matter, 75,000, Government employees into their population structures and housing facilities without ever noticing their existence.

In fact, Chicago would make an ideal headquarters for the census. It is close to the country's population center. It is easily accessible by every modern means of travel and communication. It has ample office space available at much lower rentals than prevail in Washington. Owners of such properties, burdened as they are by heavy tax loads, would welcome tenants whose credit was guaranteed by the Federal Treasury. It would be particularly fitting that the New Deal, which has been so largely responsible for these increased tax burdens, should thus help to ease them a bit.

Best of all, it would establish a desirable precedent in the direction of Federal decentralization. The anomaly of preserving all our Government departments at a remote eastern outpost like Washington has grown steadily more apparent since the day our western frontier was extended beyond the Mississippi. Why do not some of our Midwestern legislators get behind this suggestion? Not a single convincing argument can be summoned against it.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON] is entitled to recognition at this time. [After a pause.] The gentleman does not appear to be in the Chamber.

Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

THE LEA BILL IS A CONSPIRACY AGAINST THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, adequate low-cost transportation is essential to the continued development of the United States and the well-being of our people. In some sections of our country we have great surpluses of the products of agriculture and industry for which there is no sale. In other sections there is suffering because of the unsatisfied demand for these products which cannot be carried to the section where they are needed because of the prohibitive, and I may say excessive, costs of transportation. Distances in the United States are so great that transportation costs are now, and always will be, a highly important problem of the Congress.

It is my honestly considered opinion that the development of our internal waterways and our coastal harbors is now helping solve this acute and distressing problem. A feature in this solution is the 3,000,000 miles of public roads and highways which the States and Federal Government have improved. Over these the transportation development of trucking is helping solve this problem. For this privilege, be it said, the trucks are paying $417,510,000 annually in taxes. This is 47 percent of the value of the truck property. The railroads pay in taxes $328,240,000, or 1.8 percent of the value of their property.

America owes much to the railroads, for the railroads have played an important and essential part in our national development. I am not going to discuss the mismanagement and financial sins of the railroads, nor the oceans of water poured into their financial set-up by the Jay Goulds and Jim Fisks of the past. The average Member of Congress is fully aware of that performance. My purpose in getting this time is to call the attention of the House to the Lea bill, H. R. 2531, now before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

RAILROADS ASKING MONOPOLY

This bill, if it becomes law, will create a monopoly of transportation in America by placing the complete control of all types of transportation under the Interstate Commerce Commission. This body is railroad minded, and is not concerned with the transportation problems of the farmer or the industrialist. Its chief concern is to enable the railroads to continue to pay dividends and interest on their bonds and stock which represent the railroads' swollen capitalization on physical assets, much of which is obsolescent.

The Lea bill proposes legislation which will destroy waterways and trucks and, in the long run, the very railroads themselves. Transportation is not a conventional nor minor problem to be passed up lightly by the Members of Congress. It vitally concerns the well-being of the man in industry, both the employer and the employee, and the farmer who tills the fields. Both of these groups have been forgotten men under the auspices of the I. C. C., which, in my judgment, has shown neither vision nor courage in the handling of this great problem.

GREATEST LOBBY IN HISTORY

I am not going to review in detail what has led up to the present situation of the railroads. I am going to prove to the House and the country that the stories that have filled the press concerning the horrible financial plight of the railroads are propaganda put forth by the greatest organized lobby in the history of the country. I urge the Members to steel themselves against such propaganda and to consider carefully the effect upon the American people of the enactment of this pending bill.

RAILROAD EARNINGS

I desire to call the attention of the House to the net earnings of the railroads during the past decade and ask the Members to judge for themselves whether the real facts justify the depressing effect which railroad propaganda has made on the public mind. During the last 10 years we have had years of prosperity and years of depression. Let us examine the facts and see whether the railroads have not fared as well, and in most cases better, than other industries. To do this we must determine the basis upon which railroad income should be calculated. The railroads, in their propaganda, use the inflated book value of the roads. This, according to the report of the President's Committee of Six, was $26,063,943,472 in the year 1937—see table 13, page 81, Report of the President's Committee of Six.

The House should remember that the President's Committee of Six was entirely made up of railroad men, with three representing the managers and three representing the brotherhoods. The railroad management and their employees were back from the wars, but neither the public, waterway, nor truck transportation had any representation on that committee. This, of course, negatives the influence and standing of that committee, for a committee composed entirely of railroad men should be expected to make a report as favorable to the railroads as possible. However, it is significant to note that even upon the inflated value of railroad properties the report of this hand-picked committee shows—see table above cited—that the railroads made a very substantial net profit after taxes and all other expenses were paid, even during the deepest years of the depression.

THE APPRAISED VALUE

It might be contended that the net profit should be calculated upon the appraised value of the railroad property. For years the I. C. C. has had a large force of experts at work to make an appraisal of the real value of the properties of the railways. In a recent proceeding the I. C. C. found the value of railway properties, as of January 1, 1937, to be $20,340,000,000—see 226 I. C. C. 41, 163.

I want the House to note that the net operating income of the railroads for the year 1936 was $673,160,477. Based upon the appraised value of the properties, and not upon the face value of their bonds nor the par value of their stocks, the railroads yielded a net return during that year of 3.1 percent. What industry did better than that during that year? Did agriculture yield a better percentage of profit? The House knows that agriculture in that year had its back to the wall, facing inevitable bankruptcy.

Did business do better? Bank deposits paid but 2 percent. In comparison with this rate of return, the steel industry lagged. The fact is that commerce and industry generally during that depression year of 1936 showed no such earnings.

The House should remember that the railroads do not pay dividends upon the book value of their property. They do not pay dividends upon the appraised value of their property, nor do they pay dividends upon the market value of their stocks. The fact is that the railroads pay interest only upon the face value of their bonds and dividends upon the par value of their stocks, no more and no less, and hence the percentage yield of their income should be calculated upon that basis.

THE PROSPEROUS YEARS

What was the report of the President's Committee of Six? If you will look at table 18, page 86, you will find that the railroads had a total amount of stocks and bonds in the hands of the public in the year 1937 as follows:

Bonds	$11,250,140,000
Stocks	7,068,863,000
Total	$18,319,003,000

In order to understand how the railroads fared during the early part of the last decade, let us examine the annual reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission and see what the net earnings were. They were as follows—see Statistics of Railways of the United States, published annually by the I. C. C., statement 34 less statement 40 for each year; also statements 17 and 21 for each year:

Year	Stocks and bonds outstanding	Net operating income	Rate of return
			Percent
1926	$18,234,312,000	$1,252,642,640	6.9
1927	18,136,691,000	1,101,037,627	6.1
1928	18,510,583,000	1,206,005,358	6.5
1929	18,679,707,000	1,286,396,721	6.8

AVERAGE 4 YEARS 6.6 PERCENT

The term "net operating income" is naturally confusing to the layman. Net operating income, when understood, is the income left over in the railway treasury after all the operating expenses of the railway have been paid. In other words, it is the income from railway operations which is available for the payment of interest on bonds and dividends on stocks. This, however, does not include all the railway income from which interest and dividends may be paid. Many of the class 1 railroads have substantial incomes from investments. The report of the Interstate Commerce Commission for 1936 shows that 5.55 percent of the net income of the railways came from investments and sources other than operating income.

The years 1926 to 1929, inclusive, were 4 prosperous years. During these 4 years the combined class 1 railroads made a net operating income of $4,846,052,346. Out of this enormous net income during these 4 years the railroads earned enough to pay the interest upon their bonded indebtedness, and in addition enough to pay cash dividends to their stockholders, as follows—see table 19, page 87, Report of the President's Committee of Six:

Year:	Cash dividends
1926	-----	$399, 243, 963
1927	-----	411, 581, 093
1928	-----	430, 677, 138
1929	-----	490, 125, 673
Total	-----	$1, 731, 627, 867

It is interesting to note that after the payment of interest on their bonds during these 4 years the railroads, out of their earnings, paid cash dividends on their common stocks averaging 6.2 percent annually on the par value of their stocks, and it is curious to note that the bonded indebtedness of the railroads during these 4 years increased by $63,274,000, and during the same period they increased their capital stock by $382,121,000. Would it not have been better if the railroads had taken some of that one and three-quarters of a billion of cash dividends and paid some of their bonded indebtedness? No one present here today can remember when a railroad has paid off a bond. Under the gentle auspices of the bankers and the I. C. C. that wholesome practice has been suspended.

I have shown the net operating income of the railroads during 4 normal years at the beginning of the last decade. I now wish to call to your attention the net earnings of the railroads during the two depression years of 1936 and 1937—see Statistics of the Railways of the United States, I. C. C., 1936 and 1937. They are as follows:

Year	Stocks and bonds in hands of the public	Net operating income	Rate of return
1936	$18, 335, 887, 000	$673, 160, 477	Percent 3.7
1937	18, 319, 003, 000	594, 299, 972	3.2
Average, 2 depression years	-----	-----	3.45

The average return for these 2 years of 1936 and 1937, as can be readily computed, was 3.45 percent. However, the House will find from table 17, page 86, of the Report of the President's Committee of Six, that 32 percent of the class 1 railroads of the United States were in the hands of the receivers in 1937. This table further indicates that 68 percent of the class 1 railroads of the United States at that time were prosperous, and that the annual rate of return shown in the above table is much lower than it would be if calculated upon the bonds and stocks of the solvent railroads. This is true because of the fact that the stocks and bonds of the insolvent railroads, which did not earn a return, are lumped in with the stocks and bonds of the solvent and prosperous railroads.

I have shown you that the net operating income of the railroads on an average in 1936 and 1937 was 3.45 percent, and that this is calculated upon the stocks and bonds of the solvent, plus the insolvent, roads. If, however, the bankrupt mileage of the class 1 railroads is eliminated, and the income of the 68 percent of the class 1 railroads is calculated upon the face value of the bonds and the par value of the stocks of the solvent roads, the House can readily see that the percentage rate of net income of the prosperous roads during these depression years was not 3.45 percent, but that in fact the percentage of the return on these prosperous roads would be very much higher than 3.45 percent.

COMPARE AGRICULTURE AND INDUSTRY

I ask the House again whether agriculture or average investment in industry did not lag way behind these earnings during those depression years? What the railroads need is not the destruction of low-cost transportation furnished by waterways, or trucks, or pipe lines. Even an amateur dabbler in national economics knows that such a program would inevitably have the effect of increasing the cost of living to the hard-pressed consumer. It would inevitably lower the standard of living of every American. The fact is that in common with the rest of the country, including agriculture, the railroads need only a return to normal business prosperity. Upon this point I wish to quote from the last report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, page 20, as follows:

Improvement in general business conditions can do more than anything else to increase railroad revenues. Recently there has been such an improvement, with benefits to many of the railroads, and it may be hoped that this will continue and grow.

DIVIDENDS ON INFLATED VALUES

The railroads do not pay either interest or dividends upon the inflated book values of their properties, so that the basis of this calculation is unsound. However, a calculation upon that basis is impressive. I call the attention of the House to the following table from the report of the President's Committee of Six—see table 13, page 81:

Rate of return of investment, railways of class I in the United States

Year	Investment in railway property used in transportation	Net operating income
		Amount	Rate of return
			Percent
1929	$26, 039, 558, 344	$1, 251, 697, 938	4.81
1930	26, 529, 742, 889	868, 878, 773	3.28
1931	26, 405, 685, 824	525, 627, 852	1.99
1932	26, 324, 022, 378	326, 298, 008	1.24
1933	26, 124, 835, 882	474, 295, 613	1.82
1934	25, 978, 114, 445	462, 652, 379	1.78
1935	25, 919, 335, 950	499, 819, 118	1.93
1936	25, 988, 789, 704	667, 347, 115	2.57
1937	25, 063, 943, 472	590, 203, 925	2.26

The annual earnings during these depression years is amazing when you consider that the percentage was figured on the inflated book value of the railroads' property. The income during the depression years would be more impressive if the interest had been calculated upon the basis of the face value of the bonds and the par value of the stocks upon which the railroads are required to pay a return. During the depression years the return would be equal to the average conservative investment, even if it were calculated upon the appraised value of the railroad properties as fixed by the I. C. C.

It is most interesting to note that while in the aggregate, between the years 1926 and 1937, inclusive, railroad stocks increased by $238,398,000, that during that same period the railroads abandoned 15,277 miles of railroad track—see Statistics of Railways of the United States, I. C. C., 1937, page S-6.

DIVIDENDS IN DEPRESSION YEARS

I now wish to call attention to the payments by railroads on cash dividends during the past 8 depression years. They are as follows (table 19, p. 87, Report of the President's Committee of Six):

Year:	Cash dividends declared
1930	-----	$497, 024, 912
1931	-----	330, 150, 873
1932	-----	92, 354, 322
1933	-----	95, 725, 783
1934	-----	133, 418, 896
1935	-----	126, 282, 306
1936	-----	169, 829, 290
1937	-----	167, 902, 034
Total	-----	$1, 612, 688, 416

SEEK TO DESTROY WATER AND TRUCK TRANSPORT

The railroads under the Lea bill, or similar legislation, seek to destroy waterways, truck, and pipe-line transportation. This is for the plain but unnamed purpose of destroying competing forms of transportation and making the American public, the farmer, and the industrialist pay through the nose. In considering this procedure the House should bear in mind that during the last 8 years of the depression the railroads have paid a sum total of dividends amounting to more than $1,600,000,000.

Of course, the railroad proponents will say that those dividends were dividends paid by the more prosperous roads, but the President's Committee of Six, made up entirely of railroad men, did not in their report segregate the more prosperous from the less prosperous roads. Before the railroads come pleading to Congress and spend millions of dollars in propaganda throughout the country asking for drastic measures of relief they should consolidate their various properties in accordance with existing law so the less fortunate ones could share in the prosperity of those who are enjoying a more lucrative business.

I. C. C. WITHOUT NATIONAL VISION

In the good old days, the railroads controlled and corrupted legislatures of entire States. They are now seeking to browbeat Congress, and through this legislation to control all transportation within the United States. I warn the House that that is what will happen if this vicious legislation becomes law. The Interstate Commerce Commission, which will be in command, has shown no compassion for the hard-pressed farmer or the consuming public. This Commission was created at the instance of the Grange for the purpose of protecting the western farmer from the rapacity of the railroads. But they have forgotten the farmer and the consuming public, and are intent only on giving the railroads what they ask for. For years the railroads have made an annual pilgrimage to the Commission, and have asked for and received an increase in rates. Except for the outlet afforded by waterways and trucks, the farmer could not, during these years, have brought his produce to market, and the consuming public would have found it impossible to make both ends meet.

The vast lobby created by the railroads, on which more than $100,000,000 has been spent, now proposes to destroy water and truck transportation by driving it off the rivers and roads by increased rates. The Members of the House, in whose aggregate wisdom and patriotism I have the greatest confidence, will, I am sure, stand between the public and the railroad lobby, and prevent the consummation of this conspiracy against the well-being of the American people.

SAVINGS ON WATER TRANSPORTATION

Vast savings are made by water transportation, all of which is reflected back to the public. I wish to cite several instances of these savings. In the field of gasoline, now an essential commodity in American life, it has been authoritatively stated, and has never been denied, that except for the intervention of waterways and pipelines, the American people would be paying 38 cents a gallon for gas at the pump. (See p. 138, pt. 1, hearings before Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House on H. R. 3615 of the 75th Cong.) They are now paying about 18 cents a gallon. I have computed these savings in this particular commodity, based upon the national consumption of gasoline. The results show that the savings to the consumer on gasoline alone amount to more than $4,000,000,000 annually. Great savings are now made on other bulk commodities, including coal and other necessities, and passed on to the public. Assuming the Lea bill, or similar legislation, is passed, the I. C. C. will, if it runs true to form, regard it as a mandate to increase the cost of gas per gallon to the public to 38 cents to the end that the railroads may make a killing.

As the House knows, the best authority on waterways in the United States Chairman MANSFIELD, of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. Judge MANSFIELD comes from the State of Texas, where cotton is one of the principal commodities. The hard-pressed cotton farmer needs to get his cotton to market at the lowest possible transportation cost. Speaking in the House February 5, 1935, on this question, Judge MANSFIELD said:

I am advised by the Interstate Commerce Commission that the rail rate from Galveston and Houston to Fall River, New Bedford, and Taunton, Mass., and to Willimantic and Danielson, Conn., the great cotton-milling cities, is $1.54 per hundred pounds, or $7.70 per bale.

The United States Shipping Board informs me that the water rate from the ports of Galveston and Houston to Fall River and New Bedford is 35 cents per hundred pounds, or $1.75 per bale. The combined water and rail rate from Texas ports to Taunton is 47½ cents per hundred pounds, or $2.37½ per bale. The combined water and rail rate to Danielson is 52½ cents per hundred, or $2.62½ per bale.

Simple arithmetic shows savings to the cotton farmer on a bale of cotton from Texas to New England by water amounting to $5.09½ per bale. Based on past performances, it is safe to say that all, or most all, of this saving will be wiped out if the water carriers are turned over to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In conclusion, let me say that I make no war on the railroads. I am willing to give them their place in the sun, but their place in the sun will not be gained by the destruction of waterways and other types of transportation, with resulting distress to the farmer and the consumer. They should put their financial house in order, cut themselves loose from the banker management, and, if need be, buttress their temporary crisis with additional loans from the R. F. C. They already know that trail.

Even if it is conceded that a little less than one-third of the mileage of the class 1 railroads of the United States need relief, why increase the traffic burden upon all the people in order to relieve this insolvent minority? Why burden the public in order to increase the revenues of the 68 percent of the prosperous class 1 railroads who, as has been established without a doubt, need no assistance? The prosperous roads are doing well. Why not leave them alone, or better still, why not require the consolidation of all the class 1 railroads as the law now permits, since it has been shown that the yield of the prosperous roads is now sufficient to make an adequate return on all the roads. Or why not put the bankrupt roads through the wringer, eliminate their inflation, pump out their water, and reorganize them as is being done in every other line of commerce, industry, and agriculture in America. Why give the railroads preferred status? In any event, they should take potluck with industry and agriculture.

This proposed legislation has for its avowed and unholy purposes the destruction of water and truck transportation so that the railroads may again have a monopoly. This procedure would maroon large sections of the country by reason of greatly increased cost of transportation to the farmer and the consuming public. I am speaking for the economic freedom of the people of America when I urge the House to defeat the Lea bill, or legislation with a similar purpose, if it comes to the floor. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include in the extension certain extracts from reports and certain tables for reports.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania, for 2 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. CALDWELL, for 2 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey (at the request of Mr. POWERS), for 1 week, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. SCRUGHAM, for 2 days, on account of official business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a memorial from the Michigan State Senate.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, March 2, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Public hearings will continue Thursday, March 2, 1939, at 10 a. m., on social-security legislation in the Ways and Means Committee room in the New House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m. Thursday, March 2, 1939. Business to be considered: Railroad-rate differentials.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors will meet Thursday, March 2, 1939, at 10:30 a. m., to continue hearings on H. R. 3222 and H. R. 3223, bills for the completion of the construction of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal across Florida.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors will meet Friday, March 3, 1939, at 10:30 a. m., to hold hearings on H. R. 295, H. R. 922, H. R. 2890, H. R. 4170, and H. R. 4314, all bills for the control of water pollution.

COMMITTEE ON COINAGE, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES

The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, will meet on Friday, March 3, 1939, at 9:30 a. m., in room 115, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

There will be a hearing before the Special Subcommittee on Bankruptcy and Reorganization of the Committee on the Judiciary at 10 a. m. Monday, March 6, 1939, on the bill (H. R. 3704) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; room 346, House Office Building.

Beginning at 10 a. m. on Wednesday, March 22, 1939, there will be a hearing held before the Subcommittee No. 4 of the Committee on the Judiciary on House Joint Resolution 176, declaring the conservation of petroleum deposits underlying submerged lands adjacent to and along the coast of California, below low-water mark and under the territorial waters of the United States of America, essential for national defense, maintenance of the Navy, and regulation and protection of interstate and foreign commerce; reserving the same as a naval petroleum reserve, subject to any superior vested right, title or interest; and authorizing appropriate judicial proceedings to assert, ascertain, establish, and maintain the right and interest of the United States of America in such reserve, and to eject trespassers.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m. Tuesday, March 7, 1939, on the bill (H. R. 4307) to extend the provisions of the Shipping Act, 1916, and the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, to all common carriers by water in interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m., on the bills and dates listed below:

Tuesday, March 14, 1939:

H. R. 180, H. R. 202, construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201, additional facilities for Panama Canal; H. R. 2667, construction of a Mexican Canal.

In listing the bills to be heard on March 14, 1939, House Joint Resolution 112 (TINKHAM), to create a commission to study and report on the feasibility of constructing the Mexican Canal, was inadvertently omitted from the notice.

This is to advise all interested parties that House Joint Resolution 112 will be considered at that time with the following bills: H. R. 180 (IZAC), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 202 (BLAND), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201 (BLAND), need for additional lock facilities at Panama; H. R. 2667 (TINKHAM), relative to the construction of a Mexican Canal.

Tuesday, March 21, 1939:

H. R. 137, H. R. 980, H. R. 1674, relating to annuities for Panama Canal construction force.

Thursday, March 23, 1939:

H. R. 139, H. R. 141, H. R. 142, H. R. 1819, miscellaneous Panama Canal bills.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

473. A letter from the Acting Postmaster General, transmitting a proposed amendment to the act approved April 27, 1937 (Public, No. 57), relating to the charges for metered commodities or services; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

474. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation for the legislative establishment, Architect of the Capitol, for the fiscal year 1939, in the amount of $16,474 (H. Doc. No. 184); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. SNYDER: Committee on Appropriations. H. R. 4630. A bill making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 112). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLAND: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 136. A bill to authorize contingent expenditures, United States Coast Guard Academy; without amendment (Rept. No. 113). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLAND: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 138. A bill to authorize the construction of certain vessels for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 114). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLOOM: Committee on Foreign Affairs. H. J. Res. 150. Joint resolution to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to provide that the United States extend to foreign governments invitations to participate in the Third International Congress for Microbiology to be held in the United States during the calendar year 1939"; without amendment (Rept. No. 115). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLAND: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 899. A bill to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station on Grand Traverse Bay, Mich.; with amendment (Rept. No. 116). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLAND: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 1776. A bill to provide for the assignment of medical officers of the Public Health Service for duty on vessels of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 117). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SNYDER:

H. R. 4630. A bill making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DARROW:

H. R. 4631. A bill to continue the 44-hour maximum work-week for employees engaged in certain wholesaling or distributing establishments; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri:

H. R. 4632. A bill to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of pleading, practice, and procedure with respect to all proceedings in criminal cases, including matters dealing with evidence; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BECKWORTH:

H. R. 4633. A bill to authorize an appropriation for an experiment station; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CARTER:

H. R. 4634. A bill holding members of the telephone-operating units, Signal Corps, American Expeditionary Forces, to have served in the military service of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT:

H. R. 4635. A bill to transfer certain lands from the Sierra National Forest to the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HART:

H. R. 4636. A bill to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the district of New Jersey; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KLEBERG:

H. R. 4637. A bill to amend section 243 of the Penal Code of the United States, as amended by the act of June 15, 1935 (49 Stat. 378), relating to the marking of packages containing wild animals and birds and parts thereof; to the Committee on Agriculture.

H. R. 4638. A bill authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to prepare plans for the eradication and control of the pink bollworm, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts:

H. R. 4639. A bill to provide prosthetic appliances to certain veterans suffering from non-service-connected disabilities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, February 27, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and eternal God, whose artistry in creation hath been wrought by law subtler than music, quieter than light, revealing Nature's pageantry in leaf and flower, in star and moon-drawn wave, and, lastly, uttering life in the soul of man: Speak to us through the silence, as we bow before Thee, concerning our immortal destiny and the wonders of Thy world, wherein Thou hast made man but little lower than the angels to crown him with glory and worship.

Help us, therefore, to live as sons of God, sharing in Thy new creation; direct the work of this day, we humbly ask, and, though at eventide many of its purposes be unfulfilled, nevertheless do Thou sustain us with the knowledge that if we are honest and true and trust in Thee our souls are beyond the reach of all adversity. We ask it in the name of Him who said to His disciples, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world." Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, March 1, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 10, 16, 17, and 18 to the bill, and concurred therein; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 13 to the said bill and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, and that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 23 to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ANNIVERSARY OF TEXAS DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President and Senators, on today, 103 years ago, March 2, 1836, a little band of Texas patriots gathered at a frontier village known as Washington on the Brazos and gave to the world the Texas declaration of independence. A few days following, the same convention adopted a constitution for the Republic of Texas, and a little more than a month thereafter, on April 21, 1836, Gen. Sam Houston, with his army of frontiersmen, composed in part of volunteers from most of the then existing State, fought the Battle of San Jacinto and in triumph brought to reality the great declaration which had been made at Washington on the Brazos.

The Battle of San Jacinto, judged by its consequences, was one of the outstanding events in the history of Anglo-Saxon civilization. If measured purely by the number of men involved, the battle was one of small consequence; but when it is remembered that, as the result of the declaration, and the subsequent victory of the Texas forces, a new republic was created in the Southwest, and that, following the admission of Texas to the Union, there ensued the Mexican War, which brought into the Union that great territory stretching all the way to the distant sea and embracing within its boundaries what are now the States of New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Nevada, California, Utah, and parts of Wyoming and Idaho, carrying Anglo-Saxon civilization into the great Southwest and securing the future safety of the Nation by causing its boundaries to be extended from ocean to ocean—judged by these consequences, the declaration of Texas independence, the war of revolution and liberation, and achievement of these great ends by the Battle of San Jacinto mark an outstanding era in the history of Anglo-Saxon civilization on this hemisphere.

So, Mr. President, as a Texan, I desire to pay a brief tribute in veneration of this great day in our history; to speak of March 2, 1836, and the Battle of San Jacinto, as I repeat here some words which I submitted in this Chamber on a former occasion.

How great is the poverty of phrase and the feebleness of tongue to bring to you a message of the majesty of Washington on the Brazos and the Battle of San Jacinto! Where is bronze stout enough, where is granite firm enough, where is marble white enough in chiseled figure or molded form to portray their grandeur? Where can literature find a pen powerful enough, where can oratory find a tongue eloquent enough, where can the poet find lines lofty enough, where can history find a page bright enough to tell the story of the heroic declaration of independence by a band of pioneers at Washington on the Brazos March 2, 1836, and the titanic triumph of Houston and his hardy and gallant army on the banks of the San Jacinto?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Texas a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator referred to the adoption of the Texas Declaration of Independence. Will the Senator be kind enough to have it inserted in the RECORD as part of his remarks?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be very glad to do so. I thank the Senator from Nebraska. I ask leave to have that done.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE UNANIMOUS DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE MADE BY THE DELEGATES OF THE PEOPLE OF TEXAS IN GENERAL CONVENTION AT THE TOWN OF WASHINGTON ON THE 2D OF MARCH 1836

When a government has ceased to protect the lives, liberty, and property of the people, from whom its legitimate powers are derived, and for the advancement of whose happiness it was instituted; and, so far from being a guaranty for the enjoyment of those inestimable and inalienable rights, becomes an instrument in the hands of evil rulers for their oppression: When the federal republican constitution of their country, which they have sworn to support, no longer has a substantial existence, and the whole nature of their Government has been forcibly changed, without their consent, from a restricted federative republic, composed of sovereign states, to a consolidated, central, military despotism in which every interest is disregarded but that of the army and the priesthood—both the eternal enemies of civil liberty, the ever-ready minions of power, and the usual instruments of tyrants: When, long after the spirit of the constitution has departed, moderation is, at length, so far lost, by those in power that even the semblance of freedom is removed, and the forms themselves, of the constitution discontinued; and so far from their petitions and remonstrances being regarded the agents who bear them are thrown into dungeons; and mercenary armies sent forth to force a new government upon them at the point of the bayonet: When in consequence of such acts of malfeasance and abdication, on the part of the government, anarchy prevails, and civil society is dissolved into its original elements: In such a crisis, the first law of nature, the right of self-preservation—the inherent and inalienable right of the people to appeal to first principles and take their political affairs into their own hands in extreme cases—enjoins it as a right towards themselves and a sacred obligation to their posterity to abolish such government and create another, in its stead, calculated to rescue them from impending dangers, and to secure their future welfare and happiness.

Nations, as well as individuals, are amenable for their acts to the public opinion of mankind. A statement of a part of our grievances is, therefore, submitted to an impartial world, in justification of the hazardous but unavoidable step now taken of severing our political connection with the Mexican people, and assuming an independent attitude among the nations of the earth.

The Mexican Government, by its colonization laws, invited and induced the Anglo-American population of Texas to colonize its wilderness under the pledged faith of a written constitution that they should continue to enjoy that constitutional liberty and republican government to which they had been habituated in the land of their birth, the United States of America. In this expectation they have been cruelly disappointed, inasmuch as the Mexican nation has acquiesced in the late changes made in the government by General Antonio Lopez de Santa Ana, who, having overthrown the constitution of his country, now offers us the cruel alternative either to abandon our homes, acquired by so many privations, or submit to the most intolerable of all tyranny, the combined despotism of the sword and the priesthood.

It has sacrificed our welfare to the state of Coahuila, by which our interests have been continually depressed through a jealous and partial course of legislation carried on at a far distant seat of government, by a hostile majority, in an unknown tongue; and this too, notwithstanding we have petitioned in the humblest terms, for the establishment of a separate state government, and have, in accordance with the provisions of the national constitution, presented to the general congress a republican constitution which was, without just cause, contemptuously rejected.

It incarcerated in a dungeon, for a long time, one of our citizens, for no other cause but a zealous endeavor to procure the acceptance of our constitution and the establishment of a state government.

It has failed and refused to secure on a firm basis the right of trial by jury; that palladium of civil liberty, and only safe guarantee for the life, liberty, and property of the citizen.

It has failed to establish any public system of education, although possessed of almost boundless resources (the public domain) and, although, it is an axiom, in political science, that unless a people are educated and enlightened it is idle to expect the continuance of civil liberty, or the capacity for self-government.

It has suffered the military commandants stationed among us to exercise arbitrary acts of oppression and tyranny; thus trampling upon the most sacred rights of the citizens and rendering the military superior to the civil power.

It has dissolved by force of arms, the State Congress of Coahuila and Texas, and obliged our representatives to fly for their lives from the seat of government, thus depriving us of the fundamental political right of representation.

It has demanded the surrender of a number of our citizens and ordered military detachments to seize and carry them into the interior for trial, in contempt of the civil authorities and in defiance of the laws and the constitution.

It has made piratical attacks upon our commerce, by commissioning foreign desperadoes, and authorizing them to seize our vessels and convey the property of our citizens to far-distant ports for confiscation.

It denies us the right of worshipping the Almighty according to the dictates of our own conscience; by the support of a national religion calculated to promote the temporal interest of its human functionaries rather than the glory of the true and living God.

It has demanded us to deliver up our arms, which are essential to our defense, the rightful property of freemen, and formidable only to tyrannical governments.

It has invaded our country, both by sea and by land, with intent to lay waste our territory and drive us from our homes; and has now a large mercenary army advancing to carry on against us a war of extermination.

It has, through its emissaries, incited the merciless savage, with the tomahawk and scalping knife, to massacre the inhabitants of our defenseless frontiers.

It hath been, during the whole time of our connection with it, the contemptible sport and victim of successive military revolutions; and hath continually exhibited every characteristic of a weak, corrupt, and tyrannical government.

These, and other grievances, were patiently borne by the people of Texas until they reached that point at which forbearance ceased to be a virtue. We then took up arms in defense of the national constitution. We appealed to our Mexican brethren for assistance. Our appeal has been made in vain. Though months have elapsed, no sympathetic response has yet been heard from the interior. We are, therefore, forced to the melancholy conclusion that the Mexican people have acquiesced in the destruction of their liberty and the substitution therefor of a military government—that they are unfit to be free and incapable of self-government.

The necessity of self-preservation, therefore, now decrees our eternal political separation.

We, therefore, the delegates, with plenary powers, of the people of Texas, in solemn convention assembled, appealing to a candid world for the necessities of our condition, do hereby resolve and declare that our political connection with the Mexican nation has forever ended; and that the people of Texas do now constitute a free sovereign and independent republic, and are fully invested with all the rights and attributes which properly belong to independent nations; and, conscious of the rectitude of our intentions, we fearlessly and confidently commit the issue to the decision of the Supreme Arbiter of the destinies of nations.

RICHARD ELLIS,

Prevost of the Convention and Delegate from Red River, (and other signers).

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas the Federal Civil Aeronautical Authority has heretofore announced a proposed plan whereby certain localities in the several States are to be designated as air bases for the schooling and education of young men and women of the land who are desirous of acquiring aviation training; and

Whereas various sites in the State of Minnesota have been considered in connection with a possible air base for such operation; and

Whereas such a program would be a direct benefit to the State of Minnesota and particularly to the youth thereof: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota in regular session assembled, That we memorialize the Federal Civil Aeronautical Authority and the Congress of the United States to provide for the establishment of an air base in the State of Minnesota for the purposes above set forth, and that their plans be carried out expeditiously; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Minnesota be, and he is hereby, instructed to transmit a copy of this joint resolution to the Federal Civil Aeronautical Authority and to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Whereas the average interstate railroad rate level in the western trunk-line territory in which Minnesota is located, is 47 percent higher than in official territory, or the area east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio Rivers; and

Whereas the actual cost to the railroad based on a loaded car-mile or a gross ton-mile basis is lower in the western trunk-line territory; and

Whereas railroad rates on wheat from Noyes, Minn., to Minneapolis, a distance of 380 miles, is 75 percent higher than the rate applied on like commodities from Minneapolis to Chicago, a distance of 419 miles; and

Whereas these rates as established by the Interstate Commerce Commission are discriminatory against agriculture, industry, and the consuming public of the western trunk-line territory: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota in regular session assembled, That we memorialize the Interstate Commerce Commission, the President of the United States, and the Congress of the United States to establish fair and equitable freight rates for the western trunk-line territory; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Minnesota be, and he is hereby, instructed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington, D. C., the President of the United States, and to the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the San Francisco (Calif.) District Industrial Union Council; Local Union No. 12036 of District No. 50, United Mine Workers of America, of Fairmont, W. Va.; and the Baltimore (Md.) Industrial Union Council, affiliated with the C. I. O., protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Board of Port Commissioners of Oakland, Calif., protesting against the enactment of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 24) relative to the establishment of title of the United States to certain submerged lands containing petroleum deposits, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Associated Puerto Rican Press, adopted by a meeting at San Juan, P. R., protesting against alleged restrictive Federal legislation and lack of coordination between the several Federal agencies and departments having jurisdiction in the affairs of Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. CAPPER presented a memorial, numerous signed, of members of the First Baptist Church and sundry citizens of Salina, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to include religious bodies within the operation of the social-security system, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted by the trustees of the World Peace Foundation, Boston, Mass., relative to world peace, foreign relations, and the national defense, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MEAD presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. GREEN presented the following joint resolution of the General Assembly of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Special Committee on Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries:

Joint resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to oppose the movement for a Federal tax on State bonds, which in definite form is now pending before the Committee on Intergovernmental Taxation at Washington, D. C.

Whereas there is now pending for immediate consideration before the Committee on Intergovernmental Taxation at Washington, D. C., a matter relating to Federal tax on State bonds: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of Rhode Island does hereby express its disapproval of the proposed plan for Federal tax on State bonds and urges and requests the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to make every effort to oppose the establishment of any said Federal tax on State bonds; and be it further

Resolved, That His Excellency the Governor be, and he hereby is, respectfully requested to transmit a copy of this resolution, under the seal of the State, to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in Congress.

Mr. GERRY presented a resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Special Committee on Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries.

PAYMENTS TO STATE AND TERRITORIAL HOMES FOR VETERANS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present several letters which I have received in connection with Senate bill 1495, to increase annual payments to State and Territorial homes for veterans, which I ask be treated as in the nature of petitions, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
February 2, 1939.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 25, 1939, to which was attached a letter dated January 17, 1939, from the commandant of the Soldiers' Home at Chelsea, Mass., regarding an increase in the amount of Federal-aid payments to the various States.

Under the provisions of section 134, title 24, United States Code, and Public, No. 171, Seventy-fifth Congress, there may be paid to States maintaining State soldiers' homes an amount at the rate of $120 per annum for each veteran cared for in such homes who is eligible for admission to a Veterans' Administration facility for domiciliary care. There are 29 State soldiers' homes maintained by 26 States. Payments of Federal aid to these 26 States resulted in an obligation of approximately $684,640 on the part of the Federal Government during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938.

A bill (H. R. 9071) was introduced during the last session of Congress to increase the payments of Federal aid to the States to a rate of $240 per annum. A bill (H. R. 2287) for a similar purpose was introduced by Mr. RANKIN, of Mississippi, in the present session and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Passage of this proposed legislation would result in doubling the amount of payments of Federal aid to the various States maintaining State soldiers' homes, and no provision has been made in the current appropriation act or in the Budget proposal for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, for such an increase.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Administrator.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
SOLDIERS' HOME,
Chelsea, February 17, 1939.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Last Monday JOHN MCCORMACK introduced a measure identical to the one attached, H. R. 2287, substituting $365 in lieu of Mr. RANKIN's proposal, namely, $240.

At this time may I suggest that you introduce in the Senate a similar bill, using the $365 rate? I am asking this because it may be remotely possible that we can get earlier action in the Senate than we might get in the House. The responses which I have had from the delegations of the 27 States concerned have been uniformly favorable. Many of them have expressed the thought similar to your own—that is, they were surprised that the original act of 1888, which allowed $120 per annum, had not been amended in the 50 years of its existence. We think today that $1 per diem is a more equitable proportion of the maintenance cost than the lesser amount suggested by Congressman RANKIN.

I trust that you will introduce the bill, as requested, and in due course will you kindly send me some copies.

Sincerely yours,

LAWRENCE F. QUIGLEY,
Commandant.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
SOLDIERS' HOME,
Chelsea, February 27, 1939.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Your letter of February 24, containing report of General Hines with reference to payments of Federal aid to States which operate soldiers' homes, has been received.

That which General Hines has stated in his report is, insofar as I know, correct. The report furnished you is identical to that which he has furnished to Members of both Houses from the other 25 States which operate homes. The law which governs the present payment was, as you know, passed in 1888, and has not been revised since. Heretofore the Confederate bloc made such impossible unless grants were made to Confederate homes. This situation is materially different now, as evidenced by the fact that a southern Member, Mr. RANKIN, introduced the original measure, which allows but $240. The American Legion has passed resolutions at several conventions on this subject, but up to now no definitive action has been taken.

Our argument for the $365 per annum is based upon the fact that it costs that much money to maintain a soldier in a Federal home for shelter, food, and personnel costs only. When a domiciliary case, such as your measure contemplates, is transferred from domiciliary status to hospital status, the cost is three and one-half to four times as much per diem.

Congress in 1888 allowed 33½ cents per diem, which, based upon the then existing cost, represented more than 60 percent of the maintenance cost. This is based upon the history of the cost at the Massachusetts State home, which disclosed that during those early years that the average per diem cost per veteran was 51 cents only. With the passing of years this cost has ascended to the sum of $2.07 per diem to the State of Massachusetts.

It will be noted that when Congress passed the original legislation it laid down a yardstick of apparent liberality. With 50 years this liberality has not been maintained, perhaps due to inertia on the parts of the States concerned.

You are familiar with the circumstances here in Massachusetts probably better than any other person in Washington. We have been spending $350,000 per annum on this State soldiers' home, of which we have been reimbursed but one-seventh, or $50,000 per annum, by the Federal Government.

The bill that you have introduced, then, would attempt to pick up some of the difference existing between 60 percent of the cost in 1888 and 14½ percent existing today.

Even though your bill becomes a law, you will observe that the State government must still expend not less than $200,000 per annum to maintain this State soldiers' home.

Much of the grave difficulties confronting the board of trustees and myself in continuing to get appropriations for this home will be overcome if your measure is successful. With the present problem of hospitalizing veterans in and around the metropolitan district of Boston, you will appreciate just how grave the problem will be if we are forced to curtail the expenditures and, by the same token, refuse admission of ill and disabled veterans to our institutions.

It goes without saying that the Budget measure will have to be increased from approximately $700,000 to approximately $2,000,000 if the Walsh bill is enacted. Let me say in respect to that that the Federal Government has been saved many times that amount of money by the States maintaining these homes. Last year the 25 States took care of 7,000 veterans, at a cost to the Federal Government of $684,640. According to the statistics of the Veterans' Administration itself, had these same 7,000 veterans been cared for in the various national homes, the expense would have been considerably in excess of $2,000,000. To refute another possible argument, it cannot be said that the Federal Government has ample beds to absorb these cases, because there are but 16,000 such beds in the various homes throughout the country; and during the month of July 1938, the month when the population of the homes is at ebb tide, there were then a net of only 2,000 beds scattered throughout the country. It will be seen, then, that if the State homes should end up their business—and there is no desire on the part of the various States to do so, of course—it would entail construction to house at the present time not less than 5,000 veterans. Of course, the demand for these beds is constantly increasing.

With the foregoing facts—and I will be glad to amplify them in as much detail as you would care to have me—I trust that it will be practicable for your Military Affairs Committee to grant an early hearing on your bill.

A communication has just been received by me from your colleague, Senator LODGE, and in response to an inquiry made by him I am taking the liberty of enclosing a copy of this letter for his information.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

LAWRENCE F. QUIGLEY,
Commandant.

IMPOSITION OF TAXES ON CHAIN STORES

Mr. HOLT presented a letter from the Mercer County (W. Va.) Association of Retail Grocers, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BLUEFIELD, W. VA.

Senator RUSH D. HOLT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HOLT: The independent merchants of West Virginia, as well as those in all other States, are very much interested in seeing bill H. R. 1 passed, and in view of the fact your past record indicates you have worked for the best interest of the many thousands of small-business men and wage earners, we feel assured and have the utmost confidence that you will use your influence in the passage of this bill.

Yours very truly,

MERCER COUNTY ASSOCIATION OF RETAIL GROCERS,
PAUL COLE, Secretary-Treasurer.

PROHIBITION OF MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF RUM IN VIRGIN ISLANDS

Mr. HOLT presented a resolution of the Keyser (W. Va.) Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KEYSER, W. VA., February 28, 1939.

Hon. RUSH D. HOLT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR Mr. HOLT: We, the members of the Keyser Woman's Christian Temperance Union, 62 in number, implore you to support the following bill:

"Resolved, etc., That the manufacture and sale of rum by the Virgin Islands Co. or by any other activity that is financed in whole or in part by funds from the United States is hereby prohibited."

Very sincerely,

OLLIE E. SECRIST,
Corresponding Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 270) for the relief of Lofts & Son, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 124) thereon.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1517) for the relief of F. E. Perkins, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 125) thereon.

Mr. ELLENDER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 793) for the relief of Worth Galaher, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 126) thereon.

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 421) for the relief of the estate of O. K. Himley, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 127) thereon.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 902) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the temporary detail of United States employees, possessing special qualifications, to governments of American Republics and the Philippines, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1938, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 128) thereon.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 46) authorizing appropriation for expenses of a representative of the United States and of his assistants, and for one-half of the joint expenses of this Government and the Government of Mexico, in giving effect to the agreement of November 9-12, 1938, between the two Governments providing for the settlement of American claims for damages resulting from expropriations of agrarian properties since August 30, 1927, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 129) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on March 1, 1939, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 494. An act to name the bridge to be erected over the Anacostia River in the District of Columbia after the late "March King," John Philip Sousa, composer of the Stars and Stripes Forever; and

S. 1294. A bill to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to regulate the hours during which streets, alleys, etc., shall be lighted.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mrs. CARAWAY:

S. 1673. A bill for the relief of Charles Boothe Amis; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1674. A bill granting a pension to J. H. McGhehey; to the Committee on Pensions.

(Mr. LEE introduced Senate bill 1675, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and appears under a separate heading.)

Mr. HATCH. I ask consent to introduce a bill in behalf of my colleague from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] and myself, and request that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and properly referred.

By Mr. HATCH and Mr. CHAVEZ:

S. 1676. A bill relating to certain payments in connection with the 1937 range program under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(Mr. WALSH introduced Senate bill 1677, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and appears under a separate heading.)

LXXXIV—134

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 1678. A bill for the relief of Charles B. Chrystal; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ASHURST:

S. 1679 (by request). A bill to amend the law limiting the operation of statutes of limitations in certain cases; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KING:

S. 1680. A bill relating to benefit assessments from condemnation proceedings for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of alleys or minor streets; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

S. 1681. A bill to amend section 107 of the Judicial Code to create a mountain district in the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REAMORTIZATION OF CERTAIN LAND BANK COMMISSIONER LOANS

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, in Oklahoma there are 13,020 so-called Commissioner loans, made under the provisions of the Emergency Farm Act of 1933. At the present time 3,977 of these loans are delinquent and the farmers to whom the loans were made are subject to having their farms taken away from them. The bill which I am about to introduce and which proposes to amend the law makes it mandatory for the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, which now owns all Commissioner loans, upon request of the mortgagor, to extend in whole or in part any unpaid obligations under the terms of any mortgage for a period of from 20 to 40 years.

At this point I ask consent to introduce a bill which I request be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The purpose of the bill is to give relief in the premises. I ask unanimous consent, as the bill is very short, that it may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma will be received and referred as requested by him and also printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1675) to provide reamortization of Land Bank Commissioner loans which have heretofore been made by the Land Bank Commissioner and which provide for liquidation of principal and interest in a 10- or 13-year period was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Land Bank Commissioner, upon application by any person owing a Land Bank Commissioner loan which is amortized so as to become due and payable in full in 10 or 13 years from date loan was made, shall extend said loan and provide for reamortization of the loan over a period not less than 20 years and not more than 40 years at the same rates of interest and upon the same basis of amortization which is now available to Federal land-bank borrowers.

INCITATION TO DISOBEDIENCE IN THE ARMY AND NAVY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce a bill, and request that two letters from the Acting Secretary of the Navy be printed in the RECORD in connection with the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts will be received and properly referred, and the letters referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1677) to make better provision for the government of the Army and the Navy of the United States by the suppression of attempts to incite the members thereof to disobedience, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The letters presented by Mr. WALSH are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, February 27, 1939.

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: There is enclosed herewith a copy of a letter, together with a copy of a proposed bill "To make better provision for the government of the Army and the Navy of the United States by the suppression of attempts to incite the members thereof to disobedience," this day forwarded to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES EDISON, Acting.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, February 27, 1939.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: There is transmitted herewith a draft of a proposed bill "To make better provision for the government of the Army and the Navy of the United States by the suppression of attempts to incite the members thereof to disobedience."

The purpose of this bill is indicated in its title.

Literature of a nature subversive to the Government has been distributed in increasing quantities in recent years to the personnel of the Army and the Navy. The literature, apparently emanating from Communist organizations, seeks to undermine the morale of the services by urging disloyalty and disobedience of laws and regulations for the government of the armed forces.

Existing law is inadequate to curb this propaganda. The pamphlets and leaflets are carefully worded to avoid the insurrection and seditious provisions of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 4 and 6), and the publishers likewise escape the penalties of sections 344 and 345 of title 18, United States Code, by avoiding the use of the mails.

The proposed legislation, it is believed, will protect the military and naval forces of the United States from the contaminating influences of propaganda which has as its ultimate object the overthrow of our Government by force. It does not infringe upon the rights of free speech or of a free press. It does not prevent any person from advocating a change in existing laws by lawful means. It does, however, prevent persons from urging members of the armed forces to violate the laws and regulations by which they are governed.

Enactment of the proposed legislation would result in no increase of cost to the Government.

The Navy Department recommends enactment of the proposed legislation.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES EDISON, Acting.

SURVEY OF COAST LINE AT EAST PROVIDENCE, R. I.—AMENDMENT

Mr. GREEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1443) to authorize the Secretary of War to make a survey of the coast line at East Providence, R. I., which was damaged by the hurricane and flood of September 21, 1938, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "The Influence of the Wright Brothers on History," printed in the Washington (D. C.) Times-Herald of February 13, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday, the first committee amendment was pending.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, by reason of the very able speech made yesterday by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], I find it unnecessary for me to deal with the facts in detail or at all. The Senator from Vermont covered everything I could say on that point.

The views which I shall briefly express today are views which I publicly expressed last September, prior to the Munich agreement, and the moving finger of destiny since that date has shown me no reason to change my formerly expressed views. I say that because a newspaper account the other day said that I undoubtedly was expressing thoughts that were suggested in the famous conference of the Military Affairs Committee with the President; but that is not true. I gave public utterance to these thoughts, or similar thoughts, last fall.

I do not desire to discuss any of the secret meetings we have had. I only take occasion to say that in the conference between the President of the United States and the Military Affairs Committee I heard nothing startling, I understood nothing startling, and it is entirely beyond my comprehension why some of my good friends who are Members of this body say the country would be shocked if it knew what took place. They have never said they questioned the truth of any statement they heard; and, as for me, I can truthfully say that I do not recall having heard anything at all which was particularly new. While different accounts have been given of what was said, and I never keep notes—I never kept a note on anything in my life—I think, if called upon to do so, I could repeat almost verbatim all that was said on that occasion.

I desire to state my position relative to the bill now under consideration. It will not require many words.

I believe in neutrality at times, but not in neutrality predetermined by law. I have said before, and I say again, that such neutrality is a snare and a delusion. Our relationship to other nations, either in time of war or in time of peace, is something that must be improvised as occasions arise.

In my judgment, the effect of our Neutrality Act was to give the green light to the nations ruled by dictators to move against democracies. When we served notice on the world by that act that it was our purpose to refrain from favoring one nation at war over another, and that we would hold the balances even, it was the information that Japan, Germany, and Italy needed to begin their aggressions.

If it be true—and I believe on good authority that it is true—that Germany, Italy, and Japan have entered into a pact mutually to assist each other in aggressions until Europe and Asia are dominated by them, our attitude expressed in the Neutrality Act may have given much encouragement to them in their desire to destroy democracies.

If the democracies in Europe are destroyed, the necessity for our protecting this Nation through an adequate Army and Navy becomes obvious to everyone. It may not happen that France and England will be defeated, but we cannot await preparations until the result can be certainly known.

If so, it may be too late for us to repel attacks on our Nation if they should be made. No one can say that attacks will be made, but we cannot take it for granted that they will not be. So, to be on the safe side, we must be prepared not only to fight if we must but to win; and the time to make such preparations is now, because, if war comes, it will be too late.

Much has been said in the debate on this bill about entangling alliances with other nations. If I could make the foreign policy of the United States, there would not, at this time or ever, be any entangling alliances with any nation on earth. I do not believe the United States of America should agree with any nation, either directly or indirectly, that, in case of war or threat of war, it will follow any particular course. This Nation should ever be free to determine its own course at any time as the people, through the legal machinery of our Government, may decide. We should be free to remain at peace, go to war, or remain neutral without consulting any nation on earth. This would be my policy, and it would forever keep our Nation free from entangling alliances.

The reason for my desire to see the Neutrality Act repealed is that, in my opinion, it constitutes something approaching entangling alliances. The very fact that the United States has served notice on all nations that it will provide an adequate Army and Navy for the common defense has eased the tension in Europe, and the dictators do not seem nearly so anxious to attack the democracies as they appeared to be a few days ago. The bare suspicion on the part of the dictators that the United States is not as strong for neutrality as they had been led to believe has caused them to pause.

I do not believe in going to war any more than I believe in one individual fighting another individual; but there are times when a man must fight because he cannot run, and at such a time I believe he should always be ready to win the battle. I do not expect the United States to attack any nation; but when the time comes, if ever, that the United States sees danger approaching, from whatever source, I think it will strike in self-defense and only in self-defense.

It has been said that the President remarked on a recent occasion that France and England were our first line of defense in case of attack on democracies by the dictators in Europe. Whether he said it or not, we know that it is true. We cannot be attacked by any nation in Europe without the fall of England and France. It is important, therefore, that we do what we can to see that England and France do not fall a prey to the dictators. England has a great Navy, which could be used by Germany if she should conquer England as easily as England may use it herself. I do not want to see that Navy in the hands of an enemy of democracies. England has many places where naval bases and air bases could be established near our own shores, and so has France. We can well understand the price that France and England would have to pay if Germany and Italy should conquer them. We do not want air bases and naval bases near our shores in the hands of any nation that is an enemy to democracies. Therefore, it seems to me that we cannot avoid having a very acute interest in any war with England and France on one side and Italy and Germany on the other.

Further, if I were making the foreign policy of this Nation, as matters stand now I would furnish to England and France everything they need to fight a defensive war. If they needed food, clothing, munitions of war, or any other thing that might be necessary, I would try to see that they obtained it from the people of the United States, and the quantity that was furnished should be sufficient to insure victory for France and England. On the other hand, I would seek to avoid to the fullest extent the furnishing of anything to Germany or Italy that would enable them to carry on a war of aggression. I sincerely believe that would be the surest way to keep us out of war. Even that might not be enough. Therefore we cannot take a chance. Our Nation is worth too much for us to take more than a moderate chance of being overcome by those who do not believe in democracies.

There was a time in the history of our Nation when we were well protected by the oceans. No nation could reach us, at least with a large force. But that condition does not exist any longer. Unless we believe that 1 American can always whip 10 foreigners we are not safe if we do not have a better Army and a better Navy than we have today. At this time I do not believe that any nation in Europe could successfully attack us. We are out of range of their navies and their airplanes, although their navies might attack some of our coast cities and escape before we could do anything about it. A few bombs might be dropped on our coast cities from bombing planes, but under present conditions these things would not constitute a serious menace to our national life.

In the past the rivalries in Europe have contributed very largely to our security. That is so today, but when there are no rivalries in Europe the situation may be very materially changed.

I agree with those who say that we should consider the question of national defense calmly. There should be no excitement about it. Fantastic schemes and unrestrained language cannot help. We must keep our feet on the ground and think the question through. There are those who sincerely believe that money spent for national defense is wasted. On the same basis of reasoning we might well say that money spent for insurance against fire is wasted. The bill now under consideration contains nothing that need excite any of us. We are considering the realities and not the fantastic. I doubt whether there are a dozen votes in the Senate in opposition to the pending bill. In fact, I do not believe that I know of more than one or two. The question rises above politics, and no politics has or will enter into the consideration of our national-defense program. We are but trustees for the future, and as such it is our duty to pass on to those who come after us all the blessings which we have enjoyed, and among those blessings is the right to live under a democratic form of government.

Mr. President, one reason why it is not necessary for me to go very deeply into this question is that some years ago, about 20 years ago, to be exact, there was a statesman, a man who is still distinguished in public affairs, and who knows more about foreign affairs and many other affairs than any other man in the United States. He has made many great speeches in the course of his career. I hope that he may make many more. But among them all perhaps the greatest speech he ever made was the one which was delivered in the United States Senate on March 18, 1918, and as expressive of my own views I wish to read some quotations from that great speech. I may say that the book which I hold in my hand has a subtitle which indicates that the address was not only a speech but a prophecy, because the selections are said to be "Speeches and Prophecies."

In the course of that address this great statesman said:

And when we reflect further on some of the issues which are involved in the war, we are again led to understand how conclusively this is a contest between the two systems of government, two civilizations. We ought to get away, if we can, from the idea that it is a conflict over national lines in Europe; that it is a question of the redistribution of territory in Europe; that it is a question of securing compensation for injuries which have been done us; and understand that, whatever the cause was in the beginning, we have now arrived at a point where it is distinctly a conflict between two systems of government, between peoples and nations, and that one or the other will have to go down.

That war has not ended, I may say, the contest is still going on, and the approaching war, if there is to be one—and unless our actions here in providing an adequate national defense for this country will prevent it there certainly will be a war in Europe—will be exactly the same type of war described in this quotation, a war over systems of government.

But there is even stronger language. I quote again:

In other words, whatever may have been our opinion in the beginning of the war, both sides realize now that this is not only a war between great nations, involving the interests of all their citizens, but that it is distinctly a war between systems of government, and it is so recognized.

Again, further along in the speech we find this language:

We now see and understand clearly and unmistakably the cause at all times lying back of these things. Upon the one hand is Magna Carta, the Bill of Rights, the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the principles of human liberty which they embody and preserve. Upon the other hand is that peculiar form of state organization which, in the language of the emperor, rests alone upon the strength of the army and whose highest creed finds expression in the words of one of its greatest advocates that war is a part of the eternal order instituted by God. We go back to Runnymede, where fearless men wrenched from the hands of power habeas corpus and the trial by jury. They point us to Breslau and Molwitz, where Frederick the Great, in violation of his plighted word, inaugurated the rule of fraud and force and laid the foundation for that mighty structure whose central and dominating principle is that of power.

I may say that the issue is more squarely drawn today than it was on the 18th of March 1918, when this great speech was made. But I desire to read for the RECORD more of it:

It is that power with which we are at war today. Shall men, shall the people, be governed by some remorseless and soulless entity softly called the state or shall the instrumentalities of government yield alone and at all times to the wants and necessities, the hopes and aspirations of the masses? That is now the issue. Nothing should longer conceal it. It is but another and more stupendous phase of the old struggle, a struggle as ancient and as inevitable as the thirst for power and the love of liberty, a struggle in which men have fought and sacrificed all the way from Marathon to Verdun.

It seems strange now, and it will seem more extraordinary to those who come after us, that we did not recognize from the beginning that this was the issue. But, obscured by the debris of European life, confused with the dynastic quarrels and racial bitterness of the Old World, it was difficult to discern, and still more difficult to realize, that the very life of our institutions was at stake, that the scheme of the enemy, amazing and astounding, was not alone to control territory and dominate commerce, but to change the drift of human progress and to readjust the standards of the world's civilization. Perhaps, too, our love of peace, our traditional friendship for all nations lulled suspicion and discouraged inquiry. Be that as it may, there can be no doubt now. Whatever the cause, however perverse the fate which brings us to this crisis, we are called upon not to settle questions of territory or establish new spheres of national activity, but to defend the institutions under which we live. Who doubts should we fail that the whole theory and system of government for which we have labored and struggled, our whole conception of civilization would be discredited utterly?

This great orator on that occasion was pointing out that if one of the nations in Europe, now under a dictator, should be successful in conquering France and England, our institutions would be in danger; that our civilization would be in danger. I wish to read how far he said we should go to defend that civilization.

But what we have determined in this crisis, as I understand it, is that we will keep the road of democracy open.

That is a strong sentence.

No one shall close it—

Said that great orator on that occasion. He said in effect, to paraphrase Kipling, "Ours is the gate to open and ours is the gate to close."

It cannot be handed whole and complete to any people, though every member of the community were a Socrates. But what we have determined in this crisis, as I understand it, is that we will keep the road of democracy open. No one shall close it. If any nation shall hereafter rise to the sublime requirement of self-government and choose to go that way it shall have the right to do so. Above all things we have determined, cost what it may in treasure and blood, that this experiment here upon this western continent shall justify the faith of its builders, that there shall remain here in all the integrity of its powers neither wrenched nor marred by the passions of war from within nor humbled nor dishonored by military power from without the Republic of the fathers. That since the challenge has been thrown down that this is a war unto death between two opposing theories of government we are determined that whatever else happens as a result of this war this form of organization, this theory of state, this last great hope, this fruition of 130 years of struggle and toil "shall not perish from the earth."

It was said by this great orator in the course of his speech that in the beginning we did not clearly see what was involved, and that is true. And even when this speech was made on March 18, 1918, we still did not clearly see what was involved. But we see it now. With Italy and Germany preparing to conquer the world, and knowing that the conflict will destroy the democracies of Europe, we know that we will have to fight the dictator nations alone, and how anyone can object to preparing to meet such a situation which might come to us—though it might not, and, of course, I do not know that it will come to us—I cannot understand.

I now desire to read something which the great orator, from whose speech I have been quoting, said on the same occasion about George Washington's Farewell Address. The Farewell Address has been referred to in the Senate frequently. It has been read over and over again. It has been quoted from. Here is the language of the distinguished statesman to whom I refer:

A republic can make war. It can make war successfully and triumphantly and remain a republic every hour of the conflict. The genius who presided over the organization of this Republic, whose impressive force was knit into every fiber of our national organization, was the greatest soldier, save one, of the modern world, and the most far-visioned leader and statesman of all time. He knew that though devoted to peace the time would come when the Republic would have to make war. Over and over again he solemnly warned his countrymen to be ever ready and always prepared. He intended, therefore, that this Republic should make war and make war effectively, and the Republic which Washington framed and baptized with his love can make war. Let these faithless recreants cease to preach their pernicious doctrine.

I do not believe that anyone has said on the floor of the Senate, or will say anything as impressive as the quotations I have read. I am quite sure that all Senators will recognize the author of that speech. The speech was made by one of our own honored colleagues, who sits with us today, a man whom we all reverence and love, the Honorable WILLIAM E. BORAH. It comes from a little book entitled "American Problems." In the book is a subtitle, "A selection of speeches and prophecies by WILLIAM E. BORAH."

I doubt whether Isaiah or Jeremiah ever pictured the future as clearly as it is pictured in this speech. It will appear that, looking down the corridors of time, the Senator from Idaho then saw that this war between systems of government was to be fought to a conclusion.

Let me now say in conclusion, because I do not have any desire to take up any more of the time of the Senate, that I think that by passing the bill which we are considering, and going as far as we reasonably can in national defense, we shall not only protect ourselves from a war to come at some time in the future, but, in my judgment, we shall do much toward preventing war between other countries.

I believe that Italy is going to exercise her right under what appears to be an understanding, to take more territory in the next few months, or within less than a year. Senators will recall that Italy took Abyssinia. Nothing was said. Japan takes China, or a part of it. Nothing is said. Hitler takes Austria and the Sudetenland. Now they are starting in again, and this time it is Italy's move. We do not know where Japan will go next. But next Germany will move eastward, taking in the Ukraine, beyond all question, in my judgment. With all these activities going on, there may be no signs of war on our own Nation. Certainly we are not going out to make war upon another nation. But the situation is such that we cannot afford to wait.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky if what he is proposing is that American boys be sent to fight in Europe or Africa or any other part of the world to protect France in her right to Tunisia, which France holds by precisely the same title by which Italy holds Ethiopia, or to protect Great Britain in her right to Hong Kong, which Great Britain acquired by precisely the same methods against the Chinese that the Japanese have been using in the last year and a half? Exactly what is the meaning of all this talk of our owing an obligation to democracies such as France and Great Britain, which, while their internal governments may be very much more agreeable to our ideas and our practice, in their foreign policy have been as imperialistic as any nations in the history of the world?

Mr. LOGAN. Evidently the Senator did not hear the beginning of what I said.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am sorry to say that I came in after the Senator had started his remarks.

Mr. LOGAN. I said then, and I will repeat, that I do not believe in sending our soldiers to any foreign country under any circumstances unless it be in self-defense. I do not believe in attempting to protect Great Britain in her colonial possessions, or France, or any other nation. That is none of our business. But if they are a part of our protection against the aggressions of the dictators, I did say that it is my present opinion that I would furnish them the things they need, so they could whip the dictators and take the job off our hands. But that is as far as I would go. If my good friend the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] would let me, I might be willing to loan them some money so they could pay for munitions of war. But I do not believe in attempting to protect Great Britain or France in their colonial possessions. We are not concerned with the internal affairs of any nation. Any nation can have any kind of government it wants to have. That is not our business. The sole reason why I believe in our present program is that it is a program of self-defense, and the only reason why I would ship munitions of war to any nation would be in furtherance of that plan; that is, in self-defense of the United States. Otherwise, if I had the power, I would see to it that no munitions of war were shipped to any country on earth.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Am I correct in understanding the Senator to say that he would confine the interest of our own self-defense—our position in the event of war between the dictator countries of Europe and the so-called democracies of Europe—to financial aid, and to moral support, and would not favor entry by the United States into a war or participation in a war between the so-called democracies and the totalitarian States? Is that the Senator's position?

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator states my position.

Mr. WALSH. Is that not exactly the position this country took in 1918 when it declared war? Is it not a fact that hardly a Member of the House or Senate in April 1918 thought that American youths would be required to go to Europe to fight? How can we avoid taking that step again, if war comes again, if we take the step the Senator suggests? If we take that first step we will most certainly take the second step, namely, take up arms.

Mr. LOGAN. I am stating only what I hope will occur. I see no parallel between 1918 and the present time. The world is altogether a different place from what it was 20 years ago. England, France, and no other nation, so far as I know, have need for our manpower. They do not need that.

Mr. WALSH. In the event we take sides and give moral support and financial aid to one group of nations fighting another group of nations, is it not inevitable, if the group to which we are lending money and supplying munitions is losing in the contest, that as a matter of self-interest we are impelled to go in and fight alongside of that group?

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that war is an improvisation. The Government has to act as occasion arises. I do not know what may happen. Neither does anyone else. But I do know that if there is a contest between dictator states, totalitarian states, on one side, and democracies on the other that I am not neutral, I do not expect to be neutral, and I do not want any citizen of the United States to be neutral. I am for the democracies.

Mr. WALSH. Do I correctly understand the Senator to state that, in his opinion, the sharp differences existing between the countries of Europe at the present time, which point in the direction of war, are basically differences over forms of government?

Mr. LOGAN. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator think there are no controversies between those countries over possessions, giving up what they have gotten in the past, or obtaining in the future something they desire and do not now possess?

Mr. LOGAN. I really do not know.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, is it not a fact that the present threats of war and resort to force in Europe arise from quarrels over territorial possessions rather than over forms of government?

Mr. LOGAN. Of course all those things are involved; but, as was ably pointed out by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] 20 years ago in his speech from which I read extracts, whatever one might think about its being a warfare over boundary lines, over possessions, or over economic conditions which had entered into it, after all, the difficulties in the world today are caused by a conflict between the nations which believe in the democratic principle of government and those which say that democracy is a failure.

Perhaps we can avoid all trouble by selecting a dictator and becoming a totalitarian state. However, I would rather have a war on every battlefield of Europe, I would rather see every young man in this Nation fighting in other nations, than to have here such a nation as we see in Germany, where one man speaks and controls the actions of a great people. I do not know what may arise in the future; but if the struggle is to be fought out between democracies and dictators then I am on the side of the democracies. This being the greatest and richest democracy of them all, it ought to lend its moral support. Let me say to the Senator that after war comes there is not going to be time to help anybody.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator's position is that the present perilous situation in Europe is a fight between forms of government?

Mr. LOGAN. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. The totalitarian states against the democracies?

Mr. LOGAN. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. And that we, being a democracy, are in danger if the dictatorial governments triumph; and therefore we ought to get busy and become interested in what is going on in Europe, lend financial aid to the democracies, and be ready to go to war, if necessary, in order to safeguard our own democracy?

Mr. LOGAN. If that be necessary, I should say that is correct; but that is not what I had in mind. In my opinion, if we have a war, it will not last 60 days. We should not have time to get over there before the war would be over and the people destroyed.

My theory of the whole matter, as I have stated in the speech I delivered, is that if I were now to determine the foreign policy of the United States, seeing the storm coming and the billows raging, I should afford such assistance as I could to France and England, so that they might prepare to repel the attack; and I should not furnish one thing to the totalitarian states. Japan, Germany, and Italy could obtain nothing which would aid them or any of them to enter into an offensive war against anyone. On the other hand, I should lend all the moral encouragement I could to democracies which must fight a defensive war.

In connection with the neutrality law, I said that I was against it. The neutrality law will get us into trouble, and it can do no good. Let me say to the Senator that if there is a robber on the street, and an exceedingly good citizen goes down there, and the robber jumps on the good citizen, if I gave the good citizen a gun or a club, I should not feel that I had to extend the same courtesy to the robber. I do not believe in that kind of neutrality. I do not believe it is ever going to help us. It will get us into trouble.

As I said in the beginning, I believe in neutrality, but it is a neutrality which must be improvised as occasions arise, and not a hard and fast rule saying what we are going to do or what we are not going to do if we become involved in war.

Mr. WALSH. If, as the Senator indicated, there is involved in the troubles of Europe an ambition upon the part of Germany, for instance, to extend its territory, and also on the part of Italy; if that is their state of mind, and that is one of the purposes actuating them in the direction of war with France and Great Britain, does the Senator argue that this country ought to accept the status quo in the world so far as territorial possessions are concerned, and say: "Whatever you now have is all right. Whatever any country in the world now has is all right; but from now on we are going to resist any attempt by any government to extend its territory and take control of any more subject peoples?"

Mr. LOGAN. No; I do not take that position. I do not care anything about possessions, or who has them. I am not particularly interested in them. What I care about is the United States of America. I do not want to see France and England conquered, because that would weaken our defense. I do not want to see a pistol held to the head of either of them, compelling them to cede air bases, naval bases, or territory near our shores. The only way I can see for us to protect ourselves, short of war itself, is to lend encouragement to the democracies, which are our first line of defense, regardless of what anybody may say or think about it. I think we are serving our people, and I want to do the thing which satisfies my own conscience first, and which squares with the best interests of this Government.

If it should be necessary to fight to preserve the life of our Nation, let me say that I am not one of those who are afraid to go to foreign countries. I would prefer to have our battles fought in some other nation, that it should be their cities that should be burned and their women and children who should be destroyed, than to have the battles fought here, among our own people. I am not afraid of a war in a foreign country; but there is no occasion for us ever to have one except as a matter of self-defense.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator for indulging me for these questions. I wanted to get his viewpoint.

Does the Senator think that if England and France turned to dictatorships, Germany and Italy would abandon their ambitions for additional possessions, and peace would prevail in Europe?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know. I think perhaps one of the greatest mistakes ever made was in the Versailles Treaty, when it was attempted to despoil Germany of everything, and place upon her burdens that she could not carry. I have no sympathy with the present German Government; but injustices were done to Germany. Perhaps if the rule of fairness had prevailed, and the treaty had been more considerate of Germany and what Germany could do, instead of imposing impossible terms, there might not be a dictator in Germany today.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator for permitting me to have the opportunity of making these inquiries of him.

If the Senator will indulge me, I should like to say that in my opinion—and I hope I am as conscientious in that opinion as I know the Senator is in his opinion—there is no quarrel in Europe over forms of government. The root of the trouble in Europe is over possessions, over lands, over control of subject peoples, and over the material resources of the world. In my opinion, it is no business of this country, blessed by the Almighty and occupying an isolated position in a hemisphere of its own, to undertake to determine where justice or injustice lies in any corner of the world except in the 48 States of the United States. I am absolutely convinced that when and if war is raging all about us, there is one certain, sure, and absolute way to keep out of war. That way is not to try to administer justice, because we cannot do it; is not to mix in the affairs of other governments; but it is to mind our own business; to be neutral—honestly, truthfully, directly, and positively neutral.

We should mind our own business, attend to our own affairs, and let the world know that we intend to continue to mind our own business, mind our own affairs, and let the world know it more than by words, but by actions and by deeds. If we do so, then as surely as I am standing here we shall avoid involvement in whatever wars may come. We shall enjoy peace, and we shall enjoy a reign of happiness and prosperity for the American people. If we do not follow a strict course of neutrality and detachment from European quarrels, then it is equally certain that when war comes in Europe, we shall find ourselves in it, as we were in 1918.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Massachusetts has very clearly stated his views. Of course, the state of neutrality is a phantasy. There is no such thing. Besides, this thing of attending to our own business is much more difficult than the Senator expresses it. Our business ramifies throughout the world. If the speech of the Senator had been made 100 years ago, I could have agreed with it fully; but conditions have changed. That which affects one nation, however far away it may be from us, affects us. If there is a contest over possessions in Europe, the greed of some of the nations concerned could very easily be satisfied by allowing them to come over here on our side and take something. To that we could not agree.

I am not in favor of war. I hate war. I have reasons to hate war; but there are many things that are worse than war, because there are many things that are worse than death.

If I see danger approaching this Nation, when I have reasonable grounds on which to base my opinion that there is danger to this Nation, in my judgment, we should not sit quietly and wait until armies land on our shores or until battle planes drop bombs on our citizens or until foreign navies bombard our cities. I believe in protecting ourselves by taking advantage of the first opportunity. Where that will lead to, no one can know. That is the danger of trying to determine policies in advance; that is the danger of neutrality policies. We do not know what 24 hours may bring forth; we do not know what a few hours may bring forth.

So, as I have said, I do not believe that this Nation should enter into an alliance or agreement with any other nation on earth that it will do or not do anything. I say that this Nation ought to be ready at all times to do what it pleases, in a legal way, and that it ought not to be bound to be neutral as between any other nations but that it ought to stand on the watchtower looking over the world to find whether there is danger of America becoming involved or being destroyed or our form of government being destroyed because of anything that may arise anywhere in the world.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I shall be very brief, but I feel I should like to go on record now that I am in favor of the measure before us. I am for it because, despite any misgivings which I might have had before the last few days were given over to debate, I am now convinced that the enactment of this measure is absolutely necessary to provide for the adequate defense of our country. I am convinced, also, that the pending measure has no other purpose and is not in any sense provocative or entangling or intended to be so.

In recognizing the proposal under discussion as being justified as a measure of national defense, and only that, I do not mean that I am unmindful of the warning that has been sounded by many Senators since the bill came before the Senate. No one has been more faithful in his attendance during this debate or more interested than myself. It would be difficult for me or any other Member of this body to add much to the thorough discussion which has taken place during the past several days. These discussions have covered the whole gamut of foreign policy, entangling alliances, embroilments in the disputes of others, the extent of our own military and naval preparedness, and this Nation's ability to organize quickly in the event of war.

Personally, I am convinced that there are no subjects on which the citizenry of this country is more united, regardless of racial extraction or religious belief, than that of an adequate national defense, on the one hand, and the conviction, the determination, on the other hand, that this country should mind its own business and refrain from participation in any wars of any kind on any foreign soil. Nothing that has been said in the debate so far has shaken my conviction with respect to these two principles. They both are my own convictions, convictions I will adhere to always. I am convinced, moreover, that the hours we have spent in debate have been well spent, for certainly no Senator or Member of the House of Representatives or official of the Government, however high or low, can escape recognition of the fact that this measure is designed and intended for defense and defense alone, and that nothing in connection with it or in any other connection should be allowed even to make a start toward drawing us into any conflict of any sort other than one to protect our own shores.

I should like to add in conclusion, that New Jersey is extremely anxious and concerned—insistent, in fact—that the Nation have a complete and wholly adequate national defense in every sense of the word. I do not mean to be sectional; but I want to emphasize, nonetheless, that we in New Jersey recognize that if the United States were ever attacked, in all probability the Atlantic seaboard and the Jersey coast itself would be one of the major theaters of war. This is not mere speculation or conjecture on my part. It is a recognized fact. And if I am right that the demand of New Jersey for a completely adequate national defense is justified, then, by the same token, this defense is just as necessary for the Nation itself, of which New Jersey is such an important part.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	King	Reed
Andrews	Davis	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Donahay	Lee	Russell
Austin	Ellender	Lewis	Schwartz
Bailey	Frazier	Lodge	Sheppard
Bankhead	George	Logan	Shipstead
Barbour	Gerry	Lucas	Smathers
Barkley	Gibson	Lundeen	Smith
Bilbo	Gillette	McKellar	Stewart
Bone	Glass	McNary	Stewart
Borah	Green	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Utah

Chavez	Holt	Overton	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Pepper	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	White
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am for adequate national defense. I am prepared to vote for any reasonable appropriations necessary for national defense. But national defense may mean one of several things.

In my own mind I am confused about the policy of the United States with reference to other countries and to world affairs. I find the same confusion reflected in conversations with all sorts of people. The mail which I daily receive, not only from my own constituents but from other States, reflects this uncertainty.

What is national defense? What are we to defend? What is to be our relation to, and possible participation in, the policies of other nations? Are we to attend to our own business on the Western Hemisphere, or are we to undertake to influence or direct affairs in Europe, Asia, and Africa? Are we going to tell other people what kind of a government they should adopt? And if they do not agree with the suggestions we make and the advice we give, what are we going to do about it?

All these questions are involved in the so-called policy of national defense.

The confusion existing has resulted from acts not only of the present but of previous administrations which were not consistent during different periods. It is, I think, not unfair to say that the extreme degree of confusion existing today begins with an address in which the highest authority of the land suggested a quarantine against certain influences in other countries of the world, and was emphasized by a message to this body which, taken by itself and at its face value, would have indicated a degree of immediate danger that would naturally alarm people.

If I do not share that view, it may be because I am not fully informed as to these matters; but certainly my judgment is an honest one, based upon my conception of the duty of the United States in relation to the rest of the world.

I feel that before we map out a national-defense program and appropriate the hundreds of millions and billions of dollars necessary to make that program effective, I should like to have answers to these questions:

In the first place, what is it that the United States proposes to defend?

In the second place, against whom may we logically expect to be called upon to defend ourselves?

If we are to defend continental United States, Hawaii, the Panama Canal Zone, and the nations of Central and South America against outside aggression, that calls for one kind of a national-defense program.

If we are to include the Philippines within the area of national defense of the United States, that calls for a more extensive program and brings in a number of factors that complicate our entire foreign policy.

If national defense is to be stretched to include the defense of certain European nations against other nations, if our eastern lines of defense include, say, the boundaries of France or Britain, that is still another problem.

My own feeling is that the foreign policy of the United States should include defense of our own territories, of course; it should include the defense of Central and South American countries against aggression from other continents, but certainly not interference in the internal affairs of the countries of Latin America. But I am unalterably opposed to formulating a national-defense program upon the basis that we have any destiny, or any duty, or any business at all in attempting to settle the boundary disputes of Europe, or Asia, or Africa.

I did not agree with the policy of the Hoover administration that it was the duty of the United States to take the lead in preventing the rape of Manchuria by Japan. With virtually every other citizen of this country I emphatically disapprove of that act and the acts of barbarism in China that have followed. But to me the United States is not a world policeman to keep world peace, to act as a judge or arbiter, to settle differences between or boundary lines of countries on another continent.

I do not undertake to say what element of truth or lack thereof there may have been in the published reports that the President of the United States indicated to a committee of this body that our boundary line was on the Rhine or in France. I hope there is no truth in it. However, I cannot but feel that something must have been said to give Members of this body the impression that we have a deep concern in and a duty as to boundary-line questions in Europe. I am impelled to the conclusion that the proposed and much-discussed national-defense program is predicated upon some conception of that kind.

The boundary lines of the peoples and nations of Europe have been shifting and shifting for 2,500 years. Europe gives every indication of fighting over boundary lines and spheres of influence for centuries to come. Take a look at Europe. Go back a few years. Go back a few centuries. Go back more than 2,000 years.

Wars and threats of wars are not new to Europe. Dictators are not new to Europe. Look back to the time of Greece, the Greek wars, and Alexander the Great. Move up a few centuries to the Roman wars and Caesar, who was so great that he was not even called "the great," but was just called Caesar.

There were wars during the Middle Ages. Remember Charlemagne the Great. There was a whole series of dynastic wars—Spain, Austria, France, England, Holland, Prussia, Sweden, Russia. Remember Frederick the Great, Peter the Great, and a swarm of lesser figures that flit across the pages of history.

Then came Napoleon, whom also historians do not deem it necessary to call the great. We still remember the World War, which Stuart Chase rightly observed produced nobody the great.

In the current debate, which has occupied the attention of the Senate this week, we have heard occasional references to the disruption of Czechoslovakia. With other American citizens, I deplore that result; but it was not a new thing in Europe. Certainly the able Senators who figuratively shed tears over the rough treatment of that country could not have been so ignorant of history as to have forgotten that only 153 years ago an even greater country was "partitioned." Once upon a time the monarchs—dictators to all intents and purposes—of Russia, Austria, and Prussia agreed between themselves, and without asking leave of anybody else, to partition Poland, and did so. Not until after the World War was Poland restored as a national entity.

No student of history could fail to recall that at the height of his power Napoleon brought under his will the governments and peoples of most of the countries of western Europe. After triumphant campaigns by his army he annexed these countries to France, or placed upon their thrones members of his own family or pawns of his own creation.

We have become alarmed about the growth of dictatorships in Europe. We especially do not like Dictator Hitler; at least, I do not. But certainly nothing in the accomplishments of Dictator Hitler in the past several years even remotely approaches the scope of power attained by Napoleon at the peak of his career.

All through thousands of years the winners of Europe's wars have tried to fix boundaries and make those boundaries permanent. Napoleon failed. The edifice erected through his great genius crumbled with his defeat.

Metternich attempted to strait jacket Europe after the Napoleonic wars, and failed. England and France—who wanted us to help, but we wisely refused to join the League of Nations—attempted to strait jacket Europe again after the World War. The attempt was doomed to failure.

During several hundred years England, with considerable success, has worked for a balance of power in Europe. What that really means is to have the nations of continental Europe fight each other and weaken each other. When necessary, England has joined forces against the strong men who have arisen, one after another, and has torn them down. But such a policy means one war after another, and with each war, and even between wars, a constant succession of shifting boundaries.

Great Britain follows the policy which it deems is to its own interest. It refused to become excited when Secretary Stimson, under the Hoover administration, took the lead in trying to stop Japan in Manchuria. Great Britain was not interested, at least, not to the extent of taking any action.

Great Britain became greatly excited when Italy undertook to do and did do in Ethiopia what Japan had done in China. There was no difference in principle in these two events. The difference lay in Great Britain's foreign policy. The life line of the British Empire runs through the Mediterranean Sea and down the Suez Canal. Italy is the one formidable power that might threaten this life line. Great Britain did not want Italy to obtain control of a country adjoining its own territories and contiguous to its own life line. On the other hand, France, the partner of Great Britain, was not greatly concerned about the Italian threat to Ethiopia. If reports current at the time were to be accepted, France had a private understanding with Italy that it could go ahead.

When the Spanish civil war arose, France realized that it could not afford to have a country south of the Pyrenees under the influence of the Fascist powers, one of which, Germany, also bordered France on the northeast, and was the power which France most greatly feared. On the other hand, Great Britain was not excited over the possible success of the Spanish revolutionists; in fact, their sympathy generally ran to the Franco side, and Britain restrained France from giving aid to the Loyalist government. Both France and Great Britain, as a result of these cross purposes, are now in an uncertain and anxious situation with regard to the policy that the Franco government will follow.

I mention these things only to show that the two so-called "great democracies," which in some quarters are described as the first line of defense for the democracies of the world, including the United States of America, do not agree on foreign policies between themselves and cannot always adjust their varying interests to common action. If these two great powers of Europe having an immediate and vital concern in world political policies cannot agree, how can the United States undertake to interfere in any way, or give any suggestions on European affairs, without being absurd, and without opening the way to entanglements which would inevitably lead us into war?

It is a nice phrasing for American spokesmen to discuss what we can do short of war. I do not think we can do much, if anything, without considering the remote and ultimate consequences. Europe, I repeat, has warred over boundaries for more than a thousand years, and will continue to war over boundaries a thousand years to come, so far as I can tell. The point I desire to make is that even if we wished to do it, even if it were wise for us to try to settle these European boundary disputes, it would be suicidal folly for us to attempt to do it.

It would be equally futile for us to inject ourselves into the Orient and take up a nebulous but very real white man's burden there. For that reason, I am opposed to extending our line of defense to Guam. Our national-defense policy should be confined to defense of the Western Hemisphere. Our program should confine itself within the bounds of that policy.

This policy was first defined by President Monroe. I shall not indulge in any discussion as to whether there is any inconsistency between the Farewell Address of the first President, George Washington, and the Monroe Doctrine. That has been touched upon in debate this week, and I think fully covered. As for myself, I do not think so. I shall refer, however, to an interpretation of this document by a great Democratic Secretary of State during the second Cleveland administration. I now quote an extract from a letter from Richard Olney, Secretary of State, dated July 20, 1895, to Thomas F. Bayard, then Ambassador to Great Britain:

There is, then, a doctrine of American public law, well founded in principle and abundantly sanctioned by precedent, which entitles and requires the United States to treat as an injury to itself the forcible assumption by a European power of political control over an American State.

This is found on page 559 of Papers Relating to the Foreign Relations of the United States, published in 1896.

Secretary Olney, being a forthright and vigorous man, was not content with a general statement. A controversy between Great Britain and Venezuela was pending. In a note to Great Britain, Secretary Olney said:

Today the United States is practically sovereign on this continent, and its fiat is law upon the subjects to which it confines its interposition.

I was a young man when President Cleveland's Secretary of State sent this message, but it has rung in my ears from that day to this. I do not interpret this declaration as meaning an interference with the political, social, or commercial affairs of any other nation on the Western Hemisphere. I do interpret it, and accept it today, as a declaration of policy of the United States to the effect that we will not tolerate any political interference on this hemisphere from any European, and, I may add, any Asiatic nation.

In the light of what I have said, in the light of our history, in the light of our experience, my belief is that the United States cannot and should not interfere directly or indirectly in affairs peculiar to Europe or to Asia. What form of government the peoples of those continents have, what their social customs may be, are none of our affair. If they are unable to agree upon boundary lines and minority questions, that is none of our business. To make it our business is to step outside of our proper sphere, and that can only result in trouble.

It is a sufficient job for a nation even as great as ours to guard a hemisphere. It is my belief that in our own interest, and in the interest of other countries on this side of the globe, it is the duty of the United States to assume that degree of guardianship which will protect our political institutions from threat and danger from outside this continent.

To me a proper policy of national defense is confined to this hemisphere. Whatever is necessary to that end, I desire that my Government shall do. Whatever means of defense are required should be provided, and I shall vote to provide them. But no more. Take Guam again, for example. By no stretch of the imagination can the fortification of Guam be considered as a national-defense matter from the standpoint either of the United States or of the Western Hemisphere. Its fortification would be useful only in an aggressive war against an Asiatic nation. I do not contemplate any such war, and shall not vote for any appropriation of money which even remotely contemplates that end. If we wish to improve a harbor at Guam for purely air-transportation and water-navigation purposes, I have no objection, but our policy should be clearly defined.

I am no pacifist. I can conceive of circumstances and conditions in which the United States of America may need to defend not only itself, but the hemisphere upon which we are placed. Whatever is necessary to that end should be done. Loose talk about forms of government on other continents, however distasteful they may be, should be stopped. If it be assumed that the United States is to consider the Rhine or France as our frontier, then by the same line of logic, Germany and Italy may fairly consider the Panama Canal as their frontiers. I do not agree with either. I do not like dictatorships. I especially detest Hitler, but the affairs of Germany are their own affairs, not mine, and not the affairs of this country. As I said in the beginning, I do not contemplate making the United States a "policeman" for the world.

While we confine ourselves to such a national defense policy as I have outlined, the answer to the question, against whom will we have to defend ourselves, will be very simple—no nation in the world for as many years as those now living may see into the future.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in any well-considered plan of national defense it is not possible to exaggerate the importance of economic efficiency. The workman back of the guardsman is of equal importance, and without his unfailing support all plans of military, naval, or aerial strategy will fail. We have given too little thought to the maintenance of labor standards in behalf of national defense. One of the original provisions in this bill as reported from the committee, but now by common consent withdrawn, as I understand, had the effect of exempting factories accepting educational orders from compliance with the Davis-Bacon Act, the Walsh-Healey Act, and the "kick-back" law. I mention this not because it is now subject to debate but simply as an illustration of the need for more careful thought in these matters.

I cannot conceive that any plan of national defense based on the violation of well-recognized standards of labor efficiency can ever succeed. When these standards go down we might as well admit that we have already lost our battles, for we shall then soon reach the point where we shall have but little worth defending. We shall have found the enemies within our gates more to be feared than those without.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bone in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DAVIS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Does the Senator know that the amendment to which he objects has been withdrawn and will not be introduced?

Mr. DAVIS. I am aware of that. I have already pointed out in my remarks that the amendment has been withdrawn. Had the Senator been listening attentively to what I have said he would have noticed that point. I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the amendment had been withdrawn by the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator. I was listening attentively, but I did not understand the Senator's statement to be as he said it was. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, we have come to a fair measure of understanding of the close relationship which exists between economic and military combat. We know that the two are inseparably connected and that a war of economic standards may easily prove as destructive as the carnage of battle, and may, in fact, frequently lead on to actual hostilities. In a majority of instances war is fought for the protection of economic objectives considered valuable from a national point of view. If our American standards of labor protection are broken down in the name of national defense we shall have but little reason to stand by our national colors, for already they will have been dishonored. The policy represented in this bill on that point was both short-sighted and illogical, for it had no justification either from the standpoint of economic need or military strategy. It would be difficult to imagine how anyone could find genuine reasons for the admission of this policy into our national defense program. In fact, I am at a loss to explain how this antieconomic proposal was ever included in the bill and I am gratified to learn that it has been withdrawn.

Mr. President, no imagination is required to realize that had the proposed exemption been maintained as originally provided in the bill, the extension of the principle implied could speedily, in time of military emergency, be carried over into the entire range of military procurement. It is obvious from the wording of the statement sent down by the War Department in defense of this outrageous proposal that it was intended, for the sole justification given was to "procure the machinery necessary to commence production without delay in time of emergency." If war should come next week or next month this is the sort of emergency psychology which would be thrown into operation, if that provision had remained in the bill, and in the name of an emergency anything closely or remotely related to this principle could be ordered. Have we not already suffered enough under the guise of recurring emergencies during the last few years to make us unwilling to be beguiled by another one of these unwarranted pleas? This time it is called national defense.

Mr. President, the dangers which confront the American people and which occasion the legislation now before us are neither imaginary nor distant. They are very real, and they demand a genuine measure of national defense such as we now propose to advance. The perils arising from conflicting ideological standards abroad have already had their fateful repercussions in our own midst. In this time of growing national need we can ill afford to tamper with the basic foundations of our economic welfare. The difficulties of the present hour call for an increasing faith in our national standards of labor and industry. Any partisan attack on these standards in the name of national defense will quickly be repulsed by the American people, who are now in no mood to allow selfish partisanship to rob them of their precious heritage.

Mr. President, if the provision to which I have referred had been allowed to stand, it would have been a blow both at the freedom and justice which American workmen have striven so long to achieve under the protection of significant laws. If the Davis-Bacon Act, the Walsh-Healey Act, or the "kick-back" law are unsound or in need of amendment, I would be the first to ask that hearings be called to consider their improvement; but I shall be unwilling to accept a complete destruction of these wage and industrial standards without the advancement of one substantial reason against them.

Mr. President, if an amendment be needed to the Davis-Bacon law to permit of the letting of a contract without delay, such an amendment can be secured in an orderly way. It has been suggested by students of this law that the officer in charge of the emergency project would be authorized immediately to set the wages he thought to be prevailing. The successful bidder could then proceed while the Labor Department made the necessary investigation. If the Department found higher wages to be prevailing, the Government would pay the workers the difference between the wages received and the amounts they would have been paid by the contractor had the Department's findings been set as the required scale. Compensation of the workers would be based upon the theory that they should not suffer because the supervisor of construction had set the minimum scale too low. In this way emergencies can be met by the existing Davis-Bacon law or amended if it shall be found to be necessary. The power of supervisors of construction to take exceptions to the usual process of predetermination, of course, would have to be governed strictly by regulations which would precisely define the scope of an emergency. Surely there is some better way to meet the problem than by this extreme proposal to wipe out our national wage standards overnight in the name of national defense.

Mr. President, I wish to speak no word which would convey to anyone a belief in war as a desirable way of settling international differences. I wish to have no part in the spirit of hate and name calling, which is altogether dangerous on both sides of the Atlantic. The issue of peace and war is fundamental to all we hold dear, and I have no desire other than a fervent desire for peace.

I believe in the principles of sound national defense in our day as a basis of peace. My belief in national defense and peace has led me and shall continue to lead me in the conviction that the economic welfare of the American people is of first importance as a safeguard against war. The nations which today have suffered a break-down of their internal standards of sound economic principles are the nations which, because of their grave and widespread needs, hold the greatest threat of war. If the American people are to be kept safe, we must preserve the basic standards of labor and industry which make for peace and prosperity within our own borders. The seeds of war are first to be found within a nation rather than beyond its boundary lines. If this provision had been retained in the bill we should have been started on the road to war, for we should have started war within ourselves.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I apologize to the able Senator from Pennsylvania. I have been busy before the Supreme Court and did not hear the opening portion of the address of the Senator. However, his latter remarks attract me. Is it possible that there is a provision in the bill which has to do with changes in what are referred to as the Walsh-Healy Act and the Davis-Bacon Act?

Mr. DAVIS. There is a provision in the bill which would have that effect. However, the distinguished chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], has informed me that it is agreed all around that that amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. LEWIS. Therefore the amendment will be taken out of the bill, leaving the bill as a defense measure?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes. I am now speaking of what would have happened if that particular amendment from the committee had remained in the bill.

Mr. LEWIS. I appreciate the information given by the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to take this opportunity to congratulate the able senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] on the way in which he has handled this matter to the satisfaction of every Member of the Senate.

If these basic labor and industrial laws require amendment, I repeat, I shall cooperate with those who seek to strengthen and improve them. I shall favor hearings open to all, at which all sides may be fairly heard; but I shall not consent to wrecking these laws under the false guise of national defense.

Mr. President, yesterday was observed as St. David's day in many places all over the world and in our own land. Our citizens of Welsh descent gathered together in remembrance of this patron saint of the Cymric tradition, and once again renewed our loyalty to the sterling qualities of character associated with his name. The Welsh are known everywhere for their loyalty to the flags under which they live and serve. It is a tradition with us which we have sought ever to uphold. The Welsh in America have sought to follow the heroic example of that distinguished Welshman, Robert Morris, who was first to offer up his life, his fortune, and his all to meet the call of this country.

The Welsh are a liberty-loving, peace-minded people. We receive this as a priceless heritage learned at our mothers' knees. This is the principle of peace and freedom which I now seek to protect. I believe in national defense only insofar as it shall bring us a strong guaranty of peace and freedom. By preference I should desire to vote an appropriation for materials to be used in schools, hospitals, housing, and highways rather than in battleships or bombing planes. With world conditions as they are today, this is not now the choice which confronts us. I shall vote for this bill as a patriotic duty. I regard it as necessary. However, I wish to scrutinize the measure closely with a view to holding it strictly to the needs of the defense it is intended to give. I do not want to vote one unnecessary dollar which shall ultimately be regarded as waste. I do want to vote for the amount necessary to provide a proper defense for the great United States of America.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I realize that it would indeed be an anticlimax for me to enlarge on the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. I realize that this is especially so in view of the fact that the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, of which committee I was formerly a member, has withdrawn the provision in question from the measure. However, I cannot refrain from at least declaring my alarm and deep concern over the fact that a provision of this kind could have found its way at all into this or any other measure.

Like the Senator from Pennsylvania, I noticed the provision as soon as the bill was printed. Together we agreed to stand shoulder to shoulder to protect labor's just rights and interests. I then made up my mind, as I always have done in the past and as I always shall do in the future, to guard against such encroachments on labor's just rights.

I consider the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania a very valuable contribution, and I am very glad to take this opportunity briefly to say not only in what complete agreement I am with them, but how, like him, I was prepared to fight to the very end any threat to the high standard of living of labor, any threat to the protection of prevailing rates of wages in respect to all governmental undertakings, or any threat to the Walsh-Healey Act or the Davis-Bacon Act.

I am very glad and greatly relieved that the provision of the pending measure found on page 14, lines 7 to 10, inclusive, has been eliminated. It never should have been included in the bill at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment to the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of California obtained the floor.

Mr. NYE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President—

Such subtle covenants shall be made,
Till peace itself is war in masquerade.

I read that couplet of Dryden because of the singular propaganda that now afflicts our country. On a bill of the kind now pending there has arisen a propaganda within the United States dealing with the subject of what we shall do and how we shall fight that has never seen its equal except twenty-odd years ago when we were confronting the great World War.

This propaganda, Mr. President, has made of certain devoted gentlemen all sorts of ugly monsters; it has led the trigger men of the administration—outside the Chamber, of course—to call everybody who does not agree with what has been said or who does not agree with exactly what is written, in the way that it is written, names, rather invidious names, and to apply to them epithets such as no other discussion than that of war could bring to pass.

At the outset, Mr. President, I wish to say I am not a Nazi-ist, I am not a Fascist, thank God, I am not a Communist, and I do not believe, to employ a much misused word, in the ideology of any one of those particular groups. I belong to nothing of that sort; I abhor them all. I detest dictators, whether they are actual or potential, and wherever they may be. But, sir, as a humble American, as a little American, if you please, I claim the right to speak my mind upon the question of this Nation's entry into war and upon the question of what the foreign policy of this Nation may be. I may be utterly wrong and wholly mistaken; there may not be in what I utter a single atom of sense; but I claim the right to utter it, and in uttering it leave it to be determined whether or not there is anything in what I may thus approach.

In this bill which, of course, none oppose in reality, a bill which is designed for the public defense, there is, in my opinion, very little to quarrel about except certain small amendments here and there; but, because of its magnitude, because, presumably, it is intended to last for a long period of time, there is that involved in it that deals with the policy of the Nation, in fact, the foreign policy of the Nation is involved inextricably in the measure. The war policy of this Nation, the foreign policy of this Nation, are the subjects, therefore, to which I address myself.

I wish to make plain again that I am not here in opposition to the major purposes of the pending bill at all. I will endeavor to demonstrate before I have finished that there is not any reason that a logical mind cannot dispose of in the fear that is sought to be engendered in behalf of the bill, the fear that drives our people into doing something that perhaps they would not do under any other impetus. I will endeavor to show, sir, that there is not any danger to this Nation from airplanes; there is not any danger of this Nation being bombarded by airplanes from across the sea; and that all the fears that are built upon such a premise are wholly misleading, and are misleading for some purpose that we do not know and for some reason that will not be told to us.

Mr. President, in that behalf I desire to state the exact words of the President of the United States on our foreign policy, because I recognize, after all, he is the spokesman of the Nation and that what he says may lead us into war whether we want to go or not. I will resist going into war at his dictation or that of anybody else unless my conscience be satisfied; but I recognize the power that is his and the power that he may use at some time to do something which might not be in accord with that in which I myself believe.

We take the President's words as to the foreign policy of this Nation. We start with the President's speech in San Diego in 1935. We find there the President speaking in a fashion that my friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] or I might speak; the President then held views very similar to those that are held by us. He then said:

In the face of this apprehension the American people can have but one concern and speak but one sentiment; despite what happens in continents overseas, the United States of America shall and must remain, as long ago the Father of Our Country prayed that it might remain, unentangled and free.

This country seeks no conquest. We have no imperial designs. From day to day, and year to year, we are establishing more perfect assurance of peace with our neighbors. We rejoice especially in the prosperity, the stability, and the independence of all the American republics. We not only earnestly desire peace, but we are moved by a stern determination to avoid those perils that will endanger our peace with the world.

That was the position of the United States of America, concurred in by all our people, in 1935. From that expression there may be formulated a foreign policy for the United States concerning which no man could cavil and none could deny. From that speech and that speech alone there may be written chapter after chapter upon the designs of this country and upon its purposes, too, and in writing thus one may read the word of Mr. Roosevelt, the President, and the hearts of the people of this country.

So I tried my hand, Mr. President, at endeavoring to write a very brief and a very small policy for our country to follow, and I think, sir, with all my care, I have lost it. [Laughter.] Nevertheless, I will endeavor to recite it.

First, Mr. President, that America wants no war; America will fight a defensive war, but it wants no war.

Secondly, America, by a policy that should fit all occasions, will have no entangling alliances; but also, Mr. President, America will have no commitments, understandings, or agreements by which it might be taken into the vortex of war or by which it could be taken into the controversies of Europe.

Those two propositions, Mr. President, I lay down as fundamental, as propositions upon which this country has rested and this country will rest in the future. I do not care how many Members of this body may talk of fighting all sorts of wars with all sorts of governments. I do not care if those persons are endeavoring to put us upon the road of going forward like a Sir Galahad—or more like a Don Quixote—to reform every bit of the world and try to write our Government into the minds of every people. I do not care how many are in that category. I do not care who advocates it. The people of the United States, sir—and I think I speak advisedly—want nothing of that sort, and they will not have it in the days to come.

So those two fundamental principles I lay down, and they are in accordance with what the President stated first at San Diego.

I read again the San Diego speech, for it was a delightful speech, and warmed the cockles of my heart; for all these years I have been supporting and talking and preaching that doctrine, and I felt that at last, at last we had a President of the United States who stood for what I stood for and who would go through with this sort of foreign policy.

I read this language again:

In the face of this apprehension the American people can have but one concern and speak but one sentiment; despite what happens in continents overseas, the United States of America shall and must remain, as long ago the Father of his Country prayed that it might remain, unentangled and free.

What language for today! What language now, in 1939! But; oh, how glorious it was in 1935!

I touch only the high places in regard to this subject, Mr. President, because time will not permit and I do not care to tire with repetition often; but the President followed this with the enunciation at Chatauqua in 1937 of a principle that was quite similar:

We are not isolationists except insofar as we seek to isolate ourselves completely from war.

That is the kind of isolation in which we believe. "Isolationists" was an epithet applied to us during the period after the Great War when the endeavor was made to put over upon the people of the United States the infamous League of Nations. "Isolationists" then became a word of reproach in the mouths of many people in this country; but in this address the President takes up the cudgels for those who held that belief and says:

We are not isolationists except insofar as we seek to isolate ourselves completely from war.

Have you any quarrel with that? I thought I heard the statement made upon the floor of the Senate today that on all occasions this country ought to be ready to go forth and to make every other country on earth bow to its will. Not that that is an exact quotation, but that was the meaning of it—the significance of it to me. I deny it, and I deny it because this Nation has not such mission, and none such will our people tolerate.

Yet we must remember that so long as war exists on earth there will be some danger that even the nation which most ardently desires peace may be drawn into war.

He says:

I have seen war. I have seen war on land and sea. I have seen blood running from the wounded. I have seen men coughing out their gassed lungs. I have seen the dead in the mud. I have seen cities destroyed. I have seen 200 limping, exhausted men come out of line—the survivors of a regiment of 1,000 that went forward 48 hours before. I have seen children starving. I have seen the agony of mothers and of wives. I hate war.

Oh, what a glorious peroration! What a word painting was there! The President hated war. I hate war, and I think most of those within the sound of my voice hate war. Yet it is now being rammed down our throats, day after day, that war is the appropriate part for any nation to play in the world, particularly if we go to a limping democracy and help it in its desire to obtain for itself some other spoil from some other country.

Those were the two expressions, one on October 2, 1935, and the other on August 14, 1936. Then a change came over the spirit of our dreams. What caused it I do not know. Why it was that the President changed so suddenly from a statement of one sort to a statement of another is far beyond me. I do not question his motives. I do not question the motives of any man in this body. I learned long ago that I could not quarrel with any man on account of his vote here, no matter how wrong I thought it to be. I learned then, and have learned since, that to question any man's motives was something that was not appropriate for anyone in this body or elsewhere.

August 14, 1936, was the date of the last utterance. Were they not glorious utterances? Do you not think they were fine? I showed to my brother SHEPPARD a few moments ago a photograph that I highly prize, taken in the last war, of the Military Affairs Committee of the United States Senate. There are only two faces on that photograph that can be recognized here—his and mine. No other member of that committee today sits upon the Military Affairs Committee of the United States Senate.

Time makes wondrous changes in us. It teaches us many things. Time has taught me not to question motives, and not to abuse men because of their votes, however peculiar I may believe them to be.

Youth has its adventures; age its memories. I preserve my memories, and I want to preserve them until I die, without rancor, without malice, without ill feeling of any kind or any character.

But in 1937 a change came o'er the spirit of the dreams of the distinguished gentleman whose words I have read. He then said:

It seems to be unfortunately true that the epidemic of world lawlessness is spreading.

When an epidemic of physical disease starts to spread, the community approves and joins in a quarantine of the patients in order to protect the health of the community against the spread of the disease.

That was the celebrated "quarantine" speech, made in 1937 in Chicago. Then the President was going to quarantine certain nations of the earth who had become of a sort that he did not like, and I did not like, and you did not like. He was going to quarantine them; and when he made that speech, all of the glorious feeling I had prior to that time evaporated. He was going to quarantine other nations; and "quarantining" them meant whipping them. You cannot gainsay that, and you cannot attach any other meaning to the word than just exactly that meaning.

The result of the speech upon the people of this country was such that it gave the President pause, and he did not then do anything in regard to his quarantining problem.

We find very lately that the President says:

Words may be futile, but war is not the only means of commanding a decent respect for the opinions of mankind. There are many methods short of war, but stronger and more effective than mere words, of bringing home to aggressor governments the aggregate sentiments of our own people.

That was in his opening message, given to the Congress of the United States this year.

"There are methods stronger than wars which will make the other nations do their duty." That is about the size of it, methods stronger than war, and stronger than anything that may be suggested as to war. That could mean only one thing, sanctions—sanctions—the favorite word of the League of Nations people, some of whom even yet infest this Government. But there are not many of them left, thank heaven, there are very few; but he was going to levy sanctions, sanctions!

Talk about bombing communities, and killing little children with bullets sent from the air; talk about bombing cities, and having the innocent die with the guilty in those cities; talk about the horrors of bombing, bombing from the air! There is not any horror on earth that is like the levying of sanctions, resulting in the daily denial of food to little babes, and children, and mothers, to those who have not done a wrong to anybody on earth.

Apply sanctions! The chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, I regret to say, says just that thing in his speech, and that speech, I imagine, would not have been uttered without knowledge on the part of the President. But sanctions they have in mind—sanctions! I would rather see my grandsons go out and, with guns upon their shoulders, take their chance and fight than to be a party to levying sanctions upon an innocent people, and upon children, the weak, the sick, the lame, the halt—those who never did a wrong.

So we see how far we have traveled, and how far apart we have become. He may be right in what he says and I may be entirely wrong. You may hold that view if you desire. I have no objection if you all think that I am wrong and that he alone was right. But I still insist that to levy sanctions upon an unarmed people, an unprotected people, is worse than the bombing of a city or the killing of little children by the missiles which come from airplanes.

Since that time we have had various addresses. I shall not take time to go into them and I shall not take time to speak of them. I will draw the veil over the speeches which have been made in the House and in the Senate, by the head of the Naval Affairs Committee in the House and by the head of the Foreign Relations Committee in the Senate. I draw the veil. I would rather forget them. I would rather forget those speeches, that they had been made, because I do not believe in provocative speeches which may stir up war, and I do not believe in war.

Do not misunderstand me when I say that I do not believe in war and that I hate war. If war has to come, if we have to defend our homes, if we have to defend those institutions which are dear to us, we can fight, and we can all fight till the last man is gone, but it is a different proposition trying to impress our ideas upon somebody else, to tell a foreign people that they must have a government of a certain character or they will be put to the hazard of war.

Thus far we have heard enough to know what the foreign policy of this Nation is from one standpoint and what it is from another. I would not have the pending bill give to the War Department, outside of some small matters which we do not need to consider, any less than it does give. I would give them full measure of what is intended by this bill to be given, and I would give it, not that it is absolutely necessary, but that we might be absolutely sure so far as we ourselves are concerned.

I would not give it upon the theory that we are going to protect England or France or Russia or any other so-called democracy. I would not give it upon the theory of helping any other nation in the world but our own, and I would give it only to make assurance doubly sure, so we would not hereafter be plagued by the regret that we did not do what we might have done when the time was propitious, and the time for doing it was before us.

Yesterday some things were said about the French mission and about the sale of planes to the French mission. A clever defense was made for the President of the United States, a clever defense which was all right, and to which I did not object particularly. Everything that has been done by the Committee on Military Affairs for the purpose of enabling it and enabling us to know what was going on was, as I understood it, is held in part to be in confidence. I say that the French mission and the sale of planes to the French under the circumstances was done in secrecy and in stealth. I have no hesitancy in saying that, and if I do not prove it by the record, I hope I may be able to apologize to the Senate for thus saying.

Secrecy? The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who sits next me here, stated yesterday that there was no secrecy, that there was nothing that was inappropriate in that sale, and he tried to demonstrate it by various parts of the testimony given. I have not time to do more than run over some of that testimony. The attitude of the Army was—and this is unquestioned—that they did not know that a sale was to be made until they were ordered to give the right to the French to investigate. They did not know that the sale was to be made, and they were the ones primarily who should have known it. They had rules concerning planes. They had rules concerning the inspection of planes. Those rules were ruthlessly broken, and the French were accorded the right to go ahead.

Let us see what happened on the day of the accident. The Army yielded only because ordered to do so. Major Wolfe was on the ground, and he was attending to the matter, apparently, for the United States Government.

Before I forget it, let me just pay a tribute to one who has been forgotten. Let us stop long enough to shed a tear for the American pilot who was killed. No one thinks of him. The Frenchman who was with these people, under the name of Smithson, and who was dressed in overalls, so that he might be more disguised, fortunately, thank Heaven, escaped, but the poor pilot in the plane lost his life. Let us pause for just a moment and say a word in his behalf.

This man was an American pilot, that is all. In these parlous days what difference does it make if an American loses his life? That is nothing for us to talk about, nothing for us to say anything concerning—just an American, that is all. The Frenchman was saved, and that is enough. We can thank God for that, and we can feel that the other was a matter of little consequence, but let us in passing shed a tear for him.

We find General Craig saying in regard to this matter:

Airplane manufacturers cannot export military airplanes without the authority of the State Department, which does not grant such permission unless approved by the War Department.

Mind you, they do not permit the export of military planes by the manufacturer unless the State Department grants permission and the War Department visas it.

The War Department does not approve such action except in the case of planes which have been superseded by later and more effective models.

That is it. There was a model out there in the Douglas airplane factory, a model by which I assume the United States set some store, a model which was to serve the United States of America in case the War Department bought it or the War Department dealt with it.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield; and let me say to the Senator that I am very glad to have the Senator interrupt me if I am in error in anything.

Mr. MINTON. Did not the Senator discover that the airplane which crashed in California was one owned entirely by the corporation which produced it and was a plane in which the United States Government had no interest at all?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes; that is so; that is, it was said to be so afterwards.

Mr. MINTON. Was it not so?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Wait a moment. I will show in a moment that the United States Government was exercising jurisdiction over that plane on the day when it was taken up in the air.

Mr. MINTON. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Certainly.

Mr. MINTON. Was that because the United States Government had any interest in the plane or merely because they had a working agreement with the manufacturer of the plane that they would not reveal that plane to anyone unless the United States War Department agreed to it?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not know.

Mr. MINTON. The record shows.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not know whether it was one reason or the other.

Mr. MINTON. The record shows.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If the record shows it, very well.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So far as that is concerned, I think the record is perfectly clear that the United States Government had no investment in this plane, except insofar as the research of the War Department had gone into the drawing of the specifications. Nevertheless that this plane was such that whether as a matter of law or by common consent it was subject to the regulations of the War Department, to which the Senator from California has just referred, to the extent that that plane could not have been inspected except on the order of the War Department, and could not have been exported except on the approval of the State Department, which was contingent on the order of the War Department.

The fact also remains that the War Department did protest against the inspection of this plane by the French mission, and the showing of our plans to the French mission, and that our War Department was overruled.

So far as the strictly legal proposition that is involved is concerned, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] is probably correct to the extent that if the Douglas Co. had insisted upon the export of these planes to France or any other country, probably no restraint could have been placed upon it by the Government of the United States, except under one construction of the Espionage Act dating back to the World War. But the fact remains that these regulations were in force; that they had been observed by the airplane manufacturing companies; that the plane was in preparation for entry into the Army competition; that it was considered, as General Arnold testified, the very latest word in the airplane development of the United States, and that on the order of the War Department this inspection was finally permitted, and as the result of that the plane crashed, and the American pilot was killed, as the Senator from California has read.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so that I may read from the record?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I wish to read what General Craig said on page 130 of the hearings, as follows:

The Government has no interest whatever in this plane, Senator. It might never have been supplied. The Government did not have one cent in it.

The only reason the Government entered any objection, as I understand, to the French mission viewing this plane, was simply in keeping with the policy of release which it had always adhered to. That was the only reason. It was a pro forma objection. There had to be an exception to that rule. They could not approve such action unless it was an exception to what it considered to be its own rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not care what the reason was. The War Department would not give its consent until it had its authority from the President to give that consent.

Mr. MINTON. Will the Senator point in the record to anything to that effect?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Does the Senator from Indiana deny it? I have a recollection of three "chits" being spoken of; one of them was for the War Department, one was for the Navy Department, and the other one was for the Treasury. Does the Senator deny that they did not give their consent until they received word from the President that he wished them to do so?

Mr. MINTON. I deny that there is anything in the record that the War Department did not give its consent until the President told it to. The only thing that I find in the record, as I read the record—

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am treating the Senator with fairness, and I am treating the Senator in the best manner I know. The Senator ought to treat me with like fairness, and not ring the changes on it being in the record. If the Senator knows it, let him say so. If he does not know it, let him say so.

Mr. MINTON. I will say to the Senator that I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. All right.

Mr. MINTON. I have nothing to go by except the record.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator does not know it?

Mr. MINTON. No; I do not know it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. All right. We will leave it at that stage.

Mr. MINTON. And I am satisfied there is not anything in the record that will support any such statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. All right.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Since that question has been raised, I desire to make a statement as a member of the Military Affairs Committee. I do not have the particular reference to the record. The record has been changed and reprinted so many times that I cannot lay my finger on it at the moment, but I will no doubt be able to do so in a few moments. I will say as a member of the Military Affairs Committee, and on my responsibility as a Senator, that the testimony was to the effect that the War Department objected to the sale of this plane, and that they were ordered by higher authority to make the inspection with the view to the sale.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Of course I know that, and you know it. I admit that the Senator from Indiana does not know it, but you know it, and I know it, and all the people of the United States know it. [Laughter.]

After a discussion off the record between the Senator from Missouri, Mr. CLARK, and General Craig, General Craig made the remark:

So far as I know, there is no legal restriction to such action, but there is one in fact.

One in fact. General Arnold further said:

We do not know what planes were released for foreign sale. We never release any of our newer planes for foreign sale under existing policy. The planes that we release are only those that have been in production for at least a year. By that time we feel that there are so many newer developments that we are warranted in releasing the older types for sale.

That is, they held them for a year when there was any reason to believe that they would answer perfectly the purpose of the War Department, and after the year, then they released them for sale. If I am not correct, please correct me.

The testimony proceeds:

Senator THOMAS. Then it would be right to make this deduction, that our Government should not allow anything to go out until we had something better, if we happen to be a little bit ahead of other countries?

General ARNOLD. That has been our policy right along.

Senator THOMAS. I hope we are getting all that they have got, but I am more interested in just how carefully we are guarding those things that are ours.

General ARNOLD. We are guarding them to that extent. We have a definite policy which will prevent any of our later developments being cleared for sale.

So all through this testimony, without reading more of it, runs the theme—it runs like a thread through it all—that these were planes upon which the Army had its eyes. That it believed possibly there might be something of merit in them. That it did believe; in fact, that there was merit in the planes. And during all of this time they were holding onto the planes.

And it is said there was no secrecy about this transaction. No secrecy at all. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] yesterday, in his solemn voice and in stentorian tones, said that there was no secrecy in this transaction. Let us read the instructions to Major Wolfe. Major Wolfe was an Army officer at the Douglas aircraft plant. He was in charge of planes that were desired by the United States Government. Major Wolfe was there as the watchdog, as it were. General Arnold wired him thus:

Inform Maj. K. B. Wolfe that he is to arrange demonstration of attacking bomber Sunday to three members of a French mission and Captain Kraus, United States Navy, who are expected to arrive at either San Monica or Mines Field Sunday night. They are to inspect attacking bomber, secret accessories, fly in it, and negotiate for purchase. All of these negotiations must be made through Major Wolfe, Army representative, and the Douglas Co. Major Wolfe is to keep this information confidential and keep the Chief of the Air Corps informed as to actions taken.

No secrecy at all. It was just to keep it confidential. Just the same as you gentlemen of the Military Affairs Committee went down to the White House, and there was no secrecy at all, no secrecy in what is told you, but you are to keep it confidential, and if you do not you will all be given fits.

And thus it was with the airplane. Major Wolfe was to keep this information confidential, and keep the Chief of the Air Corps informed as to actions taken. That is signed "Arnold."

How was the message sent? Sent in his own private code, or in the Government code. I do not know which it was. It was sent in code, however, to Major Wolfe. Just another thing, so that it would not show any secrecy in the matter, the message was sent in code so that Major Wolfe would receive it in code, and therefore there would be no secrecy in connection with the transaction at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In respect to the matter of secrecy in connection with the code, I should like to direct the attention of the Senator to the fact that not only was this message sent in code but that two separate copies of the message were produced before the Military Affairs Committee, one coming from the Navy Department and the other from the War Department, which copies were not identical, and the explanation was that there may have been a mistake in the decoding of the message; but the omission changes the whole purpose and effect of the message.

In the copy of the order produced by the Navy Department the secret accessories were included as being demonstrated to the French mission, but in the copy produced by the War Department the secret accessories were not included. So, the matter of the code message seems to me to be of great importance in connection with this matter.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. There is no dispute in the evidence before the Military Affairs Committee that a message was sent by General Arnold to Major Wolfe in California that this exhibition was to be made exclusive of secret accessories.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I beg the Senator's pardon?

Mr. MINTON. Exclusive of secret accessories. Captain Kraus, when he was getting ready to leave California to come back, in order to have for his file the authority under which this exhibition was made to the French mission, asked Major Wolfe to furnish him a copy of the authority. Major Wolfe called his office, and the order was telephoned to Major Wolfe and copied off on the typewriter somewhere at Major Wolfe's directions. The word "less" was left out of the copy which Captain Kraus brought back. So there should be no inference drawn that the Navy Department had one kind of an order and the War Department had another, because the only persons who had the order, who were authorized to act and to be directed by it, had identically the same kind of order. In that order they were directed to exhibit the plane less secret accessories.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I mentioned the differentiation in the order only in connection with what the Senator from California had said about the use of a code as demonstrating the essential secretiveness of the whole transaction. It seems to me to go essentially to the fact of the secretiveness of the transaction, that an order was issued in a code so complicated that the responsible officer of the War Department on the ground who received the order was not able to decode it without giving a copy to his confrere of the Navy Department, which not only essentially changed but completely reversed the effect of the order as to secret accessories on the airplanes.

Mr. MINTON. If the Senator will pardon an interruption at this point, there was no evidence at all that there was a mistake in the decoding. The only evidence was that there must have been a mistake when Major Wolfe had the decoded message telephoned back to him, and in the copying of what came to him over the telephone.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. But the message was sent out in code.

Mr. MINTON. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. We are agreed on that.

Mr. MINTON. The confusion came not because of any code but because of some mistake in the telephoned message.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; that was to give publicity to it. [Laughter.] I have not mentioned the difference which has been suggested. It is in the record, and I hope that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] will go through the record.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will yield for just a moment, in connection with the discussion which took place among the Senator from California, the Senator from Indiana, and myself as to what is in the record with regard to the protest of the War Department and the instructions of the President of the United States, I should like to direct the attention of the Senator from Indiana, the Senator from California, and the Senate, to page 212 of the public record of the Military Affairs Committee, in which Secretary Morgenthau says, near the top of the page:

I thought I had made it plain that we did it at the request of the President.

Senator REYNOLDS. The President himself requested it?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. The President himself requested it.

Senator REYNOLDS. The President had never before requested it. All right.

Secretary MORGENTHAU. The President asked us to do it.

Mr. MINTON. To do what?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. To permit the French mission to go to Los Angeles and inspect the plane with a view to purchase.

Mr. MINTON. That is quite a different thing from the President ordering the Secretary of War to give his approval to the sale of the planes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator may recall that the Secretary of War testified that he did it under instructions of the President of the United States.

Mr. MINTON. I challenge that statement, and appeal to the record.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If I have time I shall furnish the record. I am not sure that I shall have the time, so I will let the point go by.

However, the question arises in connection with the three little chits. Does the Senator remember the reference by the President to the three little chits that he had? That is what he called them. Never mind. It does not make any difference one way or the other. In order that there may be no misunderstanding about the question, I will say that by "chits" I mean three little pieces of paper, similar to those upon which the President is accustomed to write to different persons. We have all seen them in the course of our long service. My recollection is that the President called attention to the fact that he had given these chits out to the people who were entitled to them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I suggest to the Senator from California that they are probably to be found in the asterisks which appear on page 212 between the question by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] and Secretary Morgenthau's answer.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I see. [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Many things took place in the Military Affairs Committee which were off the record. Probably one of them is represented by the asterisks. Many things which had no sinister purpose to them at all took place off the record. I can assure the Senator from Wisconsin that the asterisks to which he refers probably represent a very innocent observation or conversation of some kind, which was probably not to the point.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator from California will yield further, I will say that I am not a member of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. I did not have the privilege of hearing the original testimony, all of which, as I understand, was taken down. As I understand, the excerpts which appear on page 212 of the hearings available to Senators not privileged to sit on the Military Affairs Committee are taken from the first transcript of the original hearing; and I take it that the asterisks which appear in the print on page 212 represent deletions from the original testimony, as prepared for the consumption of Senators not on the committee and the public. I merely wished to say that I thought—I did not state it as a fact, but I thought perhaps the three little slips of paper might be represented by the asterisks which appear between the question asked by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] and Secretary Morgenthau's answer.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him for the purpose of explaining to the Senator from Wisconsin what the procedure has been, the Senator from Wisconsin is in error in assuming that all the testimony of witnesses was even taken down. Several different procedures were followed. Sometimes the testimony of all the witnesses would be taken down, and then the transcript would be submitted to the witnesses for such deletions as they might be pleased to make. In other cases the witness would say, "I think this whole discussion ought to be off the record." In that case the stenographer would not even take down what might have been very pertinent testimony. Sometimes, from the time the witness thought it was very important matter which ought not to have been taken down, we would wander off into a different field and an entire line of questions would be asked before it occurred to somebody to inquire whether or not the proceedings were on the record; and we would have to go back and recast it, and put on the record the testimony to which the particular witness at that time did not object. So, referring to the record, it is very difficult to know exactly what the record does represent, except that the last printed record contains nothing which did not actually take place. Much of what did take place is not in this record or any other record.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I understand that the Senator is protesting against the action taken by this Government in making disposition of planes to France. In connection therewith, regardless of the fact that he is protesting, I wish to state that the Minister of Air in France evidently approved the action. In substantiation of that statement I should like to read something to the Senator from California in which he will probably be interested. Here is a statement published in the New York Times of February 1, 1939, shortly after the airplane transaction in California. It is dated Paris, France, January 31:

Guy La Chambre, Air Minister, speaking to the Chamber today, assumed full responsibility for the purchase of airplanes in the United States. He won applause for President Roosevelt when he said, in answer to critics of the policy of buying aircraft abroad—

At that time the Air Minister was being criticized for making purchases of airplanes in this country. The article continues:

I cannot permit this deal in America to be attacked. Our contracts in America are meeting our entire satisfaction. And I take this opportunity of thanking the great American democracy and its leader, President Roosevelt, for the way they have shown that they are thinking of only one thing in this matter—how best to serve France.

The entire Chamber cheered the Air Minister's statement and there were cries of "Long live Roosevelt."

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Did the Senator read that correctly? Did it not say, "How best to serve America?"

Mr. REYNOLDS. How best to serve America?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; how best to serve France. There is another statement by the French air minister which I should like to read, as follows:

And I take this opportunity of thanking the great American democracy and its leader, President Roosevelt, who has realized that in serving France he is serving peace.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. NYE. I think, for the purpose of keeping the RECORD clear respecting the question the Senator from North Carolina raises, I should call his attention to the fact that day before yesterday, during the course of my remarks, I offered the same information. I then undertook to reveal the occasion for the changed language as between the two editions of the same issue of the newspaper, and inserted in the RECORD a letter from the editor of the New York Times, which clearly revealed that the change was occasioned by the fact that their correspondent in Paris had wired a correction of the original dispatch. I think the RECORD ought to be kept clear.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I had that in mind. I thank the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, if I may proceed, I should like to do so and conclude, if that be possible.

When we read this dispatch to Maj. K. B. Wolfe it is perfect folly to say there was no secrecy connected with this transaction. It is crippling to a man's intellect to discuss a suggestion of that kind. It was secret from the beginning to the end; there never was anything else; there never was sought to be anything else.

After Major Wolfe received his instructions, was told to keep the information confidential, to keep the Chief of the Air Corps informed as to the actions taken, and that he was to make all the negotiations in relation to the sale, we come to the time when the men got into the airplane. There was an American pilot and there was a poor Frenchman dressed in overalls who got into the plane. Nobody knew who he was. His name upon the records was Smithson. Off they took in the plane, then the plane crashed, and it was learned, only after he was at the hospital, that he was one of the French mission and that his name was not Smithson, but that he had been traveling in the plane under the name of Smithson. Then, talk to me about secrecy in this matter. Those handling the matter wanted to let the whole world know about it, of course, and that is the reason the Frenchman took the name Smithson. That is the reason he dressed in the fashion he did; that is the reason he kept himself anonymous; that is the reason Wolfe got his telegram of instructions in cipher, and that is the reason Wolfe, representing the American Government, was told to negotiate the sale. Oh, of course, the transaction was to be conducted in the most open manner so that everybody would know of it. Groups, no doubt, were down there on that Sunday looking at the French mission in their beautiful uniforms. A drum corps, doubtless, was in attendance as the French mission came marching along with the Marseillaise played behind them. Of course, everybody knew it. The fact remains, however, that nobody knew it; it was kept from the people of the United States. That is the sin of it; that is the wrong of it. As a Senator of the United States, I have a right to know what transpired there; the Senate has a right to know. We do not know and we cannot know, and they would not tell us a single thing about it. It was kept secret from the people of the United States.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. On the point he has been discussing, will the Senator permit me to read into the RECORD a portion of the testimony of Captain Kraus as to whether or not there were instructions as to secrecy being maintained?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not wish to take the Senator off his feet; I desire to be courteous to him; but could the Senator indicate the portions of the testimony he desires to note and have them read?

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator mean to have them read at the desk?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I will not insist on it. The Senator may go ahead.

Mr. MINTON. I wanted to point out what Captain Kraus, the Navy representative with the French mission in California, had to say about secrecy and whether or not anybody was instructed by anybody else to keep the matter secret. That question was asked Captain Kraus.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Very well; what did Captain Kraus say?

Mr. MINTON. In the record, on page 195, he says:

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any instructions regarding giving it out to the press?

Captain KRAUS. I would not under any condition have given it out to the press.

Senator NYE. Were there any requests for pledges to secrecy about the existence of this mission?

Captain KRAUS. It seemed to me that the mission, by its character and by its activities, would naturally not be displayed as a matter of general public knowledge, at least at the stage in which the project then stood.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Senator MINTON. That impression grew, not out of any instructions but out of your training as a military man?

Captain KRAUS. Well, out of the training as a military man and out of the general feeling that neither the Government nor businessmen do their business in a goldfish bowl.

Senator MINTON. But you had no instructions about secrecy?

Captain KRAUS. I am quite certain it was well understood. It was not any direct instruction, but I think it was quite well understood that the matter was to be kept secret.

Senator NYE. That it was to be kept secret?

Captain KRAUS. That it was to be kept secret.

Senator MINTON. But nobody gave you any such specific instruction?

Captain KRAUS. No; I had no specific instruction.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I thank the Senator from Indiana. I am very much obliged to him for reading the testimony. He has proved the case absolutely. When we take that testimony of Captain Kraus in connection with the telegram to Major Wolfe we cannot reach any other conclusion than that they were to keep the transaction secret. Major Wolfe was "to keep the information confidential and to keep the Chief of the Air Corps informed as to the actions taken." All these negotiations must be made through Major Wolfe. Talk to me of secrecy, secrecy, secrecy. Why, there it is bigger than life in what the Senator read, and here it is in black and white in the telegram that was sent to Major Wolfe.

So we run across the same thing all the time. Secrecy? Of course there was secrecy. It was not intended to let us know a single thing about it; and we would not have known anything at all about it if the plane had not crashed and the Frenchman had not been injured. It is impossible to get away from that. There is a circumstance that is bigger than anything else in this whole matter. The plane crashed. What was it people asked about it out there? The Frenchman was pulled out of the plane after the poor American was found dead and taken to the hospital, and it was asked, "Who is this?" Then, after wrangling a while, his name was obtained. Then the matter became public, but it would not have been public at all except for what happened and for the interposition thus of fate.

That is enough of that. I could speak for hours on this question and the testimony that has been adduced before the Military Affairs Committee, and I am just as clear as that I am of anything on earth that it can be shown that the whole transaction was shrouded in mystery and carried out in stealth, so that we would not know what was happening and would never know the difference until everything had been done. That is my great objection to it; that is the reason I have spoken concerning it and have indulged in animadversions in reference to it.

When the Senator from Indiana was calling my attention to the testimony of Captain Kraus I noticed somewhere along the line that the Secretary of the Treasury said he did not know anything about it. The Treasury Department knew nothing about it until Bill Bullitt first told them concerning it. Does the Senator remember that?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. If a plan that contemplated the sale of certain airplanes to France had been carried out, under the existing law would it not have been required before the exportation of the planes actually occurred that permission should have been obtained from some department for such exportation, and would not that have been a matter of public knowledge?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not know.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me there?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the Neutrality Act a license must be issued by the State Department, or by what is called the Munitions Control Board, before airplanes or any other war munitions may be exported; but such a license is not issued until it is made certain that the company in this country manufacturing the product desires to make the exportation. I understand that in this particular case it had not reached that stage, but, assuming that the contract would be entered into between the French Government and the Douglas Co., or any other American manufacturer, before there could be actually an export of the product, the Munitions Control Board in the State Department would have to give its consent and issue a license.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield at that point?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think both the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Kentucky are in error as to the requirements of the law. Assuming that a nation is not engaged in war, there is absolutely nothing whatever in the law at this time to prohibit the export of an airplane by a company in the United States to any foreign country unless the President has issued a proclamation under the Neutrality Act. That condition did not exist in this case. There has been a sort of gentleman's agreement between the manufacturers of airplanes and the manufacturers of some other munitions by which the permission of the State Department is necessary, but recently one airplane company chose to flout the instructions of the State Department and export planes to Japan. It was necessary for the State Department to go right on exercising moral suasion and not legal suasion on that company to induce it to cease exporting planes to Japan.

So there is nothing in the law, as the Senator from Florida suggested, to require the permission of the State Department or anybody else.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield at that point? I do not want to go astray, but subsection (d) of section 5 of the laws and regulations, and so forth, following the joint resolution, with respect to the exportation of arms, provides—

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is after a state of war has been found to exist.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think that is correct, because the State Department, through this Board, has been exercising the right to issue these licenses.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the Senator recall that one airplane company deliberately flouted the State Department for months by exporting planes to Japan within the past year?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that is true. It did so; but, according to the interpretation of many, it did so in violation of the laws and the regulations.

There is one provision here which I want to read:

It shall be unlawful for any person to export, or attempt to export, from the United States to any other state, any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this act, or to import, or attempt to import, to the United States from any other state, any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this act, without first having obtained a license therefor.

The act goes on in several other sections; and I have here the reports of the Board for 1936, 1937, and 1938, showing the extent to which licenses were issued for the exportation of war materials to other nations of the world.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have one of them, too.

Now, we will proceed, if we may. I desire to step aside for just a moment to speak of the Neutrality Act. I do not think the Senator from Kentucky was shaking his gory locks at me in relation to the Neutrality Act.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that if I had any gory locks—which I have not—I should not shake them at the Senator, because I am sure I should receive in return a more gory shake than that which I might deliver to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; no gore with me. I am peaceable.

Do you remember what the Neutrality Act was? Do you remember that it was hammered through the Congress of the United States by the administration? Do you remember that there were only five votes against the act when it came to a vote on the floor of the Senate, and that my vote was one of them? Do you remember that I told you at that time as best I could—I was unable to speak for any great length of time—that you were making yourselves an ally of Japan in the Pacific and an ally of Great Britain in the Atlantic? Do you recall that? That is your neutrality law. You passed it. You gentlemen who represent the administration passed it. It was passed over the votes of a very few very interested men who thought they understood the subject better than you of the majority.

But that is the Neutrality Act. I see now that all the administration, and everybody connected with it—all its "trigger men" outside this Chamber—are talking of the neutrality law, and what a terrible thing it is, and how awful it is in its restrictions against doing anything that ought to be done for suffering nations. They passed it. They shoved it through here during the time it was before this body.

Now, I want to hasten through. I said to you that this stuff that was being talked about bombing the towns of this country, and the great damage that would be done the cities of this country, was all moonshine. If I were to adopt the language of a greater man, and one whom we all respect, I should say it was "bunk," and I should repeat that it was "bunk," and repeat that it was "bunk," because every authority is alike in that regard.

Why, do you know what it would be necessary to do in order to make that sort of thing effective for us and to scare us? We are told, "Why, the great institutions of Europe will collect their bombing planes. They will cross the Atlantic Ocean down there from Africa to where they can land in South America. There they will fit out a base, and from that base they will begin operations against us up here."

Who will fit out a base? They will. What—in these "good neighbor" countries in South America, to whom we have been saying so much, and whom we have been coddling for many months? Will they set up a base? Why, if they attempted to set up a base down in any of those countries of South America, at once there would be revolution, and the South American country would run them into the sea, as a good neighbor should do. But they could not get their base started, and they could not begin to do anything in respect to it, without our Navy being there, and our Navy being on hand.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Excuse me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California does not yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask the Senator to talk to me after I am through. I am tired. I have yielded repeatedly. I am very glad to yield to all Senators; but I am getting weary, and I want to stop as soon as I can. Go on, though; ask the question. I dislike exceedingly to decline to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I promise the Senator that I certainly shall not interrupt him any more, in view of what he has just said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to ask the Senator if he has observed, on the part of all the South American countries, the apparent hostility which he just spoke of toward the totalitarian states of Europe.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Why, of course. We should not be their "good neighbor" if they had not had that hostility.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the recent Lima Conference indicate that?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, yes. That conference did great work.

Mr. PEPPER. No sympathy was exhibited at the Lima Conference by any South American country for any of the totalitarian states of Europe?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, no; there could not have been, or we would not have stayed there. We would not have stayed there 5 minutes if that had been so. [Laughter.]

I have been greatly interested in a little book by Stuart Chase. I do not agree, of course, with all that he said; but he paints his picture with such deft touches that he is very, very easy to read and very easy to understand.

He says:

We are free from the administrative difficulties of the British Empire, sprawled over the seven seas and threaded together by precarious "life lines." When Mussolini threatened the line to India in 1935, over the matter of oil sanctions, the British had to fight or back down. They backed down, I suppose, because the "rights of small nations," as exemplified by Ethiopia, were not worth the risk of cutting the life line in the Mediterranean. English statesmen have to look at least 10 ways at once. No wonder they get cross-eyed. Our only remote possession of importance is the Philippine Islands. They cost us more than we got out of them. We are wisely arranging to let them go.

Do you see what I am driving at?

Says this author.

It is bound up in that term United—the United States, the United Nations, of America. I am not boasting about how big we are—any tin-pot patriot can do that. I am trying to emphasize with all my strength the idea that our 48 States should not be compared with a single nation in Europe. Iowa cannot go to war with Nebraska. New York cannot raise a tariff wall against Connecticut. In Europe there are 28 sovereign states, some of them equipped to go to war at the drop of a hat, every one of them with a double-decked, streamlined, copper-riveted tariff wall around it. Everyone has a different money system; most have different languages; many have a full complement of armies, navies, generals, ambassadors, bombers, big berthas, tanks, torpedoes, and unpaid war debts. In the night you can hear the shish of paper, as solemn obligations and treaties are torn up.

Mr. Chase is very clever, I think, in his use of language, and he shows the difference in—I will use a word that I detest—ideologies. It ought never to be used. It ought not to be used in the sense in which it is used every day now, and it is utterly inappropriate; but everybody likes to use it, I presume because it has four syllables, so I will do so, too. The ideologies of Europe and ourselves are very different.

In The Ramparts We Watch, by George Fielding Elliot, there are some things concerning airplanes which we ought to know.

Is this force of 2,320 planes really sufficient for our needs? For dealing with raids, the answer must be yes. It will provide a striking force of about 1,000 planes, under a single command and capable of rapid concentration on either coast (for which additional bases must be made available); this can do all that can be done against raiding aircraft from ships, if supported in local defense by sufficient antiaircraft artillery. It can direct a powerful attack against any enemy air base which may be established in the territory of our neighbors, or our own, before the enemy base can begin to function.

The question of whether we shall within the foreseeable future be liable to air attack by direct flight across the oceans may be answered by a decided negative, as far as anything more than tip-and-run raids are concerned.

Then he goes into an analysis of that, which I will not read. Sufficient unto the day.

I have talked to the Senate longer than I had intended, and I beg the pardon of my colleagues for doing so. If I have been in the slightest degree discourteous to anyone, I beg his pardon for that; I have not intended to be. But this is a subject, after all, which is very near and very dear to our hearts.

Mr. President, I was here 21 years ago. I saw then men of stern judgment forced into a position they did not care to take. I saw then men who oftentimes had been in the forefront of fights—fights for human rights, for liberty; I saw them sadly and solemnly go the way they thought they ought not to go. That was 21 years ago. Today I showed a picture of the Committee on Military Affairs of the United States at that time to the present chairman of that committee. The only ones in that picture who are still in the Senate were himself and myself.

I am no longer a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, but 21 years ago it was that I used to listen from my seat over here—I have kept the same seat practically ever since—to a distinguished gentleman who then was United States Senator and has since passed away, who preached almost every day the Berlin-to-Baghdad axis, and who would show, absolutely and without the question of a doubt, how the Germans would go from Berlin to Baghdad and down into India, and how they would take India and then would take us—I could never quite understand why. So he preached to us. So he preached to us day in and day out concerning that terrible calamity.

We have now the same sort of calamity preached to us, are told that if we do not do something and do something enormous they will treat us in just the same fashion, by coming across all this water with their airships and bombing every city we have.

I cannot imagine that that will be so. I am ready to do whatever may be necessary to insure that it shall not be so. But do not let yourselves be run off your feet by that sort of propaganda. Do not permit yourselves in this day to be taken from those things which you love and those things you desire and driven into a position you will regret in years to come having taken. Remember, remember, those of us of the older day who were driven into a fight during 1917 and 1918, and we wish it had never occurred and had never been forced upon us. We wish we had never had to do that. I say to those now here: Do not be led off by this insidious propaganda. It is abroad in every miserable newspaper which owes its allegiance to the administration. Do not be led away from your own judgment, your own conscience, and the right of the matter.

Here is a question which you can solve as well as anyone else. In this book from which I have just read that question is solved, and solved well. I cannot read you all the excerpts from it this day, but you may have it for the asking, and you may be able to come to a conclusion for yourselves which will better satisfy your consciences than if you are run into a position you do not want to be driven to concerning any future war.

Some here do not know what war is; some do. War is a terrible thing. War is an awful thing. War is something with which you do not want anything to do, unless it is necessary. Stand up, do your duty here, give what may be necessary to the United States Government with which it may be able to insure you in the future, and until this crisis is past. Stand up, and do not let yourselves be frightened into war.

Oh, it would mean for you not only war abroad; it would mean for you at home what you do not want and do not like, but which you will have. It will mean for you dictatorship as surely as that we stand here; and we must avoid that, we must prevent it, we want to fight against it, and, if necessary, we want to die to prevent it.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GLASS submitted the following report:

The committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$557,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 17 and 18.

CARTER GLASS,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
RICHARD B. RUSSELL,
ALVA B. ADAMS,
JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
C. A. WOODRUM,
JED JOHNSON,
JAMES M. FITZPATRICK,
JOHN M. HOUSTON,
JOE STARNES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, there is still disagreement as to one important item in the bill. I move that the Senate agree to the report I have presented, ask for a further conference with the House on the amendments still in disagreement, and that the same conferees be appointed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will not the Senator explain to the Senate the nature of the amendment or amendments still in disagreement?

Mr. GLASS. The amendment which has been agreed to is the Gilbertsville Dam and Watts bar dam amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that, but what is the one in disagreement?

Mr. GLASS. The one important amendment in disagreement is the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] relating to reenlistment allowances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon amendments numbered 17 and 18, and ask for a further conference thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. GLASS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE "YANKEE CLIPPER"—FLAGSHIP OF THE AIR

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to speak briefly about an event of great public interest which will take place in this city tomorrow. I think the ceremony should not pass without a word being said with reference to it in the regular proceedings of the Senate.

Congress and our Nation have for many months now been faced with issues concerning the vital defense of our Nation, rumors of wars and near wars, and of conflict and troubled times throughout the world. There are other forces than these—forces of peace and civilized progress—which should merit our full consideration as well.

Tomorrow, here in the Nation's Capital, a symbol of one of these great forces for peace—a great aircraft produced by our industry for the peaceful pursuit of our commerce across the world seas—is to be dedicated to the Nation's service. Linked so fittingly with the glory we once enjoyed in world commerce in the days of the sailing clippers this, the outstanding product of our aviation industry to date, is to be named the Yankee Clipper, in tribute to this heritage. The Yankee Clipper and her new sister ships now building will bring prestige and glory to our Nation on the great ocean trade routes of the world.

I am advised by the Civil Aeronautics Authority that this great aircraft is the largest ever developed in America, and the largest, from point of size of any aircraft, either military or commercial, any nation has yet produced. It has just completed a remarkable flight from Seattle, Wash., where it was designed and constructed, to our eastern seaboard. Tomorrow, here on the Potomac, it is to be christened by the First Lady of the Land, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in the name of the American people, the new flagship of our merchant marine of the air. Shortly thereafter, I am advised, it will lead the establishment of an American air service across the Atlantic linking this Nation, by closer and peaceful bonds, to the Old World.

Certainly this great product of American genius and courageous pioneering is a symbol of the will of the American people for peaceful pursuit of commerce and a sharing of such benefits with the people of our neighboring nations. It reflects at the same time the superior ability of our aircraft engineers to design, of our pioneers of air transport to operate a service which no other nation is as yet prepared to duplicate. In the not distant future this date, and the dedication of this aerial flagship of our merchant marine of the air may well stand out as the beginning of a new era of greater commerce, of closer friendship between our country and those beyond the seas.

I am further advised that my colleagues in the Senate, as well as the Members of the House of Representatives, have been invited to witness the dedication of this new flagship to the public service and to inspect at first hand this outstanding product of our aeronautical genius.

I therefore suggest, Mr. President, that the leader of the majority, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] find it possible to have the Senate adjourn early tomorrow afternoon, if that is not incompatible with the work of the Senate, so that Senators who so desire may be present at the dedication of the Yankee Clipper.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to what the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has stated as to the plane which is to be christened tomorrow afternoon by the First Lady of the Land. I had the opportunity to view that plane when I was on the Pacific coast sometime ago. In that connection, I was interested to know that in 1492, when Columbus sailed from the shores of the Old World upon the waters of the blue Atlantic to the beautiful shores of America, the journey took 72 days. The planes which is to be christened tomorrow will be able to span the Atlantic in less than 16 hours, I believe. I was told by those who were interested in the construction of the plane that the plane itself is even larger than the ship which Columbus used when he came over in 1492.

In view of the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to the plane which is to be christened here, and in further view of the fact that the debate of the last several days has centered largely around airplanes, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an extremely illuminating and unusually interesting article in the form of an editorial which on February 13 last was published in the editorial column of the Washington Daily Times-Herald. It seems to be a reprint from an editorial which was published in the New York News, entitled "The Influence of the Wright Brothers on History."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it appears in the Appendix.

THE FLAXSEED SITUATION IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, there are certain strategic and critical materials which have a relation to our national security. In January 1939 the Army and Navy Munitions Board supplemented its previous report issued only last November, concerning flaxseed as being 1 of the 20 critical materials. "Critical materials," it is explained, are those essential to the national defense. If flaxseed is a "critical material" because it can be produced domestically, when we are importing three-quarters of our requirements, when we are displacing American acres with the produce of alien acres, when we are sending American dollars abroad for deficiency farm produce which, when grown here will tend to replace some of our surplus farm products, what possible reason is there to delay in correcting this unnecessary and intolerable situation? The American farmer wants the American market, and here is an American market that needs, and badly needs, an American farmer to supply it.

Mr. President, I have here other material and data concerning the growth and domestic production of flax in the United States. It is 1 of the 20 essential war materials named by the Munitions Board. I ask unanimous consent that my statement on the subject of the flaxseed situation in the United States be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks. I have no desire to read the statement to the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

THE FLAXSEED SITUATION IN THE UNITED STATES

In all the hustle and bustle of the administration to help the farmers, it has consistently been inconsistent about its stand in regard to flaxseed and the production of drying oils in this country. There is so much concern over surpluses and how to dispose of them that there seems to be little time to look at the reverse side of the picture and point out to the American farmer the advantages of growing a deficiency crop on land which, according to the regulations of the A. A. A., the farmer must take out of surpluses' crop acreage. Notable in the list of deficiency crops in the United States is flaxseed. Since 1912 this country has failed to produce a sufficient amount of flaxseed for the needs of the consumers. Lack of support of this very essential crop on the part of the A. A. A.—in fact, actual restriction of the growth of flaxseed by Government regulation—has resulted in a steady decline in the acreage sown to flax in the United States, until from a high harvested acreage of 4,389,000 in 1930 the extent of the harvested acreage in 1938 was only 954,000. Under the present regulations of the A. A. A., flaxseed is considered a soil-depleting crop and its acreage must be restricted along with acreages of other grains, practically all of which produce surpluses in this country.

FLAX MAY BE USED AS A ROTATION CROP

The term "soil depleting" crop is used because it is classified with wheat and barley. The idea that flax is hard on the soil is an erroneous opinion which originated when wilt was prevalent. A resistant variety to wilt has now been bred and solved the problem. Flax may be used as a rotation crop. The usual procedure is to plant flax, a legume such as clover, and then a season of corn. Two seasons of flax may be planted, but the only difficulty is that there are many weeds which crop up. Flax takes out about the same fertilization element from the soil as wheat and barley.

LINSEED OIL PRINCIPAL PRODUCT OF FLAXSEED

Looked at in another way, we find that the principal product of flaxseed, namely, linseed oil, is the most important of the drying oils used in the United States. To quote from the United States Department of Agriculture's Report F. O. S. 15 of May 17, 1938, on the facts and oils situation:

"Consumption of fats and oils in the drying industry (paints and varnishes, linoleum, oil cloth, and printing ink) has increased steadily from a post-war low of 475,000,000 pounds in 1932 to 834,000,000 pounds in 1937 concurrently with increased building activity."

In 1937, of the 834,000,000 pounds of drying oils used, linseed oil represented 571,000,000 pounds, or 69 percent. Of the 571,000,000 pounds of linseed oil consumed in 1937, less than 150,000,000 pounds were produced from domestically grown flaxseed.

DRYING OILS

What are these so-called drying oils and how are they to be distinguished from other oils and fats consumed in the United States? The term "drying oils" is applied to all oils used in the manufacture of paints, varnish, linoleum, printers' ink, and other types of protective coating for surfaces, in which oils are used. The quality which distinguishes drying oils from other types of fats is the ability to dry or oxidize when exposed to the air. The speed, completeness, and efficiency with which an oil will dry depends upon a number of factors, but principally upon the amount of unsaturated fatty acids which that particular oil contains. The unsaturated fatty acids, in other words, those subject to oxidation, are largely linoleic and linolenic acids. Of all the oils in the drying oil field, linseed oil contains the largest quantity of these unsaturated fatty acids in the most favorable combination. China-wood oil is probably next on the scale of the drying oils, with perilla oil running it a close second. Soyabean oil, refined fish oils, hempseed oil, and sesame oil are substitutes for linseed oil and China-wood oil, and are known as semidrying oils since their ability to dry when exposed to air is considerably less than that of linseed oil or China-wood oil.

TUNG OIL OR CHINA-WOOD OIL

Following along on this subject of drying oils in the United States, I wish to point out that the next most important oil to linseed oil is tung oil, or China-wood oil, of which approximately 155,000,000 pounds were consumed in 1937. If we take tung oil and linseed oil together, we find that they account for over 86 percent of the entire consumption in this field. Now, allow me to point out that at the moment the amount of China-wood oil available has been drastically reduced. Only 4,000,000 pounds of tung oil, or China-wood oil, are at present being produced from domestic groves of trees; the balance all comes from China. Formerly the principal outlet of this oil was the Yangtze River, and the principal collection point for the oil was Hankow. As Hankow has now fallen into the hands of the Japanese and as the Chinese who hold the principal producing areas of China-wood oil are unwilling to ship their oil into Hankow, a practical blockade of exportation from this source has taken place. A small amount of oil is coming out from Hong Kong, but the amount is only negligible.

WE MUST NOT BE DEPENDENT ON FOREIGN SOURCES

How replace in this country the drastic curtailment which is now occurring in China-wood oil? It is generally agreed that the principal substitute for China-wood oil in paints and varnishes is linseed oil; hence we find ourselves still more dependent on the principal product of flaxseed—namely, linseed oil. And yet during the year of 1937 not over 25 percent of our linseed oil was produced from domestically grown flaxseed. To put it another way, this country is about 70 percent dependent on two principal foreign sources of supplies for drying oils which form the protective coating of most surfaces. The two countries are China, which is now in the hands of Japan, and for this reason will be unable to supply the needs of the China-wood oil trade in this country; and (2) the Argentine, which is at present supplying the bulk of the flaxseed crushed in the United States.

FLAXSEED PART OF OUR NATIONAL-DEFENSE PROGRAM

From the point of view of our national-defense problem, we consider that the United States is in a most vulnerable position, being dependent on the Argentine and China for the bulk of its supply of drying oils. On the other hand, we have in this country a fine opportunity to grow flaxseed and from the flaxseed to produce linseed oil sufficient for our needs in the drying-oil field. Should we be as slow and lax in our preparedness in the drying-oil field as we have been in that of military training? A number of years of intensive research has proved conclusively to the authorities in the Department of Agriculture as well as to experts in the National Paint, Varnish and Lacquer Association and to other authorities investigating this subject that the most practical source of drying oil domestically produced is from flaxseed.

FARM COMMUNITIES WILL PROSPER WITH PROPER ROTATION

It seems to me that we have our own farm communities to consider, and if we can insure our farmers raising a good cash crop such as flaxseed, why should we hold back for the Argentine, Japan, or China?

You will then ask whether there are any obstacles to growing flaxseed at present in the United States. The interesting part of the situation is that not only the Department of Agriculture and the National Paint, Varnish and Lacquer Association find flaxseed the most practical crop from which to derive our drying oils but also a number of State agricultural colleges (and the number is increasing all the time) are recommending flaxseed as a logical crop rotation. The fact is that great States like California, Washington, Oregon, and Texas are just beginning to awaken to the advantage of planting flaxseed and you are beginning to see a great enthusiasm coming in those States. However, the amount of acreage which they may plant is going to be definitely limited under the A. A. A. restrictions.

IMPORTATION OF FLAXSEED NOT GOOD BUSINESS

In 1937, while we struggled with crop surpluses, we imported 1,569,778,280 pounds of flaxseed. With 56 pounds per bushel and an average of 8 bushels per acre, these imports for American industry represented the output of three and a half million acres. The American market is looking for the American farmer to produce its requirements. Of late years we have given much thought to the problem of surpluses, the reduction of acreage, and to the development of the American market for the American farmer. We have spent millions of dollars to attain these ends, with questionable results; and we have neglected one phase of agriculture that promises, with but a small expenditure, to contribute materially to the solution of this difficult problem. We have neglected a crop for which there is a ready cash market, which is a vital need of American industry, which is one of our critical military requirements, and from which there is never a surplus but, on the contrary, a progressively increasing shortage supplied only by heavy importations from overseas.

FLAX IS A DEFICIENCY CROP

There is so much concern over surpluses, and how to dispose of them, that we have not taken time to look at the reverse side of the picture and point out to the American farmer that flax is a deficiency crop, badly needed by American industry, and that we import, not because we wish to but because we must, the equivalent of millions of acres; and that, on the one hand, the American farmer is attempting to preserve the American market, while, on the other hand, the American market is looking for the American farmer to supply its needs.

WHY NOT CONSIDER A LITTLE REAL HELP FOR OUR AMERICAN FARMERS

The principal product of flax is linseed oil, made from flaxseed; and linseed oil is the most important drying oil used in the United States. The interests of the farmer alone are sufficient to justify this appropriation, but the results to be expected from the program will affect not only the farm but the factory and the man on the street. Because of our dependence on foreign countries for drying oils, this matter is one of grave national concern. It has given us no anxiety in the past merely because we have taken drying oils for granted. We have always had them, and we assume that we always will. That may be a serious error. Let us face the facts and attempt to appraise them.

WHY IMPORT 75 PERCENT OF OUR FLAXSEED

The principal drying oils are linseed oil, China-wood oil or tung oil, and perilla oil. All three are necessary, but linseed oil is by far the most important from the standpoint of the American farmer, American industry, and the American public. We have had to import about 75 percent of our flaxseed. Every pound of perilla is imported, and we produce only a negligible portion of our China-wood oil in a comparatively restricted area in the Gulf States.

MAGAZINES, NEWSPAPERS, AND BOOKS REQUIRE DRYING OILS

Our daily newspapers and magazines, our books and reports of our legislative proceedings require drying oils. That small industry required over 20,000,000 pounds of linseed oil and four and one-half million pounds of perilla and China-wood oil in 1937. A small industry indeed, but no one can do more than speculate on the importance of printers' ink in our modern civilization.

Oilcloths and linoleum depend for their very existence on drying oils. The word "linoleum" itself is formed from "linum" (flax) and "oleum" (oil). That industry consumed nearly 70,000,000 pounds of linseed oil in 1937, and some 15,000,000 pounds of other drying oils.

PAINT AND VARNISH INDUSTRY IMPORTANT

The paint and varnish industry consumed over 267,000,000 pounds of linseed oil in 1937. That industry cannot exist without its drying oils and that is only a part of the sorry picture of our dependence on foreign supplies of material that can be and should be grown by the American farmer. Every industry that uses protective or decorative coatings depends in turn on the paint and varnish industry for such materials. There is no satisfactory method of computing the value of the billions of dollars worth of property owned by the public, which is dependent on paint to resist the ravages of the elements.

FLAXSEED 1 OF 20 CRITICAL WAR MATERIALS

In January 1939 the Army and Navy Munitions Board supplemented its previous report issued only last November, entitled "Strategic and Critical Materials—Their Relation to Our National Security. Flaxseed appears in a list of 20 critical materials.

FLAXSEED ESSENTIAL TO NATIONAL DEFENSE

Critical materials, it is explained, are those essential to the national defense. If flaxseed is a critical material because it can be produced domestically, when we are importing three-quarters of our requirements, when we are displacing American acres with the produce of alien acres, when we are sending American dollars abroad for a deficiency farm produce that when grown here will tend to replace some of our surplus farm products, what possible reason is there to delay in correcting this unnecessary and intolerable situation? The American farmer wants the American market, and here is an American market that needs, and badly needs, an American farmer to supply it.

HIGH RETURN ON FLAX

The returns to the farmer are to be considered. In the first place, he is not fighting a surplus. With this country producing about a quarter of the flaxseed required, and importing all its requirements of other drying oils, the surplus problem does not exist. We wish to point out that at the present time, flaxseed is selling at Minneapolis and Duluth at $1.96 per bushel, whereas wheat (No. 1 Dark Northern) totaled 79½ cents per bushel. Last year's average yield per acre for flaxseed amounted to 8.6 bushels, and for wheat, 12 bushels. The farmers, therefore, who got an average yield of flaxseed last year received a considerably better cash price for flax than for wheat.

HISTORY OF FLAX GROWING IN AMERICA

Although flax is grown mainly in the Northwest, it should be remembered that it has been grown in America since Colonial times. In 1853, Ohio and Kentucky were the leading flaxseed producing States. Later, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin led in flax production, and this was followed by production in Minnesota, Iowa, and South Dakota. Now California, Washington, Oregon, and Texas are beginning to awaken to the value of the flaxseed crop.

SENATE FILE 846 PROVIDES $100,000 FOR FLAXSEED INVESTIGATIONS

Senate File 846 would provide an appropriation of $100,000 for seed-flax investigations in Minnesota, North Dakota, Iowa, Kansas, California, Washington, Oregon, and Texas. These investigations would include plant breeding, crop rotation, suitable areas, wider use of linseed meal, plant physiology, chemistry, and biology of oil formation, industrial utilization of flax straw, linseed-meal proteins and carbohydrates, and the possible place of linseed oil in human nutrition.

A SOUND FLAXSEED PROGRAM

We do spend money for flaxseed investigations. The Bureau of Plant Industry was allowed $16,500, out of which the University of Minnesota is receiving at this moment an allotment of $300 to carry on this important work. Senate bill 846 calls for a national expenditure of $100,000 for a program that is calculated to make this country self-sufficient in the production of critical material to assist the American farmer to supply the requirements of American industry and the American public, and in the shortest possible time to employ millions more of American acres and to some extent reduce the disastrous effects of our farm surpluses.

NEW VARIETIES OF FLAXSEED

It will be well at this point to go over a list of those who at the moment are striving to produce new varieties of flax of commercial value and capable of competing successfully with the Argentine linseed, which for a number of years has had a higher oil content and a better quality of oil than our domestically produced seed from present varieties grown in the United States.

EXPERIMENTAL WORK CONTINUES

A. C. Dillman, in charge of seed-flax investigation for the Bureau of Plant Industry, has for a great many years carried on experimental work at numerous experiment stations scattered over the United States. Some of these data-collecting activities have been carried on through funds supplied out of the Bureau and some have been financed by funds out of the colleges and institutions.

SELECTION OF FLAXSEED

J. C. Brinsmade, Jr., at the Northern Great Plains Field Station, United States Department of Agriculture, Mandan, N. Dak. He is breeding and selecting for added wilt and rust resistance and a better drying quality of oil. His developments so far include flaxes brought to the eighth and ninth generation and are selections from Buda crosses. At least 25 of these are ready for test plotting and are within a few years of introduction.

IMMUNITY TO RUST

H. H. Flor, North Dakota Agricultural Experiment Station, Fargo, N. Dak., is making selections from seventh and eighth generation plants derived from Bison, Buda, Rio, and other resistant varieties aiming at an immunity to rust and added resistance to wilt. These selections are about a year farther away from introduction than Brinsmade's.

TEST PLOTS WITH STANDARD CHECKS

A. C. Arny, agricultural experiment station, University of Minnesota Farm School, St. Paul, Minn., is selecting seventh and eighth generation plants derived from Bison, Redwing, Ottawa 770B, Abyssinian, etc., that are already in test plots with standard checks. Some 25 of these selections, all of high wilt and rust resistance, high yield per acre, and better quantity and quality of oil than Bison flax, are only about 2 years from introduction.

R. L. Waldron, Agricultural Experiment Station, Fargo, N. Dak., is studying the inheritance of resistance to wilt and rust in breeding, and thereby is developing some 50 cross-breeds that are almost ready for test plot and therefore 3 or 4 years from introduction.

L. G. Goar, University Farm, Davis, Calif., is developing hybrids that will be suited to California climate and yet be disease resistant. These hybrids are still many years from introduction.

MANY NEW VARIETIES OF FLAX

As is indicated by this list many new varieties of flax are just around the corner. It is much more expensive to develop and introduce varieties than to do the original breeding. If all the desirable varieties being developed are to be introduced and distributed, the Department of Agriculture will need much more money than they have ever needed in the past.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES HELPFUL

One other man, T. H. Hopper, North Dakota Agricultural College, chemist, has cooperated extensively with Mr. Dillman. These two men have collected data on many phases of flax culture. The material covers about 300 crop-years and most of it is ready for compiling, editing, and publishing. This work is of utmost importance to everyone connected with the flax-breeding program, but will take the combined efforts of these two men to complete. There is grave danger that one or both of these men may be shifted to other work before another year is out. If this should become a fact most, if not all, of the material and work would be wasted. The expense connected with this project is probably beyond the means of the Bureau of Plant Industry unless they receive added funds.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE CONDUCTING IMPORTANT WORK

In order to take care of this seed-flax investigation work the Bureau of Plant Industry in the Department of Agriculture has only been allowed $16,500 annually. Out of this fund the work at the University of Minnesota, for example, is receiving at the moment the magnificent allotment of $300 with which to carry on this important work. It is becoming increasingly evident that we must have special varieties of flaxseed adapted to special soils and climates if we are to get the best results and if we are to compete successfully with seed grown in Argentina, which is our principal source of import supply. In view of the fact that so many of these Federal and State officials are so near to the completion of their varietal work on flaxseed, it seems highly important at the moment that the work they are doing should be financially backed and encouraged. It is for this reason that on January 19 last I introduced S. 846, making an appropriation of $100,000 for these flaxseed investigations.

HARD ON THE LAND FLAX GONE

To those who will object to the encouragement of the flaxseed crop in the United States, I would point out first of all that the old objection that flax was hard on the land has been definitely disproved by recent experiments and researches performed by State and Federal officials. The table given below shows the removal of plant nutrients on the basis of average yields per acre of flax, wheat, and oats in North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Minnesota:

Crop	Average yield per acre	Fertility removed
		Nitrogen	Phosphoric acid	Potash
	Bushels	Pounds	Pounds	Pounds
Flax.....	7.7	34.7	9.6	21.5
Spring wheat.....	11.9	30.1	10.9	35.3
Oats.....	27.8	30.4	12.9	38.1

FLAXSEED SELLING AT MINNEAPOLIS AND DULUTH AT $1.96

The second point brought up by objectors to the planting of a larger acreage of flax has been the fact that the returns have not been satisfactory. We wish to point out that at the present time flaxseed is selling at Minneapolis and Duluth at $1.96 per bushel, whereas wheat (No. 1 Dark Northern) totaled 79½ cents per bushel. Both of these quotations were made as of January 26, 1939. Last year's average yield per acre for flaxseed amounted to 8.6 bushels and for wheat 12 bushels. It only takes a little arithmetic to figure out that the farmer who got an average yield of flaxseed last year would receive a considerably better cash price for flax than for his wheat. There is no doubt but that flax was the banner cash crop of the country last year. With ordinary weather conditions, the same situation might well prevail during the present year.

AMERICAN FARMERS FIRST

As far as the objections to an increase in the domestic acreage of flaxseed are concerned with our relations with Argentina, it strikes me most forcibly that the needs of our own farmers throughout the United States should have a prior consideration. The Government has chosen drastically to reduce acreages of surplus crops, and here is one deficiency crop which might very well be substituted at a great gain to the farmers and no loss to this country. What is principally needed, however, to develop larger flax acreages in areas which are well suited to flax is a good variety for each particular section. These new varieties cannot be achieved without the expenditure of funds to bring the work now in progress to completion in the various schools and Federal Department of Agriculture proving grounds.

In order that this country may be self-sufficient and well prepared and in order that it may take advantage of the logical development of a deficiency crop to replace surplus farm crops, I would urge you most strongly to give consideration to this appropriation for the production of new flax varieties.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, in the debate day before yesterday I had occasion to use the following language, which can be found recorded at page 2003 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

I am more and more convinced that there will be no war in Europe this spring, this year, or next year, unless the United States encourages, urges, and eggs Europe on to it. There will be no war in Europe unless the United States shows a definite will to help out when war comes, and an inclination to finance it. There will surely be a war in Europe when the United States gives the word "go" and gives Europe reason to anticipate that the United States will be standing by and ready to go on when the hour comes.

The able junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lucas] yesterday commented upon the seriousness of such a statement, and requested information from anyone, from any source, as to just how the United States of America or the present administration is going to give the word "go."

I was quite necessarily absent from the floor of the Senate late yesterday afternoon when the Senator from Illinois in what reads as one of the most able addresses recently recorded, again challenged me to bring forward evidence that there is in this country a man, or a group of men, or a sinister influence that so controls the destinies of nations as to be able to dictate war.

Mr. President, Congress may have power to declare war, but a far greater power to invite war lies in the making and in the shaping of America's foreign policy. About that I shall have more to say a little later.

I am most sorry and unhappy if the remark made by me which I have just quoted may be considered a blot upon the integrity and the national honor of my country. I know, too, that by reason of this utterance of mine the question has been raised as to my wisdom and the motive which may be mine. Both wisdom and motive are challenged.

My remark of yesterday is called all manner of things. It seems to some minds or to a mind to be "palaver," "irresponsible," "careless," "flippant," "childish," "loose," "prejudiced," "alarming," and "unsubstantial."

Again there is challenge for foundation for any such charge as was involved in that utterance of mine which I have quoted. It is also maintained that there is a very definite trend of public sentiment which is giving approval to what some are alleging to be our direction in an international way today. There are those who would like to have us believe that there is thorough approval of the sale of planes to France, of the sale of planes to any other nation upon this earth, without the consent of the War Department. There are those also who insist that the direction being pursued today by the national administration is one wholly devoid of any tendency which might ease this country into war.

In that connection I call attention to a poll recently conducted dealing with these two very specific questions. The poll is conducted by the Capitol Daily, a publication here in Washington, given to a day-to-day account of progress of legislation. This journal undertook one of its several polls upon the two questions which I have just raised, the first question being, "Are we being eased into war?" the second question being, "Should the President promote sale of military aircraft without approval?"

It may be of interest to the Senate to know how this particular poll by the Capitol Daily is conducted. I have here a few cards returned by those who were asked to participate in the poll. Solicitation to participate goes to every newspaper publisher, every known daily newspaper published in the United States, and approximately 10,000 country editors, weekly publishers, triweekly publishers, magazine publishers, are asked to participate in this poll.

With that explanation I think the Senate would find to be very interesting information as to the last totals recorded as a result of that poll. Out of a total of 1,633 votes recorded in the manner indicated by the cards which I have, 1,060 say "Yes" to the question, "Are we being eased into war?" In answer to that same question 594 say, "No."

Three hundred and twenty-three of those polled in answer to the question, "Should President promote sale of military aircraft without approval?" answered "Yes" and 1,305, on the other hand, responded "No," representing a vote of approximately 4 to 1 in the one instance and 2 to 1 in the other.

There is no doubt in my mind as to the fear which the people as a whole are entertaining in these days concerning the direction which the administration is pursuing in its conduct of foreign affairs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed at this point in the RECORD the tabulation which I have before me, which shows the vote. I have concerned myself only with the totals recorded for all the States in the Union.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Without objection, the tabulation may be printed in the RECORD.

The tabulation is as follows:

Congress of Editors, 10,000 editors of country newspapers "voted" on 2 questions. Almost 2,000, including every State, are now tabulated.

	Total	Are we being eased into war?		Should President promote sale of military aircraft without approval?

Miscellaneous	101	71	30	15	86
Total	1,633	1,060	594	323	1,305

These totals, tabulated for each State, are complete with the exception of a few hundred straggling returns from voting editors all over the country. These untabulated returns, bringing the total vote to approximately 2,000, are running in similar percentages to those votes shown above, varying only a fraction of a percent.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, is there no foundation at all for my statement of day before yesterday which has more recently been challenged in the Senate? Was my statement wholly irresponsible, only so much palaver, a very careless utterance on my part? Was it flippant? Was it childish? Was it loose? Was it prejudicial? Was it uttered for the purpose of making myself an alarmist? Can it be said that my statement is unsubstantiated, as has been charged?

If that be true, then I wish to say that many, oh, so many, Americans are likewise childish, likewise flippant, likewise irresponsible, careless, loose, and prejudicial. During the past few weeks our newspapers have been filled, at times to overflowing, with the expression given by men and women to their thought of what the direction being pursued by the United States might lead to. I have before me an expression by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, who says:

To the precise extent that we stick out our necks to support France and England is there less chance for some peaceful and reasonable settlement of the European mess. France would undoubtedly continue to resist any "appeasement" and continue to hold on to all her World War plunder if it took the last dollar in the United States Treasury—and she could get it.

Surely we want to protect democracy. But it would be a swell idea to know precisely what the threat to democracy is and just what measures short of war are necessary to protect it. If there are ranking injustices growing out of Versailles that could be righted, if there are legitimate—or at least understandable—national hopes and needs that could be taken care of, it would be a lot better to consider them peacefully than to get into another war over them.

In another column, which seemed to revolve around the question, Who makes our foreign policy? General Johnson gave splendid expression to a thought that is prevalent in many American minds. I ask unanimous consent that the article may be printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ONE MAN'S OPINION

(By Hugh S. Johnson)

NEW YORK CITY.—What the hell's going on here anyway? It is too early to try to weigh the astonishing hourly news developments, but that question is first in the mind of every able person who has talked to me.

Neville Chamberlain's speech before a British jewelers' trade association started off like a Babbitt pep talk to a Sauk Center rotary club and wound up suggesting English military support to what he at least hinted is President Roosevelt's policy to oppose the dictators with force. Depending on point of view, this is a great cleverness or sheer cheek. England and France are clearly on the spot so far as the "hit or miss" dictatorships are concerned; and we are, at the worst, on the sidelines. Mr. Chamberlain makes it appear that it is we who are in the ring socking, with England and France graciously holding the waterbucket in our corner? Where did he get that idea?

What about this secret monkey business of military assistance to France over the protest of our General Staff? It is clear also that Ambassador Bill Bullitt didn't come home from Paris just for a rest. Bill will bear watching. There are rumors that, in the State Department, so far as the White House is concerned, he has more influence than the conservative Secretary Hull. Like Mr. Louis Johnson, in the War Department, he is a member of the Corcoran-Cohen janissariat. Like Mr. Johnson, also, he seems to think and to have reason to think that he is destined to head his department in a further Cabinet purge of all except red or pinkish extremists. With no knowledge of Mr. Hull, he is supposed to have influenced the President's remarkable Chicago outburst about "quarantining" the dictator nations—a trial balloon which exploded. During the World War he got in very bad because of supposed support of the Russian Bolsheviks whose revolution cracked up the Allies and brought us into the World War.

Why is he dictating military policy? How about Mr. Morgenthau's Treasury Department overruling the General Staff on military aid to France? To what extent is the secret and mysterious $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund being used to support busted French credit in this matter? By some slick trick, are we again beginning to finance a European alliance—this time in violation of the spirit if not the letter of both the Johnson Act and the Neutrality Act? What could be so "profoundly confidential" in General Craig's testimony about all this that the public cannot be trusted with even a paraphrase of it?

I have known General Craig since boyhood. Of one thing I am sure. He couldn't be forced to shade the truth. He is absolutely fearless. No amount of political or official pressure could make him say what he does not think. Some of these decisions are reported to have been made at a White House conference where Mr. Bullitt and Mr. Louis Johnson were present and General Craig wasn't.

To every question asked here, there may be a perfectly good answer. They are not based on official statements but only upon gossip, rumor, or conjecture leading out from "executive" sessions of the congressional committees. But why does the air have to be so murky, that such conjectures seem so well justified on the basis of the few known facts? This is war that we are talking about—and our possible part in it. It might be a war that would leave the world in anarchy. Without the mandate of our people based on the knowledge of the facts, nobody has any right to put us in a position where we can't avoid it.

Once in a war, there are military secrets about troop movements and strategic plans that it is treason to reveal. Before a war there are similar secrets about equipment. But there is no justification for secret diplomacy that may suddenly confront a nation with a war against its will.

Mr. NYE. Only last night or this morning there came another evidence. I suppose some will call it childish, careless, prejudicial, alarming, and unsubstantiated. The article to which I refer contends precisely as I contend, that the greatest danger of war coming to Europe this year or next year lies with the United States of America. The article to which I refer is that of Mr. Mark Sullivan. I ask unanimous consent that the article may be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks, in order that it may be shown that I have company, that I am not alone in the opinion that our policy has become a very reckless one.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROOSEVELT "DRAMATICS" STIR FEARS—LATEST MANIFESTATION DEPLORED HERE AND ABROAD
(By Mark Sullivan)

As President Roosevelt returns to Washington on Saturday, there is a rule of conduct that he could impose upon himself and which, if he imposes it, might add to the general peace of mind.

While Mr. Roosevelt was on his way to his vacation, when he was at Key West, Fla., February 18, he said, as he described in one of many news dispatches, "that he might return sooner than he expected because of continued reports of a disturbing nature from abroad * * *. Through his demeanor as well as by his remarks, the President displayed an obvious concern over the possibility of a new international crisis."

That report, coming when Mr. Roosevelt was only 2 days on his way and had not yet reached his destination, made a sensation, naturally. It was telegraphed back to Washington. There, newsmen hurriedly made inquiry of the State Department. The State Department had no knowledge of any alarming developments in Europe. Newsmen turned to Senator BORAH, who is well informed on foreign relations. Senator BORAH had no knowledge, either.

MR. ROOSEVELT FOND OF BEING DRAMATIC

The report about the President was cabled to Europe. Newspapers in London printed big headlines saying President Roosevelt had "ominous reports" about conditions in Europe. Europe did not know what the reports could be but the European public was disturbed. Newsmen queried European statesmen. They had no more knowledge of any new developments than our own State Department had. At London it was stated that authorities were "completely in the dark" regarding what President Roosevelt meant. At Paris, authorities were described as saying they had "no idea what information President Roosevelt" could have received. Berlin had no knowledge of anything ominous. Rome had no knowledge.

So far as could be discovered, nobody had any knowledge. Still, Mr. Roosevelt may have known something. A caustic explanation, as put in words by one European observer, was that Mr. Roosevelt is fond of being dramatic.

And Mr. Roosevelt does like to be dramatic. His arrival in Washington next Saturday, after a 2 weeks' absence, offers opportunity for doing something dramatic. We shall expect something dramatic—but hope we will be disappointed. If Mr. Roosevelt just can't help being dramatic, let's hope he finds something other than foreign relations to be dramatic about. One more blast at our domestic "economic Tories," for example, wouldn't hurt them any more than they have already been hurt and would not make the rest of us jittery about war.

CALLED STIRRER-UP OF FOREIGN JITTERS

Some Europeans have come to think of Mr. Roosevelt as being, in spite of good intentions, a stirrer-up of international jitters. A distinguished English journalist said the other day, "We in England believe that the incipient war fires can be quenched. But you in America are making our task difficult. Your public men, with the mistaken idea of helping us, are always hurling insults at the dictatorship countries and always talking about the inevitable war between the democracies and the dictatorships. That keeps the dictators irritated, and when they are irritated they don't think. So your Government is not helping us; it is only making war more probable."

And a correspondent of the Saturday Evening Post, writing from Switzerland, reports: "I have made one discovery that probably will shock Americans. A surprising number of Europeans * * * are more apprehensive today about the foreign policy of one particular country than of any other. That country is our own United States. * * * They have become fearful that the United States may precipitate that general war in Europe which Europeans have paid so dearly to prevent."

This deploring of American actions and utterances reflects one view that Europeans hold about Europe's present difficulties. It may be a mistaken view. There are many who think America's attitude has a salutary effect on the dictatorships. But the other view is tenable, and it is held by serious persons.

SILENCE AND CALM WANTED FROM UNITED STATES

This view holds that what Europe is doing just now is something they have done again and again over the centuries. They are rectifying some boundaries and possessions that have become maladjusted through disproportionate growth of population and other causes. The process, as always, includes much threatening and blustering and bluffing and sword rattling and face making, and also face saving. Some European statesmen think they can manage it without actual war. What these most want from America is silence and calm.

For Mr. Roosevelt the role of silence is not easy. As Mr. Arthur Krock puts it in the New York Times: "Restiveness is of the essence of this administration from the President down. * * * Probably never in Mr. Roosevelt's time will there be quiet along the Potomac."

In the present European situation restraint by American exponents of opinion, including especially the President, can do no harm and might help. If Mr. Roosevelt has any restraint left over after using what he needs for himself, he might donate some to Secretary of the Interior Ickes.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, if I were to spend from now until the end of the current year in undertaking to substantiate the position I took and to which I gave expression day before yesterday, I could not possibly hope to do as good a job as has been done in the Saturday Evening Post by a writer by the name of Demaree Bess, under the title "Uncle Sam Scares Europe." The issue of the Saturday Evening Post to which I refer is that of February 25 of this year. The article is well illustrated by a lone cartoon. I wish I might be able to lay a copy on every desk in the Senate. The cartoon shows the personifications of Germany, Italy, Britain, and France gathered around a table loaded with poker chips. Standing behind Mr. Chamberlain the cartoon depicts poor Uncle Sam, all interest in the game before him, his nose reaching into the game itself. The article would not need a title. A pretty good knowledge of what the article was about would be possible if only the picture were to be its title.

Mr. President, is there no foundation for my statement that the question of war and peace in Europe is in America's hands at this time? Is there nothing to substantiate it?

Was it only a reckless, careless, meaningless expression? I shall have to read from the article by Mr. Demaree Bess; but lest there be those who doubt the background of Mr. Bess, his purpose and his integrity, let me say that he was born and educated in the Middle West. For a number of years he was the far eastern correspondent of the United Press, serving in China and Japan. In 1930 he became a member of the staff of the Christian Science Monitor and served that journal in Japan until he was assigned to service for the same publication in Moscow, where he served from 1932 to 1937. After that he wrote a book which made his return to Moscow not to be desired. Since that time he has been serving the Christian Science Monitor as a so-called roving correspondent, with headquarters primarily in Geneva, Switzerland.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There is just one trouble with Mr. Bess' qualifications, and that is that he was born in the Middle West. Therefore he has a provincial mind and cannot understand these great international questions.

Mr. NYE. Appreciating as I do the fine line the Senator has drawn, I am sure I can well appreciate the point he makes.

In this article Mr. Demaree Bess goes so directly home that not even the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lucas] can misunderstand. I read:

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND.

In the months which have passed since the so-called peace of Munich, I have been traveling over a considerable part of Europe, studying the effects of the Munich settlement upon several European countries. In the course of these travels I have made one discovery which probably will shock most Americans. I have found that a surprising number of Europeans, little people and big people, in little countries and big countries, are more apprehensive today about the foreign policy of one particular country than of any other. That country is not, as you might suspect, Hitler's Germany. It is our own United States.

That may sound like a bad joke to Americans, but it is no joke to these Europeans. There is one thing that the majority of Europeans want more than anything else at the present moment, and that thing is peace. They don't believe, since the Munich settlement, that their peace is immediately threatened from Germany or from any other European country. But they have become fearful that the United States may precipitate that general war in Europe which Europeans have paid so dearly to prevent.

I suppose that statement, left standing by itself without any substantiation, would be called flippant, careless, and prejudicial, the statement of an alarmist. So I read on:

Nonsense? Well, maybe. But if you go around now in different countries in Europe and talk to different kinds of people, you will find that many Europeans have some such thoughts as I have described. They may be wrong, but that is what they are thinking.

Their arguments go like this: For the first time in several generations, Europe, today, has a chance to compose its quarrels. Great Britain has been compelled, not so much by the strength of Germany as by the weakening of her own empire, to abdicate her traditional role as the arbiter of Europe. She has been forced to abandon her effort to dominate Europe by a policy of "divide and rule," by throwing her weight always on the weaker side to prevent any country from becoming predominant on the European Continent. She has finally agreed that one country—Germany—may be allowed to dominate Europe, and England has embarked upon a new policy of coming to terms with Europe's new master.
